

THE LIBRARY OF
THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
LOS ANGELES

THE WORKS OF JOHN WHITGIFT, D.D.,
ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

The Parker Society.

Instituted A.D. M.DCCC.XII.

For the Publication of the Works of the Fathers and Early Writers of the Reformed English Church.

THE WORKS OF JOHN WHITGIFT, D.D.,

MASTER OF TRINITY COLLEGE, DEAN OF LINCOLN, &c.
AFTERWARDS SUCCESSIVELY
BISHOP OF WORCESTER AND ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY.

THE SECOND PORTION, CONTAINING THE DEFENCE OF THE ANSWER TO THE ADMONITION, AGAINST THE REPLY OF THOMAS CARTWRIGHT: TRACTATES VII—X.

EDITED FOR The Parker Society,

BY THE REV. JOHN AYRE, M.A.
OF GONVILLE AND CAIUS COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, MINISTER OF ST JOHN'S CHAPEL, HAMPSTEAD.

CAMBRIDGE: PRINTED AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

M.DCCC.LII.

BX
5035 P22p
v. 48

CONTENTS.

| | PAGE |
|---|------|
| ADVERTISEMENT | vii |
| Tract. vii. Of the Apparel of Ministers | 1 |
| — viii. Of Archbishops, Metropolitans, Bishops, Archdeacons, &c. | 77 |
| — ix. Of the Communion-Book..... | 438 |
| — x. Of Holy-days | 565 |

Repl. of missing v. 48, acc. 178165, English Dept, MERKILL

ADVERTISEMENT.

THE present Volume contains a further portion of archbishop Whitgift's Defence of the Answer to the Admonition.

This Defence will be completed in the third and concluding volume, in which will also be comprised some other productions from the archbishop's pen.

J. A.

April, 1853.

ADDENDA ET CORRIGENDA.

- Vol. I. p. 35, marg. for 2 Chron. xxxix. read xxix.
- p. 115, marg. for facing, read defacing.
- p. 147, note 2, line 1, for from the first of the subsequent editions of the Admonition, read of the subsequent editions of the Admonition from the first.
- p. 175, marg. insert 6 after Matt. vii.
- p. 332, note 2. The crime of Birchet is probably referred to, who held that it was lawful to kill an enemy of the gospel. He therefore resolved to stab Christopher Hatton, the privy-councillor, but, mistaking his man, wounded the naval officer, Hawkins, afterwards so distinguished, Oct. 1573. See Strype, Parker, Book iv. chap. xxxiv.
- p. 346, notes, line 7, for 346, read 347.
- p. 351, marg. insert after argument a.
- Vol. II. p. 495, note 2, for note 3, read note 4.

¶ Of the Apparel of Ministers.

Tract. VII.

The causes why they refuse the apparel examined.

Chapter i. The First Division.

T. C. Page 52, Sect. 3.

The cap, the surplice, and tippet, are not the greatest matters we strive for, which notwithstanding hath been informed to the churches beyond sea, to the end that the judgments of some might be the easilier had against us. Howbeit we think it an attire unmeet for a minister of the gospel to wear; and the surplice especially more than the other two; because such hurtful ceremonies are so much more dangerous, as they do approach nearer the service or worship of God.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Yet in the beginning such was your pretence; neither was there anything else that you contended for; as it is well known to all men that had to deal with you, or heard of you. I am certainly persuaded that, if the churches beyond sea did fully understand your proceeding, together with the state of this church of England, that they would as bitterly write against you, and as willingly condemn you, as ever they did the anabaptists. But to your reasons against the apparel.

Chapter i. The Second Division.

T. C. Page 52, Sect. 4.

The causes why we are loth to meddle with them are not, as many are borne in hand, because that we think any pollution so to stick to the things themselves, as that the wearing of them had any such power to pollute and make unclean the users of them; neither yet only because the papists have superstitiously used them; but because they, having been abominably abused by them, have no use nor profit in those things or ends wherein and whereunto they are now used: and further, that they are also hurtful, being monuments of idolatry, whereas to bring them in, and establish them, it behoveth that there should some manifest profit of them appear. For it is not enough to say, it is indifferent in the own nature; ergo, meet to be done; but, as the circumstances of the times and persons, and profit or hurt of our brethren, do require or not require, so must it be done or not be done. For, in these things which are called indifferent, God will have the use of them to be measured, that it be referred first to his glory, then to the profit of others.

This assertion is contrary to your practice.

Monuments of idolatry may be used if they have any profit.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is true that is commonly said, that such as be in error neither long agree with other, neither yet with themselves. Some of you have taught that "pollution doth stick in the things themselves, as that the wearing of them had power to pollute and make unclean the wearers:" and a number be carried away with that doctrine; else why do they refuse to come to our churches, our sermons, yea, to keep us company, or to salute us? why spit they in our faces, revile us in the streets, and shew such like villany unto us, and that only because of our apparel? Is not all this a manifest declaration, that they think us therewith to be so "polluted," that whatsoever we speak or do is "polluted," in like manner, even the word of God and his sacraments? And where have they learned this, but of you, and others your partners? Likewise, what was the chief ground of this opinion? how did you move the people to this extremity? and what have they yet to speak in the defence of their excessive raging? Forsooth that this gear came from the pope, was invented by antichrist, and therefore abominable, and not to be used. This only reason they have; and this is the common-place that you have hitherto bet upon. But now, being convinced by manifest reasons, and seeing the manifold absurdities that waiteth upon such assertions, you pass over the matter as though you had never been stained with it, and say, "the causes why" you "are loth to meddle with them are not, as many are borne in hand, &c." So that in effect this is now by you confessed, that those "things which the papists have superstitiously used, yea, which they have abominably abused, if they have any use or profit in those things or ends wherein and whereunto they are now used, be lawful, and not to be refused." And therefore we must, I think, have no more to do with this argument: "The pope invented them; ergo, they are not to be used;" but this must be the question, "whether they have any use or profit in those things or ends wherein or whereunto they are now used." And this shift is invented to take away all objections which may be of churches, of bells, of pulpits, and such like.

The apparel not refused because the papists use it.

But let us proceed to the reasons. You have not yet proved that "they have no use, or that they profit not in those things and ends wherein and whereunto they are now used;" and therefore I will take that for no reason as yet: although I have sufficiently answered unto it, where I have spoken of ceremonies¹, and in this treatise also that followeth Tract. II. of this matter.

You say further, that "they are also hurtful, being monuments of idolatry, &c." Whereby you acknowledge that, notwithstanding they be monuments of idolatry, yet may they be brought in and established, "if some manifest profit of them appear:" so that this also is granted, that "monuments of idolatry may be brought in and established," upon this condition, if they be profitable.

That which followeth in this portion of your Reply touching "things indifferent" I consent unto, with this proviso, that it is not every man's part in the church to judge and determine what the circumstance of the times and persons maketh profitable or hurtful (for then should we never be quiet), but theirs only to whom the government of the church is committed; to the which proviso if you do consent, we are in this matter thus far agreed.

Chapter i. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 52, Sect. 4, 5.

Now, that they are not profitable and hurtful, it also may appear, if we consider them by all the kinds of men in the realm.

The papists are either stubborn or weak, and in respect of both these they cannot be but hurtful. The weak I call those that have made some step from popery to the gospel, and of whom there is good hope that they may be fully gotten to the gospel; but these are harmed by the use of these vestiments, for they take occasion of falling at them, because they think that the sacraments get reverence by them, and the ministry is commended by such apparel-wearing, and think that the sacraments want something of that they should have, if they be not used: whereupon are heard² oftentimes these voices, I will not communicate unless he wear a surplice. But this offence and occasion of falling is confirmed by the use of these garments; therefore, in respect of such men, they are hurtful.

JO. WHITGIFT.

All this is spoken without proof, and it is very untrue that the "weak papist is hurt" in any respect by wearing this apparel: they take such garments as things pertaining to comeliness and order, and so ought they to do. Neither did

¹ See Vol. I. pages 175, &c.]

² Hard, Def. A., and B.]

I ever in my life hear that these garments hindered one jot any from coming to the gospel. But admit all this were true (as it is most untrue), why should it not as well by doctrine and teaching be removed, as other superstitious opinions be in these things which you can be content still to remain?

These voices, "I will not communicate unless he wear a surplice," may sometimes come upon just cause, when the good subject seeth the minister, which ought to be an example of obedience, stubbornly and wilfully shew example to the contrary; and sometime it may come of waywardness, when men be disposed to contend. But surely I do not think that any man which is persuaded to communicate with us in the sacraments can think, that they be either the better or the worse for the external habit of the minister. They be dissuaded from far greater matters than that; and therefore it is not to be thought that they will stick in such trifles. But admit it were so, is it not as great an error to think that the sacraments be polluted with the apparel, as it is to think that they want something which they should have, if the apparel be lacking? Yes, truly; and therefore, to take away both the errors, I think it most convenient the apparel be used, and these errors by doctrine to be confuted.

Chapter i. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 52, Sect. 6.

A silly cause.

Again, although I have knowledge, and know that the wearing of a surplice is lawful for me, yet another which hath not knowledge is by my example edified or strengthened to wear a surplice, whereof he can tell no ground why he should wear it, and so sinneth against his conscience: and for this cause St Paul concludeth, that that which a man may do in respect of himself may not be done, and is not lawful to be done, in respect of other.

1 Cor. viii.
10, 13.¹

JO. WHITGIFT.

The weak are not offended, but they which account themselves most strong.

If to wear "a surplice" were an offence to the weak, or if there were not manifest grounds in scripture (such I mean as command obedience to superiors) to prove "the wearing of the surplice to be lawful," then were it something that you say. But, seeing such only be offended therewith as account themselves most strong, and condemn other of infirmity; seeing also that obedience to magistrates in such indifferent things hath manifest grounds in scripture, and to doubt of obedience in such matters is in effect to pluck the magistrate his sword out of his hand; this reason hath not so much as any similitude of probability in it. Is there any minister of the church (for of such only is the surplice required) that will rather be moved "to wear a surplice" by the example of another, than by the consideration of his duty towards the law and order of the church, by due authority in a lawful and indifferent thing appointed? You might make the same reason serve to pluck down the church, the pulpit, the bells, yea, to overthrow all orders, and all laws in things indifferent, which all have the same ground of obedience that the surplice hath.

[¹ This marginal reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

In the confession of the Dutch church in London, which is allowed by the church of Geneva, and divers other reformed churches (whereof I have made mention before), it is thus written of things indifferent: "Things otherwise indifferent of themselves after a sort change their nature, when by some commandment they are either commanded or forbidden; because neither they can be omitted contrary to the commandment, if they be once commanded, neither done contrary to the prohibition, if they be prohibited; as it appeareth in the ceremonial law²." So that the ground why a man should wear the surplice (being an indifferent thing, as you confess it to be) cannot be unknown to any but such as know not the ground of their obedience towards authority.

It is true that in some things indifferent a man must have respect to the weakness of his brother, and abstain from doing that which he might lawfully do, rather than to offend his brother. But that is in such indifferent things as be not by any law commanded or forbidden, but left free to every man to do or not to do: as, if "to wear the surplice" were by no law commanded, but left to every man's own disposition, then surely, if there were any weak offended with the wearing of it, I ought to abstain for the weak his sake; but, being by lawful authority commanded to wear it, if I should refuse so to do, I should offend against the magistrate, and against

Things indifferent change their nature being commanded or forbidden.

Confess.
Eccles.
Belgio-German.

In what kind of indifferent things we ought to have a respect of the weak.

[² Lib. Th. Bezae Epist. Theolog. Genev. 1575. Ad Peregrin. in Angl. Fratr. Epist. xxiv. Ad Artt. v. vi. vii. viii. 6. pp. 142, 3. See Vol. I. page 209, note 5.]

Rom. xiii.

God, who by his apostle hath given this commandment: Omnia anima potestatibus &c.: "Let every soul be subject to the higher power, &c.;" which is to be understood in all things that are not against God. And therefore, if any man be offended with me in so doing, the offence is taken, it is not given.

Chapter i. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 52, Sect. ult.

Again, for the stubborn papists, they take hereupon occasion to speak evil of and to blaspheme the truth of the gospel, saying that our religion cannot stand by itself, unless it lean upon the staff of their ceremonies, and persuade themselves that those were very well devised by their popes, that they that are their enemies to their religion cannot be without. And hereupon they take occasion to hope that their other trumpery and baggage will in the end come in again; which causeth them to be more frozen in their wickedness, and shut their ears unto¹ the truth, which possibly they would hear, if all hope of bringing in of their popery were cut off.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is but a mere fancy: for, first, it was brought into the church before their popes, whom they hold upon, invaded that seat; as it is afterwards declared. Secondly, they be not matters that they make any great account of. Thirdly, they know full well that we could be without them; and that we (but only for obedience's sake) do not much esteem of them. Wherefore this is an argument framed only upon light conjectures. But be it all this were true, shall we, for their fancy or fond judgment, refuse to do that which is lawful, which we may do, and which we are bound to do? Or, in making orders for the church, must we inquire what their opinion will be? Then pluck down churches, &c.; for of them they make a greater reckoning than they do of the surplice, or any other such like matter. I think verily that there is not one papist in England that doth take occasion upon any thing retained in this church "to hope that their other trumpery and baggage will in the end come in again;" neither is there any cause in respect of them why they should so hope; and, if they do, yet I doubt not but that they shall hop without that hope. But a man may imagine, if he will, that there is a man in the moon, with a tree on his back, &c.; and you cannot let him.

[¹ Against, Repl. 2.]

Chapter i. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 53, Lin. 5.

And let it be observed, that throughout the realm there are none that make such clamours, and outcries, and complaints for these ceremonies, as they, and those that they suborn. They pretend, I confess, the queen's majesty's injunctions, and obedience unto them; but who is so blind as seeth not that they have another meaning? For I appeal unto the consciences of all that know them, whether they do it for any obedience towards her majesty, whose death should be a thousand times better news unto them than her grace's marriage.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The more is the pity that they should have such just cause of "clamouring," and that those which should teach them obedience to God and their prince be examples to the contrary. A subtle and crafty papist will be glad of any cause of quarrelling: the more circumspect therefore ought the minister to be, in taking heed lest he give just cause of the same. But there be honest, godly, and zealous men also, that cannot abide such disorder and contempt, whom peradventure you would gladly stain with the note of papistry, as your manner is; and for my part I think it to be the part of all dutiful subjects to keep laws and orders appointed, and to see other keep them also, if they be thereunto called.

The clamours of papists should move the ministers to more circumspection.

Surely he that is a papist indeed cannot wish well "to her majesty;" but, if he communicate with us in the sacraments, hear the word preached, and come to our churches, I will think and hope the best of him. But, if he refuse so to do (as there be divers such), so long as he so continueth, I must count him an enemy to religion, to the church, and to the prince, be he papist, anabaptist, or whatsoever. For he that in heart and in deed misliketh the religion, cannot like well of such as maintain the same.

Chap. i. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 53, Sect. 1.

There are also numbers of those which have all antichristianity in such detestation, that they cannot abide the least scrap of it, and, when they see the ministers wear them, they are grieved in their hearts, and they begin somewhat to fear, lest this communicating with the papists in apparel should make some way to those which use them the easier to admit other things, when they should be likewise commanded. And these brethren's minds are not to be lightly grieved; and the ministers, if they think to profit them, must cut away all occasion whereby they may have an evil opinion of them.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The purity which can abide no imperfection is devilish.
Calvin. adv.
Anabap.

M. Calvin, in his book against the anabaptists, after he had spoken something against the puritans and Donatists, hath this saying worthy to be noted: "Here, therefore, we may be admonished that, when, as under the pretence of the study of perfection, we can tolerate no imperfection, either in the body or in the members of the church, that then the devil doth make us swell with pride, and doth seduce us by hypocrisy, that he might provoke us to forsake the flock of Christ; knowing assuredly that he doth obtain the victory when he draweth us from the same. For, seeing either remission of sins or health is in no other place, although we outwardly bear the countenance of an angelical conversation, yet, if we do with such boldness separate ourselves from the christian fellowship, we are become devils¹." If this be to be feared in such as shew this preposterous zeal against that which is blameworthy; what shall we think of those that, under the pretence of zeal, deface the minister and the word that he preacheth for doing that which is lawful, and the which of duty he ought to do? If the minister should apply himself to please the people, and such especially of whom you seem to speak in this place, his greatest study had need to be how to transform himself daily into a new shape. But most certain it is that you study too much to please the people ; and that is the occasion of so many novelties, whereby they are most commonly delighted. Est natura hominis novitatis avida.

[¹ Hinc ergo moneamur, quum sub specie studii perfectionis imperfectionem nullam tolerare possumus aut in corpore aut in membris ecclesiæ, tunc diabolum nos tumefacere superbia et hypocrisi seducere, ut ad deserendum Christi gregem nos instiget: certo sciens se victoriam obtinere, quum nos inde abduxit. Quum enim nusquam alibi sit aut remissio peccatorum, aut salus, tametsi vitæ plusquam angelicæ speciem præ nobis feramus, tamen si tali audacia nos separemus a christiano cœtu, simus diaboli.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Instr. adv. Anabapt. Art. ii. Tom. VIII. p. 363.]

Chapter i. The Eighth Division.

T. C. Page 53, Sect. 2.

Seeing that therefore this kind of ceremonies in apparel harden the hearts of the papists, and cause them to be the stiffer in their popery, hinder the weak from profiting in the knowledge of the gospel, grieve the minds of the godly, are occasion of an evil opinion unto them of their ministers, we think that these ceremonies are to be removed, as not only not profitable (which they ought to be), but hurtful, if not to the ministers themselves that use them, yet to their people to whom they are commanded by God to have regard unto, in these things that are indifferent in their own natures. Now I will come to that which you set down.

JO. WHITGIFT.

“Seeing that” not one word of that is true, and, if it were, yet the error and false persuasion of the mind rather to be reformed, than relented unto, I see no cause why this kind of apparel (being commanded) ought not to be used, except you will leave to every man liberty to do what him list, or suffer the fancies of some to rule prince, council, bishops, church and all.

¶ That Ministers were known in times past by distinct apparel.

Chapter ii. The First Division.

Admonition.

The eleventh :

¹1 Sam. ix. 20.²
Matt. xxvi. 48.
Matt. xxv.
73.

In those days known ^aby voice, learning, and doctrine : now they must be discerned from other by popish and antichristian apparel, as cap, gown, tippet, &c.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 53, Sect. ult., and
Page 54, Sect. 1, 2.

To prove that in those days ministers were known by voice, learning, and doctrine, you cite the ninth of ^{Vain and childish allegations.³}

[² 1 Sam. ix. 18. Adm.]

[³ This marginal note is not in Answ. 2.]

the first of Samuel, and the xxvi. of Matthew. In all that ninth chapter of Samuel there is not one word that maketh for this purpose, except you mean this, that, when Saul asked of Samuel where the seer's house was, Samuel answered again that he was the seer. If this be to be "known by voice, learning, and doctrine," the ignorantest minister that is may soon be known by his voice, learning, and doctrine; for, if you ask him, Where is such a man? he can answer you, I am he. In the xxvi. of Matthew, the first place, ver. 48, is this: "Now he that betrayed him had given them a token, saying, Whosoever I shall kiss, that is he: lay hold on him." The multitude that came with Judas knew Christ by Judas kissing of him; therefore in those days ministers were "known by voice, learning, and doctrine." The second place in that chapter alleged, ver. 73, is this: "They that stood by said unto Peter, Surely thou art also one of them; for even thy speech bewrayeth thee." Peter was suspected by his speech to be a Galilean, and therefore one of Christ's apostles; ergo, a minister was then "known by voice, learning, and doctrine." You may as well of that place gather thus: Peter preached not Christ then, but denied him; ergo, a minister must be known by denying of Christ. Lord God, what dare not these men allege for their purpose!

An argument
retorted¹ upon the adversary.

I know that the chief tokens whereby a minister ought to be known is doctrine and learning; but you childishly abuse the scripture, and play with the same.

A minister may be known by his apparel.

"Now," you say, "ministers must be discerned from other by popish and antichristian apparel, as cap, gown, tippet, &c." Do you think that, because a minister ought to be known by his voice, learning, and doctrine, therefore he may not be also known by his apparel? John the Baptist had peculiar apparel, and was known by it: Christ had distinct apparel from other; for his coat had never a seam.

[ Calvin upon the xxiii. of Matthew proveth out of the xiii. chap. of Zachary, that the prophets were distinguished and known from other men by a certain and peculiar form of cloaks; and addeth, that it is not without reason that doctors should in gravity and modesty of apparel differ from the common sort. ² Apparel of ministers distinct.

[¹ Arguments retorted, Answ. 2.]

T. C. Page 53, Sect. 3, 4.

The places alleged by the Admonition, with others which may be cited, howsoever you deride them, are notwithstanding probable conjectures that neither Samuel, nor the apostles, nor our Saviour Christ, did wear any* distinct apparel from others which lived in their times. For, if Samuel being then the seer had had a several apparel, which was proper to the seers, it is not like that Saul would have asked of himself where his house was. And, if the apostles had worn a several apparel from the rest, they should not have been esteemed by so general and uncertain a note, as of speaking somewhat broadly, or, as I may term it, northerly; for it had been a surer note to have said, Thou art one of his apostles, because none wearth this apparel but his apostles; where there was a great number that spake Galilean-like, which were not of his apostles, nor disciples neither. But let these go. You say our Saviour Christ had a several apparel; because he had a coat without seam. Assuredly you might use less scornfulness in rehearsing of other men's arguments, if for no other cause, yet for this, that they might take more pity of yours.

For what an argument is this! Our Saviour Christ did wear an undergarment, which could not be well parted, but with the spoil or marring of it; therefore he wore a several apparel from the rest. It is true, John Baptist had a several apparel; and, to help you, so had Elias, but to this end that, both by his unwonted apparel, and strange diet which he used of locusts and wild honey, the extraordinariness⁴ of his ministry might be set forth, and the people the rather moved to inquire of his office, whom they saw to vary so much from the common custom of other men. But ministers now have no such extraordinary functions; therefore, by that reason of yours, they should not be severed from other men by any note of apparel. You say you know that the chief notes of a minister are doctrine and learning: if you mean that the distinction of apparel must supply the rest, and that that also hath some force to commend their ministry, the prophets and apostles of our Saviour Christ left us no perfect pattern of a minister, nor no sufficient glass to dress him by; whereof the most part never used any such several apparel, and none of them have left any commandment of it.

* They were quoted by the Admonition to prove that ministers were known by voice, learning, and doctrine; and you transfer them to apparel.

A notable reason.

Untrue; as shall appear.

JO. WHITGIFT.

They be "conjectures" indeed, and mere "conjectures," but without all shadow of probability or reason; and, if you will give me leave so to "conjecture," I will prove any thing.

The unapt reasons of the Admonitors dissembled by T. C.

[² This paragraph is inserted from Answ. 2. See below, page 12.]

[³ These references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Extraordinaries, edit. ; but, in the table of errata to Repl. 1, a notice is given to read extraordinariness.]

Apparel of ministers
distinct.

But such slender “conjectures” argueth the slenderness of your proofs. The Admonition useth those places to prove that ministers were then “known by voice, learning, and doctrine;” which how they or you can conclude of them, I confess that I cannot imagine, except you will say, that Samuel said unto Saul, “I am the seer;” and they that stood by said unto Peter, “Even thy speech bewrayeth thee;” therefore, “ministers were known by voice, learning, and doctrine:” which is as much as though you would say, Saul knew Samuel by Samuel’s own report; and a Welchman is known by his tongue; ergo, “ministers are known by voice, learning, and doctrine.” Is not this a proper kind of reasoning? is this the reverence due to the scriptures, thus babishly to abuse them?

But say you, “if Samuel had had a several apparel proper to the seers, it was not like that Saul would have asked of him where his house was:” nay, you should rather have said, that it is like that Saul, being a rudesby, and brought up only in keeping of cattle, had never seen prophet before, and therefore could not know Samuel, what kind of apparel soever he had worn. And that this is true, that Saul did not know what a seer meant, and that he did never see any before, it may appear in the same chapter. And therefore saith M. Martyr upon that 18. verse of the ix. chapter: “Saul is so rude in the commonwealth, and such a stranger from civil affairs, that he did not so much as know Samuel, although he were both judge of the people, and the magistrate, and prophet, and the captain of the host¹.”

P. Martyr.

Prophets known by a distinct apparel.
Calvin.

Moreover, M. Calvin, upon the xxiii. of Matthew, proveth out of the xiii. chapter of Zachary, that the prophets were distinguished and known from other men by a certain and peculiar form of cloaks². And the very words of the text in the fourth verse of that chapter of Zachary doth evidently prove it; for there the Lord saith, “In that day shall the prophets be ashamed, &c.; neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive." Upon the which words the note in the bible printed at Geneva is this: "They shall no more wear prophet's apparel, to make their doctrine seem more holy³;" to the which also agreeth M. Calvin upon the same place, and addeth these words: "This is the sum, that this kind of vesture was not reprov'd in the false prophets; as some men unadvisedly do wrest this place to condemn long gowns, and whatsoever doth not please their waywardness, &c."⁴ Whereby it is evident, that the prophets did wear and were known by a peculiar kind of garment. If you inquire of the practice, we have divers examples; yea, even of Samuel, whom we now have in hand. For one thing, that persuaded Saul that he whom the witch had raised was Samuel, was the description of his apparel, 1 Sam. xxviii.: "There cometh up an old man with a mantle upon him; and Saul perceived that it was Samuel, &c." It cannot be thought that Saul conceived this opinion because she named an old man, but because she added his mantle and kind of attire. We read likewise of Elias, 2 Reg. i. and ii., that he had a hairy or rough mantle, agreeing to the description in the prophet Zachary, and a leather girdle, whereby he was known of Ahazia; and this is by you confessed. Elizeus succeedeth Elias both in office and vesture; and John Baptist did not only represent Elias his spirit, but also his kind of garment; for his rough garment of camel's hair, and leather girdle, are described by St Matthew, chap. iii. I suppose now that the manifest scripture, the opinion of learned interpreters, and the practice of so many notable prophets, do sufficiently justify my assertion, and are able to improve your "probable conjectures," as you term them.

Zech. xlii.

[¹ Ita rudis est Saul in republica, et alienus ab omni luce civili, ut ne Samuelem quidem agnoscat, quamvis ille fuerit et judex populi, et magistratus, et propheta, et imperator militaris.—P. Martyr. Comm. in duos Libr. Samuel. Tigur. 1575. 1 Sam. cap. ix. fol. 54. 2.]

[² Sed ex Zacharia apparet, prophetas certa pallii forma a reliquis fuisse distinctos. Nec vero ratione caruit doctores ita vestiri, ut in eorum habitu plus gravitatis et modestiæ quam in vulgari extaret.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Harm. Euang. Matt. xxiii. Tom. VI. p. 257.]

Apparel of ministers
distinct.

1 Sam. xxviii.

Touching Peter, what kind of apparel soever he did wear, the matter is not great; it is the fond reason of theirs that I reprove, which is too too childish, as I have shewed before: and yet may it be supposed that Peter used all the means he could not to be known; and therefore, whether he cast off his uppermost garment, or changed it, it may be a question.

[³ The Bible transl. according to the Ebrew and Greeke, Lond. 1578. Zech. chap. xiii. fol. 375.]

[⁴ Hæc summa est, non reprehendi in pseudoprophetis vestem ipsam, quem admodum quidam parum considerate arripiunt hunc locum, ut damnent et vestes oblongas, et quicquid displicet eorum morositati, &c.—Calvin. Op. Prælect. xxx. in Zach. cap. xiii. Tom. V. p. 552.]

Apparel of ministers
distinct.

Furthermore, it was in the night-time: finally, he was suspected by a maid to be one of Christ's disciples before he had spoken one word; as it appeareth, John xviii. But, to let all this pass, what kind of reasoning call you this? Peter was known by his voice; ergo, he was not known by his apparel: or this? Peter was known by his tongue to be a Galilean; ergo, "ministers must be known by voice, learning, and doctrine?"

The Admo-nition wanteth a proctor.

Here you let slip, without any defence at all, that which is alleged by the Admonition out of the 48. verse of the xxvi. chapter of Matthew to the same purpose.

No man can deny but Christ's apparel differed from the rest, and that this was a rare kind of habit; else would not the evangelist St John, chap. xix., have made so particular mention of it: wherefore that which I say is true, that even then ministers of the gospel might be known by their apparel, as Christ and John the Baptist; and therefore not to be so strange a matter, that ministers should also now differ from other men in their apparel.

That which you speak of John Baptist confirmeth my saying, which is, that ministers of the gospel were then also known by their apparel; and, if "unwonted apparel did set forth" John his "ministry, and moved them the rather to inquire of his office," why may it not have the same use now in like manner? But I have used those examples only to shew the vanity of the Admonition, which would make the reader believe that in those days there was no distinction used in apparel.

Loose conclusions of
T. C.

"Christ and his apostles have left a perfect pattern of a minister," touching conditions, qualities, and office; so hath the scripture done of a magistrate, and of a subject also, of a master, and of a servant, &c.: but shall there be therefore no distinction in apparel betwixt them, or no external notes to discern them by? What kind of argument call you this, "Christ and his apostles have left us a perfect pattern of the minister's office;" ergo, the magistrate may not take any order for his apparel? Truly these be loose conclusions, and (as you use to term them) "very pitiful arguments." Of the same force be these arguments: "Most of the apostles and prophets used no such several apparel;" ergo, we may not use any several apparel; and again: "None of them have left any commandment of it;" ergo, it ought not to be.

The first reason hath thus many faults: first, the antecedent is untrue; as I have shewed before out of this prophet Zachary, and M. Calvin, &c. For the prophets were discerned from others by a certain kind of apparel; and it is not able to be proved but that the apostles had several apparel from the common sort of men. Secondly, it is no good argument a facto ad jus; but it is much worse, a non facto ad non jus; the which kind of argument Zuinglius divers times reproveth in his treatises against the anabaptists; as I have oftentimes said¹. Thirdly, if some of the apostles, and some of the prophets, did use several apparel (as the antecedent confesseth they did), though it doth not follow that we must do so, yet it evidently proveth that we may do so, being no commandment in the scripture to the contrary.

Apparel of ministers distinct.

The antecedent of T. C. inferreth a consequent against himself.

Your second argument is overthrown by your own self. For, page 13, you say that "many things are both commanded and forbidden, of which there is no express mention in the word; which are as necessary to be followed and avoided, as those whereof express mention is made:" which if it be true (as it is most untrue), then things of less importance, and not so necessary, though they be not expressly commanded, yet may they be done. M. Calvin, in his book against the anabaptists (for your arguments and theirs do marvellously agree, and be builded upon the self-same foundation), saith thus: "To disallow that which God never disallowed is, in a mortal man, a token of too much rashness and arrogancy. But let us always hold this, that then the authority of God is usurped, when that is condemned which he hath permitted. But the scripture mentioneth in no place that the use of armour is forbidden unto princes, &c.³" You may hereby then perceive that M. Calvin doth not think this to be a sound argument: It is not commanded; ergo, it is unlawful, except it can be shewed to be prohibited: wherefore, if you will condemn a several kind of apparel in ministers, you must

The argument of T. C. overthrown by his own assertion.

Page 13. sect. 2.

Calvin. adv. Anabap.

[¹ II. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1531. Elench. contr. Catabapt. Pars II. foll. 9. 2, 13. See Vol. I. pages 179, note 5, 353, note 7.]

[² See Vol. I. page 176.]

[³ Improbare autem quod nunquam improbavit Deus, nimis est, homini inquam mortali, temeritatis et arrogantiae. Hoc autem perpetuo teneamus, usurpari Dei auctoritatem, quum id quod permisit condemnatur. Nusquam vero scriptura mentionem facit, prohibitum esse principibus armorum usum adversus eos, qui ipsis injuria molesti erunt.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Instr. adv. Anabapt. Art. iv. Tom. VIII. p. 363.]

Apparel of ministers
distinct.

shew some commandment or prohibition in the word of God for the same ; else are you “rash,” and “arrogant,” “usurping” to yourself “God’s authority ;” as M. Calvin saith.

Chapter ii. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 55, Sect. 1.

Eusebius saith that St John the apostle ware on his head a leaf or thin plate like unto a bishop’s mitre¹.

T. C. Page 53, Sect. ult.

For want of store, and to make a long book, here is St John’s mitre rehearsed thrice in one leaf to the same purpose, and in the same words. And, because it was not enough that M. Bullinger and M. Martyr should speak of them, you have prevented them both, lest you should have seemed to have brought nothing. If this be not coleworts twice sodden², I cannot tell what is.

But not once digested or answered.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is so often rehearsed, as you report, but by divers authors, to shew their opinions of one and the self-same thing. M. Gualter and M. Martyr, among other examples, use this of St John to prove that in the ancient church there was a peculiar fashion of apparel for priests. I recite their words as witnesses in this case worthy of credit ; and by that occasion this example of John is the oftener repeated ; but this is a sore matter to move such choler : you should quietly have answered the reason, and left your heat of speech ; but you have done the contrary.

¶ That the Magistrate may appoint a distinct apparel for Ministers.

Chapter iii. The First Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 55, Sect. 1.

But what if none of the prophets, what if none of the apostles (which you are not able to prove either of the prophets or apostles) were known by their apparel ?

Distinction
of apparel.³

[¹ ... ἔτι δὲ καὶ Ἰωάννης ὁ ἐπὶ τὸ στήθος τοῦ Κυρίου ἀναπεσὼν, ὅς ἐγενήθη ἱερεὺς τὸ πέταλον πεφορεκὼς, καὶ μάρτυς καὶ διδάσκαλος.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. xxxi. Lib. v. cap. xxiv. pp. 82, 155.]

[² Crambe repetita.—Juv. VII. 154.]

[³ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

May not therefore christian magistrates in christian commonweals, for order and decency, appoint a several kind of apparel, as well to ministers as to other states of men?

The magistrate may appoint apparel to ministers.

T. C. Page 54, Sect. 1.

You ask whether the christian magistrate may enjoin a several kind of apparel to the ministers. Either the cause is too weak which you defend, or else it hath gotten an evil patron, which would so gladly shift it, and change it with another: for this is another question, which you speak of. For, although that be granted unto you which you demand, yet you cannot conclude your cause. For, albeit the magistrate may command a several apparel, yet it followeth not that he may command this kind of popish apparel; and therefore what manner of argument is this of yours: The magistrate may command a several apparel; therefore he may command this? The college-walls will tell you that a man cannot conclude from the whole to the part affirmatively. So you see I might let you fish and catch nothing: but I am neither afraid nor ashamed to tell you the truth of that you ask; so far forth at least as I am persuaded. I think therefore it may be⁴ such a kind of apparel as, the magistrate commanding it, the minister may refuse it, and such it may be as he may not refuse it. But, whatsoever apparel it be, this commandment cannot be without some injury done to the minister. For, seeing that the magistrate doth allow of him, as of a wise, learned, and discreet man, and trusteth him with the government of his people in matters between God and them, it were somewhat hard not to trust him with the appointing of his own apparel; and he is probably to be supposed that he hath discretion to wear his own gear comely and in order, that is able to teach others how they should wear theirs; and that he should be able to do that by his wisdom and learning, that others do without learning and great store of wisdom; and that he should keep order and decency in apparel, which hath learned in the school of Christ, which they do that had never other school-master than common sense and reason. And, if any minister be found to fault, in going either dissolutely, or too exquisitely and delicately, then the magistrate may punish him according to the disorder wherein he faulteth.

You might have learned other logic within the college-walls.

That is as much to say as, if you like it, you may use it.

You may say the like of judges.

Why may he not as well appoint him an order, as punish his disorder?

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you had noted my order, and dealt sincerely, these words of yours might, with less discredit unto you, have been well forborne. For in this place I only prove that the ministers may be distinguished from other by a several kind of apparel. And I ask the question, whether a christian magistrate may appoint a several kind of apparel for order and decency. Of this apparel, which the Admonition calleth "antichristian," I speak a little after. Your so usual kind of reasoning not ad idem argueth but lack of ability to answer the present purpose.

[⁴ He, Def. B.]

The magistrate may appoint apparel to ministers.

The question is incident to my cause; for, if the christian magistrate have authority to appoint a several kind of apparel to ministers, then it is also lawful for ministers to use it.

An argument holdeth from the whole to the part affirmatively sometime.

You say, "the college-walls will tell" me "that a man cannot conclude from the whole to the part affirmatively." Although my argument is neither a genere, nor a toto, but ab oppositis relativis (for it is this in effect: The magistrate may command it; ergo, the subjects must obey it), yet not "the college-walls" (which be dumb, and cannot speak), but the rules of logic telleth me, that, if by the whole you mean that which the logicians do call genus, then an argument from the whole to the part doth firmly hold affirmatively, if the whole be taken universaliter, "universally," as in this example: Omne animal est sensibile; ergo, omnis homo est sensibilis. Omnis virtus est mediocritas; ergo, temperantia est mediocritas; and so likewise: The magistrate hath authority to appoint any kind of habit for order or decency; ergo, he may appoint this or that kind of habit. If you mean by the "whole" that which the logicians do properly call totum integrale, as you seem to do, then the rules of logic tell you that ab omni toto ad partes (except it be a toto in modo) the argument is good affirmatively, and not otherwise. I am not disposed to boast of my knowledge in logic, nor to win any opinion thereof to myself by defacing or contemning of other. But, I thank God, I have sufficient to maintain whatsoever I have written, and to answer what you can reply to the contrary. But who would have thought that this spirit had been in T. C., a man supposed to be so mortified, &c.?

The magistrate's authority in appointing apparel abridged by T. C.

You answer my question indeed; but as good never a whit as never a deal the better. For in such sort you give the magistrate authority to command some kind of apparel to the minister, that he can command none unto him, "whatsoever it be, without some injury done to the minister;" which is a very strange answer. For first it restraineth the magistrate from having authority to command any kind of apparel; "for such," you say, "it may be, that the minister may refuse it:" then doth it accuse the magistrate of "doing injury," if he appoint even that kind of apparel that he may lawfully do. For you say, "whatsoever apparel it be, this commandment cannot be without some injury done to the minister." This is a very nice authority given to the magistrate: but let the reader well consider your words, and mark what authority you give to magistrates. One reason, whereby you would prove that the magistrate "doth the minister injury," if he command him to wear that kind of apparel which is lawful to be commanded, is this: "the magistrate doth allow of him as a wise, learned, and discreet man, &c.;" and "therefore it were somewhat hard not to trust him with the appointing of his own apparel, &c." First, it is not true "that the magistrate doth allow of him, &c.:" for you will have him chosen by the parish; and the magistrate cannot know what kind of ministers every parish doth choose. Secondly, if "the magistrate allow of him," it is upon condition that he be obedient to his laws. Thirdly, the magistrate may be deceived in him, and take him for another manner of man than he is. Last of all, how wise, how learned, how discreet soever he be, yet is it meet that he obey laws, and be subject unto good orders. May not other learned, wise, and discreet men allege this for themselves also, and say that they be able to govern themselves; what need they, like children, be prescribed what to do? And undoubtedly at this day this is the voice of divers; and this lesson of liberty belike they have learned of you.

I do most humbly desire those that have the care of this commonwealth but to consider what lieth hid even in these your words uttered in this place: they will then, no doubt, understand that you seek freedom from all laws of princes, and imagine that such perfection may be in men, that they shall not need to be governed by civil laws, but every man to be a law to himself.

And here your subtile dealing is worthy to be noted (which is very usual with you) in altering the case: for, whereas the kind of apparel is appointed to be a distinction from other men, and an external note of their calling, as it is in other sorts of men, as judges, serjeants, aldermen, &c., you (as though you knew not this) make your reader believe that the magistrate in appointing apparel doth mistrust the minister's "discretion in wearing his own gear comely, and in order;" as if the meaning of the magistrate's commandment

The magistrate may appoint apparel to ministers.

Whereunto the assertion of the Replier tendeth.

The magistrate may appoint apparel to ministers.

herein were that ministers should not go either “dissolutely,” or “disorderly,” and not rather that all ministers should use that form of decent apparel, whereby they might in one uniform order agree amongst themselves, and differ from other states of people in her dominions. If you meant uprightly, you would not so often deal in this order.

Chapter iii. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 55, Sect. 1.

Judges, serjeants, aldermen, and citizens, are known by their apparel; and why may not ministers be so likewise? are they not under subjection? be they not subject to civil laws and ordinances? ought they not to obey their governors in all things not against the word of God?

T. C. Page 54, Sect. 2.

And, whereas you would prove that it may be done with the ministers as it is done with judges, serjeants, aldermen, and sheriffs, the case is not like. For, as for these which be in office, their robes and gowns may, as their maces and swords, somewhat help to set forth the majesty and moderate pomp which is meet for the offices of justice which they execute, and consequently to help to strike a profitable fear into their hearts which are underneath them; which hath, nor can have, no place in the minister, whose authority and power, as it is not outward, so can it not, nor ought not, to borrow any credit of those¹ external shews. And the magistrate or the city may seek some honour of the citizens, mustering as it were by numbers in one livery: which ought not to be looked for at the minister's hand, because he honoureth and serveth the magistrate another way, nor cannot also, considering that they are scattered through all the land in every town, one, or not so many as, being put in one livery, would make any great shew to the honour and commendation of the town or city where they remain.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I might as well answer for “judges, serjeants, &c.,” as you do for ministers, and say that, “seeing the magistrate doth allow them as wise, learned, and discreet men, and trusteth them with the government” of the commonwealth, “it were something hard not to trust them with the appointing of their own apparel:” but so should I reason fondly and seditiously;

[¹ These, Repl. 1 and 2.]

for it is meet that "learned, wise, and discreet men" should be subject to laws; and, the wiser, the learned, and the discreeter they be, the more willing they are to obey the same. And this kind of argument tendeth to nothing else but to the animating of the subjects against the magistrate and against the laws.

The magistrate may appoint apparel to ministers.

The subjects animated against the magistrate.

Though "the authority" that the minister ought to have must come especially by his doctrine, good conversation, and by his calling; yet is no outward means (being lawful) to be refused, whereby the same may be helped; and he must labour as much as he can, even by outward means (whether it be of conversation, or of apparel, or any such like thing), to commend his office and calling, and to procure reverence unto it.

A man might likewise say that princes, judges, and magistrates, are not to be revered for their apparel' sake, but for the authority committed unto them by God; and yet is it meet and convenient that they wear such kind of apparel as may externally commend their authority.

The apparel of ministers declareth their modesty and gravity, signifieth their calling and office, pertaineth to comeliness and order, and therefore as convenient to be prescribed unto them as any other kind of apparel is to judges, serjeants, or other civil magistrates. And, forasmuch as ministers be members of the commonwealth, it is meet that they should be subject to the orders of the same.

It is the honour of the prince to have all the states and degrees of persons within her dominion in good order, be they in city, or in town, together or separate; and therefore this is nothing that you say, "the magistrate or the city may seek some honour of the citizens, &c."

The judge, wheresoever he goeth, ought to be known by his apparel, even so the minister; neither can you shew any good reason to the contrary. M. Calvin upon the xxiii. of Matthew saith, "it is meet that doctors should in gravity and modesty of apparel differ from the common sort²."

Calvin.

[² Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Harm. Euang. Matt. xxiii. Tom. VI. p. 257. See before, page 12, note 2.]

Distinction
of apparel before the pope's tyranny.

Chapter iii. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 54, Sect. 3.

And so you see your question answered, whereby appeareth they are subjects, as other are, and to obey also sometimes, where the commandment is not given upon good grounds.

Jo. WHITGIFT.

It is answered indeed according to my expectation, but neither according to the truth, nor the duty of a subject.

The distinction of apparel was appointed for ministers before the pope's tyranny.

Chapter iv. The First Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 55, Sect. 2, 3.

Apparel appointed for ministers
before the pope's ty-ranny¹.

If you doubt whether a particular kind of apparel, differing from the laymen, were ever appointed for ministers in the church before the pope's tyranny, and whether in these days it may be appointed in reformed churches, or no, hear the judgment of Master Bullinger and Master Gualter, in an epistle written by them to Master N. and Master M. Their words be these :

Bullinger and Gualter².

“ That in the ancient church there was a particular fashion of apparel for priests, it appeareth in the Ecclesiastical History of Theodoret, Lib. ii. cap. 27, and of Socrates, Lib. vi. cap. 22. No man is ignorant, which hath but lightly read over the monuments of the ancient fathers, but that the ministers used a cloak in their service. And therefore I said before, that the diversity of garments had not his original of the pope. Eusebius citeth out of the ancient writers, that St John the apostle ware on his head a leaf or thin plate like unto a bishop's mitre. Pontius Diaconus witnesseth of St Cyprian the martyr that, when he offered his neck to the executioner, he first gave him his cap, and the deacon his upper garment, and so stood apparelled in white linen. Moreover, Chrysostom maketh mention of white apparel of ministers⁴.” Hitherto Bullinger and Gualter.

Cyprian ware white appa-rel³.

Chrysostom³.

[¹ This note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[² Answer 2 has not and Gualter.]

[³ These marginal notes are inserted from Answ. 2.]

[⁴ Respondeo, In veteri ecclesia fuisse peculiarem presbyterorum vestitum

T. C. Page 54, Sect. 3, 4.

The place of Theodoret, cited by M. Bullinger, maketh mention of a golden cope, and that used by bishops of Hierusalem, and sold by Cyril, a good bishop; whereby he declared sufficiently his misliking of such garments in the ministry of the sacraments. In the place the which he citeth out of Socrates, there is one Syeinus, a Novatian bishop, is⁵ said to have worn white apparel, and therefore is reprehended as for too much exquisiteness and fineness of apparel; and the bishop of Duresme, in a letter he wrote, allegeth the same place against the surplice⁶. A man would hardly believe that Master Bullinger should use these places to prove a distinction of apparel amongst the ministers. We are not ignorant but that a cloak hath been used of the ministers in their service; but that was no several apparel of the ministers, but common to all Christians⁷, which with change of their religion changed also their apparel, as appeareth manifestly in Tertullian De Pallio.

Distinction of apparel before the pope's tyranny.

The place of Theodoret falsified.

As for the petalum that St John ware, I see not how it can be proved to be like a bishop's mitre. For the cap that St Cyprian gave the executioner argueth rather that it was the common apparel, which was customably worn; for else it would not have done him so much good. As for his upper garment, which he gave to his deacon, it was a token of his goodwill, which he would leave with him, as the practice hath been seen with us, and proveth nothing that it was any several apparel. As for the white linen garment which he suffered in, it cannot seem strange unto us which have seen the holy martyrs of the Lord executed in Smithfield and other places. And it is not to be thought that St Cyprian had so small judgment that, living in the time of persecution, he would, by wearing of some notable apparel from the rest, as it were betray himself into the hands of his enemies, unless all the Christians had done so too for clearer and more open profession of their faith, and greater detestation of the contrary religion;

apparet ex historia ecclesiastica Theodoreti, Li. 2. ca. 27 [See below, page 24, note 5]. Et Socratis Li. 6. ca. 22 [See below, page 25, note 7]. Pallio in sacris usos esse ministros, nemo ignorat, qui veterum monumenta obiter inspexit. Ideo antea submonui, diversitatem indumentorum non habere suam originem a papa. Eusebius certe testatur ex vetustissimis scriptoribus Johannem apostolum Ephesi petalum seu laminam gestasse pontificalem in capite [See before, page 16, note 1]. Et de Cypriano martyre testatur Pontius diaconus, quod cum jugulum carnifici præbere vellet, ei prius birrum dedisse, diacono dalmaticam, atque sic ipsum in lineis stetisse indutum [See below, page 25, note 9]. Præterea vestis candidæ ministrorum meminit Chrysostomus [See below, page 24, note 2]. Ac certum est Christianos, cum a gentilismo converterentur ad evangelium et ecclesiam, pro toga induisse pallium. Ob quam rem cum ab infidelibus irriderentur, Tertullianus librum de Pallio scripsit eruditissimum [See below, page 24, note 1].—Bullinger's Letter to Sampson and Humphrey, 1566, in Strype, Annals, Vol. I. Append. No. xxiv. This letter is also printed by Burnet, Coll. Vol. III. Book vi. No. lxxvii.]

[⁵ Bishop which is, Repl. 2.]

[⁶ Bp. Pilkington's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Letter to Earl of Leicester, p. 661.]

[⁷ All the Christians, Repl. 1 and 2.]

Distinction
of apparel
before the pope's
tyranny.

as Tertullian and the Christians in his time did by the wearing of a cloak¹: which reason may be also alleged of the petalum of St John. It is true Chrysostom maketh mention of a white garment², but not in commendation of it, but rather to the contrary: for he sheweth that the dignity of their ministry, their safety and crown, was in taking heed that none unmeet were admitted to the Lord's supper, not in going about the church with a white garment. And it is easily to be seen by Salomon, in his Ecclesiastes, that to wear a white garment was greatly esteemed in the East parts, and was ordinary to those that were in any estimation, as the wearing of black with us; and therefore was no several apparel for the ministers, or for to execute their ministry in.

Hom. 60.³ ad
Pop. Antio-chi.

Eccles. ix. 8.⁴

Scripture fondly alleged.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Theod. Lib. ii.
cap. 27.
Constantius.

The words of Theodoret be these: "But the tale, which they had raised of Cyrillus, did chiefly displease the emperor. For, whereas the most worthy king Constantine had, for the honour of the church of Hierusalem, given unto Macarius, bishop in the same city, a holy garment (precious and wrought with gold) which he should wear when he ministered the holy baptism, they reported that Cyril sold it, &c.⁵" Here you see that Theodoret counteth it but a fable that Cyril should make any such sale; and those that say he sold it declare that it was not for any disallowing of the vesture, but for necessity of the poor in the time of famine; as Sozo. *Lib. iv. cap. 25*⁶, testifieth.

Soz. Lib. iv.
cap. 25.

You deal with M. Bullinger as you do with me, that is, you pervert his meaning, and allege that out of Soocrates that

[¹ Gaude pallium et exulta, melior jam te philosophia dignata est, ex quo Christianum vestire coepisti.—Tertull. Op. Lut. 1641. De Pall. 5. p. 139.]

[² Διὰ τοῦτο ὑμᾶς ὁ Θεὸς ἐτίμησε ταύτην τὴν τιμὴν, ἵνα τὰ τοιαῦτα διακρίνητε* τοῦτο ὑμῶν ἡ ἀξία, τοῦτο ἡ ἀσφάλεια, τοῦτο ὁ στέφανος ἅπας, οὐχ ἵνα λευκὸν χιτωνίσκον καὶ ἀποστίλβοντα παραβαλλόμενοι περιήητε.—Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Matt. Hom. lxxxii. Tom. VII. p. 789. Conf. Op. Lat. Basil. 1547. Ad Pop. Ant. Hom. lx. Tom. V. col. 397.]

[³ 6, Answ. Def. A. and B.]

[⁴ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[⁵ Οὐχ ἥκιστα δὲ αὐτὸν χαλεπῆναι πεποίηκεν, ἃ κατὰ τοῦ Κυρίλλου συντέλεικε. τὴν γὰρ ἱερὰν στολὴν ἣν ὁ πανεύφημος Κωνσταντῖνος ὁ βασιλεὺς, τὴν Ἱεροσολύμων ἐκκλησίαν γεραίρων, δεδώκει τῷ Μακαρίῳ τῷ τῆς πόλεως ἐκείνης ἀρχιερεῖ, ἵνα ταύτην περιβαλλόμενος τὴν τοῦ θεοῦ βαπτίσματος ἐπιτελήῃ λειτουργίαν* ἐκ χρυσῶν δὲ αὕτη κατεσκεύαστο νημάτων* πεπρακεῖναι τὸν Κύριλλον ἔφη, κ.τ.λ.—Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. II. cap. xxvii. p. 111.]

[⁶ ...λιμὸν καταλαβόντος τὴν Ἱεροσολύμων χώραν, ὡς εἰς ἐπίσκοπον ἔβλεπε τὸ τῶν δομῆων πλῆθος, τῆς ἀνιγκαίας τροφῆς ἀπορούμενον* ἐπεὶ δὲ χρήματα οὐκ ἦν οἷς ἐπικουρεῖν ἔδει, κειμήλια καὶ ἱερὰ παραπετάσματα ἀπέδοτο* κ.τ.λ.—Soz. in cod. Lib. IV. cap. xxv. p. 474.]

he meant not, and keep that in silence which maketh directly for this purpose. Socrates there sheweth how Sycinius being a Novatian did wear white apparel, and, when he was for the same reproved, he answered that it was nowhere written that priests should wear black apparel, and bade them prove by scripture that priests ought to wear black apparel⁷. Whereby it is plain that ministers in those days did wear black apparel, and were thereby known, and that Sycinius being an heretic refused so to do, using the same arguments that you do, scilicet, that “it is nowhere commanded that priests should wear such kind of vesture.” Wherefore the story is aptly alleged by Master Bullinger to prove a several kind of apparel, and it insinuateth what manner of men those be that condemn the common order in such matters, and love to be singular, like unto Sycinius the Novatian heretic.

Distinction
of apparel
before the pope's tyranny.
Lib. vi.
cap. 22.

As for St John his petalum, you hear what these learned men say, who no doubt have good ground of their judgment. Neither would Eusebius have made any mention of it, if it had not been a kind of apparel whereby St John was known. The words of Eusebius, Lib. iii. cap. 31, be these: “John, which leaned upon the breast of the Lord, being a priest, wore a leaf or thin plate⁸.” Whereby it is evident that this apparel was peculiar to St John in the respect that he was a priest. That Cyprian his apparel was not usual and “common” for other men to wear, it may appear by this, that the names of his apparel be expressed; for that which he gave to the executioner is called birrus, that is, “a thin plate,” and that which he gave to the deacon was called dalmatica, a garment with long sleeves: as for the white linen, it is not there mentioned as any distinct kind of apparel⁹.

Euseb. Lib.
iii. cap. 31.

The words of Chrysostom do manifestly declare that then such kind of garment was used in the administration of the sacraments; neither do his words tend anything at all to the disallowing of it; for they be spoken by the way of com-

[⁷ ...ἄλλοτε δὲ Ἀρσάκιον τὸν ἐπίσκοπον κατὰ τιμὴν ὀρώων, ἡρωτήθη ὑπὸ τινος τῶν περὶ Ἀρσάκιον, διὰ τί ἀνοίκειον ἐπισκόπῳ ἐσθῆτα φοροίη, καὶ ποῦ γέγραπται λευκὰ τὸν ἱερωμένον ἀμφιένυσσθαι; ὁ δὲ, σὺ πρότερον, ἔφη, εἰπὲ ποῦ γέγραπται μέλαιναν ἐσθῆτα φορεῖν τὸν ἐπίσκοπον; κ.τ.λ.—Socr. in eod. Lib. vi. cap. xxii. p. 270.]

[⁸ Euseb. in eod. Lib. iii. cap. xxxi. p. 82. See before, p. 16, note 1.]

[⁹ Et ita idem Cyprianus in agrum Sexti productus est, et ibi se lacerna birro expoliavit, et genu in terra flexit, et in orationem se Domino prostravit. Et cum se dalmatica expoliasset, et diaconibus tradidisset, in linea stetit, et caput spiculatorum sustinere.—Cypri. Op. Oxon. 1682. Cypri. Vit. præf. p. 13.]

Distinction
of apparel
before the pope's
tyranny.

parison; and negatives by comparison are not simple negatives (as I told you before), but by the way of comparison: and therefore, when Chrysostom saith that "the dignity of their ministry, &c. was in taking heed that none unmeet were admitted to the Lord's supper, not in going about the church with a white garment¹," he doth not disallow going about the church in a white garment, but he saith that it is not in comparison of the other so greatly to be regarded.

T. C. doth allege the scripture fondly and carelessly.

If Salomon in that place meant any such matter, yet is it no proof at all for this that you allege it for: there was a great number of years betwixt Salomon his time and Chrysostom's, and all kind of customs much altered; and therefore I marvel what you mean to bring in Salomon to prove that the white apparel used by ministers of the church in the administration of the sacraments in the time of Chrysostom was "not several," but common and usual apparel. But that the reader may understand your carelessness in alleging the scriptures, I will set down the words of Salomon in that ix. chapter, and 8. verse: "At all times let thy garments be white; and let not oil be lacking upon thine head." In the which sentence, by the white garment is meant either innocency of life, as Pellican doth interpret it², or joy and mirth, as some other think³; but there can be nothing less gathered thereof than that there was at that time any such usual kind of apparel. And to what purpose should he have so said, if it had been so? The metaphors and figurative kind of speeches that Salomon useth in those books cannot be unknown to any. You do not trouble me with many quotations; but those that be are passing strange. And surely I cannot but marvel how you dare be so bold as thus to abuse the scriptures.

Eccles. ix.

Be it that this is the saying of belly-gods (according to the note of the Geneva bible⁴, whereupon I think you ground

[¹ Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Matt. Hom. lxxxii. Tom. VII. p. 789. See before, page 24, note 2.]

[² Conversazione honesta ornetur omnis habitus corporis tui.—Comment. Biblior. Op. C. Pellican. Tigur. 1536-46. Eccles. cap. ix. 8. Tom. III. fol. 260. 2.]

[³ Omni tempore sint vestimenta tua candida, idem est ac si dicat, lætare, sis hilari animo.—J. Brent. Op. Tubing. 1576-90. Explic. Eccles. Salom. cap. ix. Tom. IV. p. 91.]

[⁴ Rejoice, be merry, and spare for no cost. thus speak the wicked belly-gods.—The Bible, transl. according to the Ebrew and Greeke. Lond. 1578 Not. in Eccles. ix. fol. 279. 2.]

your assertion), to move unto mirth and pastime; doth it therefore follow that this was an usual kind of apparel in Salomon his time? Or, if it were then, must it be also in Chrysostom his time? Or, if it were so in his time, might it not also be used of the ministers in the administration of the sacraments, as a comely and decent vesture, and differing from the rest? If I had the gift of jesting, that you are so excellent in, what sport could I make with this, and a number such like places!

Distinction
of apparel
before the pope's tyranny.

Chap. iv. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 56, Sect. 1.

Peter Martyr likewise, in an epistle written to Master Hoper, saith on this sort: "I will not grant that these diversities of vestures have their beginnings of the pope, forsomuch as I read in the ecclesiastical history, how that John the apostle wore at Ephesus, where he dwelled, a bishop's apparel, terming it petalum, seu lamina pontificalis. As touching St Cyprian the holy martyr, Pontius the deacon writeth, that a little before he should be beheaded he gave unto him that was appointed to behead him his vesture called birrus, after he had put it off, and to the deacons he gave his other vesture called dalmatica, and so stood in linen. Chrysostom maketh mention of the white vesture of the ministers of the church⁶." Hæc ille.

P. Martyr⁵.

John's apparel.

T. C. Page 55, Sect. 1.

The reasons that M. Peter Martyr useth are the same before; and how he hath also condemned⁷ them it shall appear, with M. Bucer's judgment of these things, in the end of the book⁸.

JO. WHITGIFT.

In the mean time you see how these notable learned men agree in one truth against you; neither are you able to shew any contrariety in this point uttered by him, or M. Bucer; as I trust shall then appear.

[⁵ This note is not in Answ. 2.]

[⁶ P. Martyr's Letter to John Hoper Byshop, &c. at the end of A brief examination for the tyme, of a certaine declaration, &c.—Lond. Jugge, foll. B4, C1. Conf. P. Martyr. Epist. Theolog. ad calc. Loc. Com. Heidelb. 1613. p. 1087.]

[⁷ Contemned, Def. B.]

[⁸ Cartwright here refers to some testimonies which he says he had collected out of the later writers and placed at the end of his Reply.]

Distinction
of apparel
before the pope's tyranny.
Socrates¹.

Chap. iv. The Third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 56, Sect. 2, 3.

Eustathius¹.

Socrates also, in the second book of his Ecclesiastical History, saith that the father of Eustathius, being bishop of Cæsarea, did deprive the said Eustathius his son, being a priest, of his place and dignity, because he wore apparel not comely for a priest to wear, nor agreeable to his order².

Antiquity of apparel in ministers³.

Therefore it is certain that ministers, even from the apostles' time, have had a distinct and several kind of apparel from other men.

T. C. Page 55, Sect. 2.

No more is there in my Answer.

As for Eustathius his deprivation because he did not wear apparel meet for a minister, it maketh not to this purpose one whit. For I have shewed that, if a⁴ minister go like a ruffian or swash-buckler, or in the bravery of a courtier, that it is meet he should be punished according to the quantity of the fault. And that it is so to be understood, it appeareth manifestly by the council of Gangris⁵, which did therefore confirm the same deposing, because he wore a stranger apparel and the habit of a philosopher, and caused all his fellows to do so. Therefore I marvel what you mean to allege this place. It is also alleged of Nicephorus⁶: in Lib. ix. cap. 45. neither of the places there is any Eustathius, the son of Eustathius, but of Eulabius, or, as Nicephorus readeth, Eulalius. And therefore your conclusion is both untrue and uncertain, that since the apostles' times there hath been a distinct and several apparel of the ministers from the rest.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Socr. Lib. ii.
cap. 43.

The words of Socrates, Lib. ii. cap. 43, be these: "Eustathius, the bishop of Sebastia in Armenia, was not admitted to make his defence, because he was deposed before of his father, bishop of Cæsarea in Cappadocia, for that he wore an undecent garment⁷." The canon of the council of Gangris: "If any Distinct. 30.

[¹ Instead of these names Answ. 2 has Eustathius deposed for unorderly apparel.]

[² See below, note 7.]

[³ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[⁴ Any, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁵ See below, note 8.]

[⁶ Niceph. Call. Eccles. Hist. Lut. Par. 1630. Lib. ix. cap. xlv. Tom. I. p. 795.]

[⁷ Εὐστάθιος δὲ ὁ τῆς ἐν Ἀρμενίᾳ Σεβαστείας, οὔτε εἰς ἀπολογίαν ἐδέχθη, διότι ὑπὸ Εὐλαλίου τοῦ ἰδίου πατρὸς, καὶ ἐπισκόπου Καισαρείας τῆς ἐν Καππαδοκίᾳ, ἥδη πρότερον καθήρητο, ἐπειδὴ ἀνάρμοστον τῇ ἱερῶν στολῇν ἡμφίεστο.—Socr. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. 11. cap. xliii. p. 128.]

man thinketh it to avail unto his holy purpose (to wit, of continency) that he wear a cloak, as if thereby he should attain unto righteousness, and reprehendeth or condemneth them which wear the ornament called byrrhus, and the other common and usual garment, let him be accursed. Dist. 30.⁸” Both by Socrates, and also by this canon of the council, it doth appear that Eustathius and his adherents were condemned for using a new and singular kind of apparel from that which then was commonly and customably used of all bishops. That in the conclusion of this council, which is spoken of modest, simple, and decent apparel, against that which is loose and dissolute⁹, hath no colour of proving anything against Eustathius his contempt and singularity, neither doth it in any one word signify that he was not deprived for refusing to wear the ordinary and accustomed apparel to priests.

Distinction of apparel before the pope's tyranny.

You say that “in neither of the places there is any Eustathius, the son of Eustathius, but of Eulabius, &c.” Gladly would you have something to dally with, if possibly you could tell how. Are you not ashamed thus to deal? Where do I say that “Eustathius was the son of Eustathius?” Had you not my book before you? Be not these my words: “Socrates, in the second book of his Ecclesiastical History, saith that the father of Eustathius, being bishop of Cæsarea, did deprive the said Eustathius his son, being a priest, &c.?” I neither name him Eustathius, nor Eulabius, nor Eulalius: therefore my conclusion is both true and certain; and you do but seek occasion of quarrelling.

T. C. taketh advantage where none is given.

[⁸ Εἰ τις ἀνδρῶν διὰ νομιζομένην ἀσκησιν περιβολαίῳ χρῆται, καὶ ὡς ἂν ἐκ τούτου τὴν δικαιοσύνην ἔχων καταψηφίσαιτο τῶν μετ' εὐλαβείας τοὺς βήρους φορούντων, καὶ τῇ ἄλλῃ κοινῇ καὶ ἐν συνθείᾳ οὐσῇ ἐσθῇτι κεχρημένων, ἀνάθεμα ἔστω.—Concil. Gangrens. can. 12. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 419. Conf. Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Prim. Pars, Dist. xxx. can. 15. col. 147.]

[⁹ ...καὶ λιτότητα καὶ εὐτέλειαν ἀμφιασμάτων δι' ἐπιμέλειαν μόνον τοῦ σώματος ἀπερίργον ἐπαινοῦμεν· τὰς δὲ ἐκλύτους καὶ τεθρυμμένας ἐν τῇ ἐσθῇτι προσόδους οὐκ ἀποδεχόμεθα.—Ibid. can. 21. col. 424. Conf. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Prim. Pars, Dist. xli. can. 5. col. 200.]

That the apparel now used is not popish or antichristian; and that things invented by evil men may be used of Christians.

Chapter v. The First Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 56, Sect. 4.

But “cap, gown, tippet, &c.” you say, is “popish and antichristian:” this is only said, and not proved. If you call it popish and antichristian, because it was first invented by an antichristian pope, it is first to be considered whether that be true or no: then, if it be true, whether everything so invented is of necessity to be abolished.

T. C. Page 55, Sect. 3.

Then the case is altered of late.

The matter lieth not in that, whether these things were first invented by papists, or, being devised of others, were after taken by papists¹; but the matter standeth in this, that they have been used of the papists as notes and marks and sacraments of their abominations.

Jo. WHITGIFT.

You alter the case as oft as it pleaseth you; and liberty you have to affirm or deny what you list, when you list, and where you list, without controlment: for hitherto I am sure your chief grounds against the apparel hath been, that the same was invented by popes and used by them. But take your pleasure: that which followeth in my Answer to the Admonition is directly against this your ground also, if you will stand to it and not shrink.

Chapter v. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 56, Sect. ult.

Stephanus, a good bishop, invented this apparel².

It is certain that this apparel of ministers, which you find yourselves so much grieved with, was appointed long before the church of Rome declined from the purity of Christ's religion: for Stephanus, bishop of Rome, who lived the year of our Lord 256, is said to be the first which did appoint this kind of apparel for ministers³; neither are you able to shew that any antichristian pope invented the same. But admit it were so, that this apparel was either borrowed of the Jews, or taken from the Gentiles, or invented and used by some antichristian pope; yet it followeth not but that the same may be well used of Christians in the church of Christ.

[¹ By the papists, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[² Answ. 2 adds of ministers.]

Things invented by evil men may be used of Christians.

JO. WHITGIFT.

To this T. C. speaketh not one word, good or evil.

Chap. v. The Third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 57, Sect. 1; and Page 58, Sect. 1.

Augustine, in his epistle Ad Publicolam, hath this notable saying: Et cum templa, idola, luci, et si quid hujusmodi data potestate evertuntur, quamvis manifestum est, cum id agimus, non ea nos honorare, sed potius detestari, ideo tamen in usus nostros privatos duntaxat et proprios non debemus inde aliquid usurpare, ut appareat nos pietate ista destruere, non avaritia. Cum vero in usus communes, non proprios ac privatos, vel in honorem Dei veri convertuntur, hoc de illis fit, quod de ipsis hominibus, cum ex sacrilegis et impiis in veram religionem mutantur. &c.⁴: “When temples, idols, groves, and such like things, by authority be overthrown, although it is manifest when we do that we honour them not, but detest them; yet for all that we may not therefore convert them

[³ Vestimenta ecclesiastica, quibus Domino ministratur, et sacra debent esse, et honesta: quibus aliis in usibus non debent frui, quam in ecclesiasticis et Deo dignis officiis: quæ nec ab aliis debent contingi, aut ferri, nisi a sacra hominibus.—Steph. Episc. Epist. i. in Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Tert. Pars, De Consecr. Dist. i. can. 42. col. 1900. Conf. Plat. De Vit. Pont. Col. 1551. Steph. I. p. 30.]

[⁴ Et cum &c. mutantur. Hoc Deus intelligitur docuisse illis testimoniis quæ ipse posuisti, cum de luco alienorum deorum jussit ligna ad holocaustum adhiberi; et de Iericho, ut omne aurum, argentum, et ærumentum inferretur in thesauros Domini. Quapropter etiam illud quod in Deuteronomio scriptum est, Non concupisces argentum vel aurum illorum, nec accipies inde tibi, ne excedas propter illud, quoniam abominatio est Domino Deo tuo: &c.: satis apparet aut ipsos privatos usus in talibus esse prohibitos, aut ne sic inde aliquid inferatur in domum ut honoretur: tunc est enim abominatio et execratio; non cum talium sacrilegus honor apertissima destructione subvertitur.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Public. Epist. xlvii. 3. Tom. II. col. 111.]

Things wickedly invented may have good use.

Private use of idolatrous things forbidden¹.

or use them to our own private uses only and commodity, that it may appear that we destroy them for religion's sake, and not for covetousness. But, when they are converted, not into private and our own use, but into common uses, or to the honour of the true God, that is done and brought to pass in them which is done and brought to pass in men themselves, when of idolaters and wicked persons they are changed into true religion. This hath God himself taught in those testimonies, which thou thyself hast used, when as God himself commanded that of that same grove which was dedicated to strange gods there should be wood taken for his sacrifices; and, of Hierico, that all the gold and silver and brass should be brought into the treasury of the Lord. Wherefore that also, which is written in Deuteronomy, 'Thou shalt not covet their silver nor their gold, neither shalt thou take anything thereof to thyself, lest thou offend; because it is abomination unto the Lord thy God, &c.;' it manifestly appeareth that either private uses is forbidden in such things, or that nothing should so be brought into thy house that it be honoured; for then it is abomination, &c." Hitherto Augustine.

Idolatrous things turned to common use.

By these words it doth manifestly appear that even things altogether dedicated to idols, and used in idolatry, may be converted to common uses, and used in the service of God and to his honour, but not to private uses, nor superstitiously.

[Calvin upon the first of Matt. v. 37. *Purus est multarum rerum usus, quarum vitiosa est origo*²: "The use of many things is pure, the original whereof is evil"³.

T. C. Page 55, Sect. 4.

This shift is answered afterward.

As for Augustine his place, it is to be understood of such things as have a necessary use, and therefore may not be taken away from us by the superstition of men. For so we might also be deprived of the sun, which is as it were the life of the world, because the sun hath been worshipped. But that St Augustine did not like of this kind of retaining ceremonies, it may appear. "Do you ask," saith he, "how the pagans may be won, how they may be brought to salvation? forsake their solemnities, let go their toys; and then, if they agree not unto our

August. Tom. x. De Verbis Domini in Mattheum, Serm. ix.⁴

[¹ Private use forbidden of things idolatrous, Answ. 2.]

[² Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Harm. Euang. Tom. VI. p. 73.]

[³ This paragraph is inserted from Answ. 2.] [⁴ Serm. 6, Repl. 1 and 2.]

truth, let them be ashamed of their fewness⁵;” whereby he sheweth that the nearest way to gain the papists is to forsake their ceremonies. And yet I would be loth to say, either with you, or with Augustine, that it is not lawful for a man to make a popish⁶ surplice a shirt for himself, or to take the gold of a cope which he had⁷ bought, and convert it to his private use. And herein we do nothing disagree with St Augustine, which grant that surplices, and copes, and tippets, and caps, may be applied to a good use, either common or private, as they will best serve; but we deny that that use is in distinguishing either the ministers from other men, or the ministers executing their ecclesiastical function from themselves when they do not exercise that office.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The words of Augustine be plain, neither can they be so shifted off. And it maketh evidently against your distinction that he saith, “such things may not be converted into private uses.” A man may cavil with the most manifest authorities either of scriptures or fathers that can be; but every shift and cavil is not a sufficient answer. This proposition is by these words of Augustine directly proved, “that things altogether dedicated to idols and used in idolatry may be afterward used in the service of God, and to his honour;” which is the state of our question. And, because this is a material point, and peradventure St Augustine his authority is not much regarded of you, I will set down M. Calvin his opinion also touching the same matter, who, in his Harmony upon the books of Moses, upon these words in the xxiii. of Exodus, ver. 24, “Thou shalt utterly overthrow and break in pieces their images,” saith thus: “We make it not now any scruple of conscience to retain still those churches which were polluted with idols, and to put them to better use, because that which is added to the law propter consequentiam (as they term it) doth not bind us. I grant that all those things which do tend to the planting of superstition ought to be taken away, so that, by precise urging of that which is of itself indifferent, we be not in too much rigour superstitious⁸.” The place is worth

[⁵ Si quæritis unde vincantur pagani, unde illuminentur, unde ad salutem vocentur; deserite solemnitates eorum, deserite nugas ipsorum: et si non consentiunt veritati nostræ, erubescant paucitati suæ.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. De Verb. Evang. Matt. viii. Sermon. lxii. cap. vii. 11. Tom. V. col. 362.]

[⁶ Of a popish, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁷ Hath, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁸ Neque enim nobis hodie religio est templa retinere quæ polluta fuerunt idolis, et accommodare in meliorem usum: quia nos non obstringit quod propter

Things
wickedly invented may have good use.

the noting, it fully overthroweth your grounds against the apparel.

St Augustine, in that sermon quoted in your margin, speaketh against such as professing Christianity did notwithstanding resort to the temples of the pagans at their solemnities and feasts, thinking it sufficient if they did in heart detest the idols, though in body they were present in their temples and at their feasts; much like unto those that think it sufficient to serve God in heart, though in body they be present at the mass and idolatrous service. That this is the meaning of Augustine in that place, it may evidently appear to all such as will peruse it: upon this Augustine bringeth in these words: "If you ask how the pagans may be overcome, won, and illuminated, how they may be brought to salvation; forsake all their solemnity, let go their toys; and then, if they agree not unto the truth, let them be ashamed of their fewness¹." It was in St Augustine's time, as it is in some places at this day, where in some one city there be churches both for the gospel, and for the mass also: it is not meet that such as profess the gospel should resort to the mass; for, besides that they offend God in being present at idolatrous service, they also give occasion to the papists to think better of their mass, because they see it frequented of such as seem to profess the gospel, and thereby also persuade themselves of a greater multitude that embraceth their religion: wherefore one way to convert them is to abstain from their churches, that they may understand both our misliking of their service, and their own paucity also. And that this is meant of by Augustine in that place, it may also appear by these words in the same sermon: "The pagans say in their hearts, Why forsake we our gods, seeing the Christians themselves worship them as well as we²?" And again: "Behold against what true God thou dost offend, whiles thou fallest down before false gods³." St Augustine

Aug. Serm.
vi. de Verbis
Dom. in Matth.

consequentiam (ut loquuntur) legi additum est. Fateor quidem, quæcunque ad superstitionem fovendam spectant, e medio tollenda esse, modo ne præcise urgendo quod per se medium est, simus in nimio rigore superstitiosi.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Harm. in Quat. Libr. Mos. Sec. Præcept. Tom. I. p. 472.]

[¹ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. De Verb. Evang. Matt. viii. Serm. lxii. cap. vii. 11. Tom. V. col. 362. See above, page 33, note 5.]

[² Dicunt enim in cordibus suis, Quare nos relinquamus deos, quos Christiani ipsi nobiscum colunt?—Id. ibid. cap. vi. 9. col. 360.]

[³ Ecce in quem verum Deum peccas, dum discumbis apud deos falsos.—Id. ibid. col. 361.]

speaketh not one word in all that sermon of “ceremonies,” or anything else taken from the gentiles, and by Christians converted to other uses; much less of any such matter as we have now in question. And therefore you do but abuse the reader by reciting certain words of St Augustine, without the circumstances which open the true meaning of them.

Things wickedly invented may have good use.

I praise your wit for saying that “such things may be converted to private uses;” for deny that (as St Augustine plainly doth), and I shall be bound unto you that your doctrine shall have the fewer fautors by three parts: for surely many that condemn your opinions in heart, for hope of private commodity that might come unto them by the dissolution of colleges, churches, &c., do seem very well to like of them. Wherefore teach them (if you be wise) that such things may be converted to their private uses, whatsoever Augustine saith to the contrary.

Augustine saith also that they may be converted *in honorem Dei*⁴, “unto the honour of God.” What say you to that? As for your “denying that that use is in distinguishing either the ministers from other men, &c.,” because it is but your bare denial against all the proofs alleged, I will with affirming the contrary pass it over.

Chapter v. The Fourth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 58, Sect. 2, 3.

Peter Martyr in the epistle before mentioned touching this matter writeth on this sort:

“But let us consider your other argument, that is to say, it is not lawful to use these kind of vestures, because they were invented of⁵ the pope’s tyranny. In this point I do not well perceive how it may be affirmed for a surety, that we can use nothing that pertained to the pope, and is used in popery. Truly we must take good heed that we bring not the church of Christ into such bondage, that it may not use anything that the pope used. It is very true that our forefathers took the temples of idols, and turned them into holy churches, where

P. Martyr.

Temples of idols converted to the worship of God⁶.

[⁴ See above, page 31.]

[⁵ By, Def. A. and B.]

[⁶ Christ, Answ. 2.]

Things
wickedly invented may have good use.
Revenues.

Phrases of poets¹.

Wine, bread, &c. consecrated³ to idols.

Christ should be worshipped; and they took also the salary and revenues consecrated to the idols of the gentiles, to their wicked shews and plays, and to their holy votaries virgins, and transposed it to find the ministers of the church. And yet all these things did not only service unto antichrist, but unto the devil: yea, the holy ecclesiastical writers did not stick to take the verses of poets, which had been dedicated unto² Muses, and to other divers gods and goddesses, for to be played in plays, and spoken in shews, to obtain the favour of their gods—I say, they did nothing stick or fear to use them, when it seemed to them convenient, imitating Paul the apostle, who stuck nothing at all to rehearse for his purpose Menander, Aratus, and Epimenides; and that he did in entreating the holy scripture apply profane words to set forth God's religion. We read also how that wine was consecrated unto Bacchus, bread unto Ceres, water unto Neptune, oil unto Minerva, letters unto Mercury, song unto the Muses and unto Apollo; and many other things Tertullian rehearseth in his book intituled *De Corona Militis Christiani*⁴, where almost he entreateth this self-same argument: yet for all that we stick not to use all these things freely as well in holy as in profane uses, although at one time or other before they had been consecrated to idols and to devils⁵." Hitherto Peter Martyr.

T. C. Page 55, Sect. 5.

To all these things that M. Martyr reckoneth up of revenues and wages, verses, wine, bread, oil, water, which, being consecrated unto idols, are well used, Tertullian answereth in the same book, whereout a number of these are taken, when he saith that we ought to admit a participation of those things which bring either a necessity or profit in the use of them⁶. But we

[¹ Phrases of speech of poets, Answ. 2.]

[² To, Def. A. and B.]

[³ Wine and bread consecrated, Answ. 2.]

[⁴ Tertull. Op. Lut. 1641. De Coron. 8. p. 125.]

[⁵ Peter Martyr's Letter to John Hoper Byshop, &c. at the end of A briefe examination for the tyme, of a certaine declaration, &c. Lond. Jugge, fol. B 4. 2; where applying profane. Conf. P. Martyr. Epist. Theolog. ad calc. Loc. Comm. Heidelb. 1613. p. 1087.]

[⁶ Hujusmodi quæstioni sic ubique respondeo, admittens quidem utensilium communionem, &c. Dicimus enim ea demum et nostris et superiorum usibus, et Dei rebus, et ipsi Christo competisse, quæ meras utilitates, et certa subsidia, et honesta solatia necessariis vitæ humanæ procurant: &c.—Tertull. Op. De Coron. 8. p. 125.]

deny that these things thus used are either necessary or profitable. And therefore, instead of temples, tithes, wine, &c., if you would have matched the surplice well, you should have said, censers, tapers, holy bread, holy water, and such like.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Master Martyr used these examples to prove that the “surplice” and other apparel of ministers now used (for that is the matter he handleth) may lawfully be retained and worn: whose judgment and authority with learned and wise men doth far overreach your naked denial. Neither doth Tertullian speak anything in his book De Corona Militis, that tendeth to the confutation of anything that Master Martyr hath here spoken, but to the confirmation of it rather; as he may perceive that with diligence readeth the book. Eusebius, Lib. iv. cap. 11, saith that Justinus Martyr preached the gospel of Christ being apparelled like an heathen philosopher⁷. St Augustine, De Civit. Lib. xix. cap. 19, writeth thus: “It appertaineth nothing to the city of God in what kind of apparel, or in what order of life, so that it be not against God, any man follow this faith whereby we come unto God. Therefore, when philosophers become Christians, the church compelleth them not to change their apparel or manner of living, which can nothing hinder religion, but only she compelleth them to change their false opinions⁸.” Hilary also saith, in Psal. lxxii., that “the spoils of the heathens taken from the devil are divided to the furniture and ornaments of the church of God⁹ :” so that the saying of Master Martyr is very true, and confirmed by ancient authority, and the use of the church; as the testimonies of these fathers manifestly declare. Whereas you say that, if I “would have matched the surplice well,” I “should have said censers, tapers, &c.,” I tell you again, that

[⁷ Μάλιστα δὲ ἤκμαζεν ἐπὶ τῶνδε Ἰουστίνος, ἐν φιλοσόφου σχήματι πρεσβύων τὸν θεῖον λόγον, κ.τ.λ.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. iv. cap. xi. p. 101.]

[⁸ Nihil sane ad istam pertinet civitatem quo habitu vel more vivendi, si non est contra divina præcepta, istam fidem, qua pervenitur ad Deum, quisque sectetur: unde ipsos quoque philosophos, quando Christiani fiunt, non habitum vel consuetudinem victus, quæ nihil impedit religionem, sed falsa dogmata mutare compellit.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. De Civ. Dei, Lib. xix. cap. xix. Tom. VII. col. 563.]

[⁹ Ad ecclesiæ enim decus detracta ab his diabolo gentium spolia dividuntur, atque etiam ex his spoliis domus pulcritudo perficitur, &c.—Hilar. Op. Par. 1693. Tract. in Psalm. lxxii. 12. col. 197.]

Things wickedly invented may have good use.

it is not I, but M. Martyr, a famous and notable man, that so matched them, and at that time when the same matters were in controversy, and his judgment required of them; and therefore could not be written of him but with great advisement. Howbeit, that you may know something the more, you must learn to put a difference between adiaphora vera et pseudo-adiaphora; "those things that be indifferent indeed, and those that are falsely accounted indifferent."

Chap. v. The Fifth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 59, Sect. 1,
and Page 60, Sect. 1.

Bucer.

Bucer, in an epistle that he writ to John Alasco, is of the same judgment: his words are worthy to be noted, and be these: "For, if by no means it be lawful to use those things, which were of Aaron's priesthood or of the gentiles, then is it not lawful for us to have churches nor holy-days. For there is no express commandment by word in the holy scriptures of these things. It is gathered, notwithstanding, from the example of the old people, that they are profitable for us to the increase of godliness; which thing also experience proveth. For any thing to be a note of antichrist is not in the nature of any creature in itself (for to that end nothing was made of God), but it hangeth altogether of consenting to antichrist's religion and the professing thereof. The which consent and profession being changed into the consent and profession of Christianity, there can stick in the things themselves no note or mark of antichrist's religion. The use of bells was a mark of antichristianity in our churches, when the people by them were called to masses, and when they were rung against tempests! Now they are a token of Christianity, when the people by them are gathered together to the gospel of Christ, and other holy actions. Why may it not then be that the self-same garments may serve godly with godly men, that was of wicked signification with the ungodly? Truly I know very many ministers of Christ, most godly men, who have used godly these vestures, and at this day do

What it is to be a note of antichrist¹.

The use or abuse of things indifferent.

Bucer's opinion.

[¹ These marginal notes are not in Answ.]

yet use them ; so that I dare not for this cause ascribe unto them any fault at all, much less so heinous a fault of communicating with antichrist ; for the which fault we may utterly refuse to communicate with them in Christ. The priests of devils did celebrate in their sacrifices the distribution of bread and the cup ; as Justinus Martyr² and Tertullian³ make mention. What let is there why we may not use the same ceremonies also ? You will say we have a commandment of the Lord touching this ceremony. Very well. And by the s.¹c.-same it appeareth that same thing to serve among the children of God to the service of Christ, which the wicked abused in the service of devils, if the commandment of Christ be added thereto. But it is the commandment of Christ, that in our holy actions we institute and use all things so as comeliness and order be observed, that faith may be edified⁵.”

Things wickedly invented may have good use.

The distribution of bread and wine in the sacrifices of devils, Justinus Martyr².

The same M. Bucer, in another epistle written to M. Cranmer, archbishop of Canterbury, saith on this sort : “ All true godly men may godly use those rites which wicked men have abused howsoever ungodly⁶.”

T. C. Page 56, line 2, and Sect. 1.

It is true that M. Bucer saith that “ it is not in the nature of any creature to be a note of antichrist ;” but yet it followeth⁷ not thereof that the creature that hath been accidentally, and through abuse, applied to idolatry, may be forthwith used as we shall think good. For neither the idols of the gentiles, nor the corruptions of those which offered, had not power⁸ to make the beef or mutton that was offered no good and wholesome meat for the sustenance of man, neither cause that a christian man could not eat them as beef and mutton ; but yet either to eat it at the table of idols before them, or else privately in his own house, when there was any

[² “ Όταν γὰρ Διόνυσον μὲν υἱὸν τοῦ Διὸς...γενενησθαι λέγωσι,...καὶ οἶνον ἐν τοῖς μυστηρίοις αὐτοῦ παραφέρωσιν, κ.τ.λ.—Just. Mart. Op. Par. 1742. Dialog. cum Tryph. Jud. 69. p. 167.]

[³ ...et si adhuc memini, Mithra signat illic in frontibus milites suos : celebrat et panis oblationem, &c.—Tertull. Op. Lut. 1641. De Præscr. Hæret. 40. p. 247.]

[⁴ This is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[⁵ M. Bucer, Letter to Joan. à Lasco, at the end of A briefe examination for the tyme, of a certaine declaration, &c. Lond. Jugge, fol. D 1 ; where self-same garment may serve.]

[⁶ The same to the Archb. of Canterbury, ibid. fol. A 3. Conf. Bucer. Script. Anglic. 1577. p. 682.]

[⁷ Yet followeth, Repl. 2.]

[⁸ Had power, Repl. 2.]

Things wickedly invented may have good use.

weak by that thought it an abominable thing, was not lawful; and yet the meat nevertheless the good creature of God, and which might be received with thanksgiving: so the abuse of the surplice and cope, &c. cannot cause but that they may be used as cloth and silk.

And, whereas he saith that they are changed, and made, of notes of anti-christianity, marks of Christianity, I say that they cannot be changed so by any decree or commandment; forasmuch as, notwithstanding that profession of change, the hearts of men, unto which every man must have regard unto, are not changed. For not so soon as the magistrate will say that these things shall be from henceforth used as things indifferent, forthwith men do use them so, but those only use them so which have knowledge; both the ignorant and the weak take them still otherwise.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The slender answering of T. C.

Your answer to these learned and famous men is not of any moment at all; for their reasons you answer only with words, when as indeed their only words (for their godliness, experience, and learning's sake) ought to be of greater credit than your reasons: but the aptness of your answers I refer to the judgment of the reader, seeing he hath both their words and yours before his eyes. This only I note, that something you will say, how unaptly soever, lest you should seem to give place to the plain truth. These vestures are neither "used at the tables of idols," nor with the offence of "the weak;" as I have shewed before: they are known of all men to be notes of the ministers of the gospel, as well as the bell is known to be rung to godly prayers and preachings, &c.; and therefore you have spoken, but answered nothing.

Chap. v. The Sixth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 60, Sect. 2.

Bullinger and Gualter.

Bullinger and Gualter, in the epistle before alleged, answering this question, whether we may wear such apparel as the papists do, say on this sort: "If we should have nothing common with them, then must we forsake all our churches, refuse all livings, not minister baptism, not say the Apostles' or Nicene creed, yea, and quite cast away the Lord's prayer; neither do you borrow any ceremonies of them. The matter of apparel was never taken away at the beginning of reformation, and is yet retained, not by the pope's law, but by the king's commandment, as an indifferent thing of mere policy. Yea truly, if you wear a cap or a peculiar kind of apparel, as a civil and politic thing, it smelleth neither of Judaism nor monachism. For these will seem to separate themselves from the civil and common life, and account a meritorious deed in the wearing of a peculiar garment. So Eustathius¹, bishop of Sebastia, was not simply condemned for wearing a peculiar kind of garment; but for that he did put religion in his garment. The canons of the council of Gangren, Laodicen, and of the sixth council, are well known². If in case any of the people be persuaded that these things savour of papism, monachism, or Judaism, let them be told the contrary, and perfectly instructed therein. And if so be, through the importunate crying out hereon before the people by some men, many be disquieted in their conscience, let them beware which so do, that they bring not greater yokes on their own necks, and provoke the queen's majesty, and bring many faithful ministers in such danger, as they cannot rid themselves out³ again⁴." Hitherto Bullinger.

Things wickedly invented may have good use.

Superstition in garments condemned.

T. C. Page 56, Sect. 1, 2, 3.

The rest of those things which M. Bucer, and those which M. Bullinger and Gualter bring, are all of that sort whereunto answer is made.

[¹ Eustachius, Answ.]

[² Μηδεὶς τῶν ἐν κλήρῳ καταλεγομένων ἀνοίκειον ἐσθῆτα ἀμφιεννύσθω,... ἀλλὰ στολαῖς κεχρησθῶ ταῖς ἤδη τοῖς ἐν κλήρῳ καταλεγομένοις ἀπονευηθείσαις. —Concil. Quinisext. can. 27. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. VI. col. 1154. Conf. Concil. Laod. cans. 21, 2. ibid. Tom. I. col. 1500; and see before, page 29, note 8.]

[³ Out of again, Answ.]

[⁴ Si nulla re cum illis communicare liceret, oporteret et templa omnia deserere, nulla accipere stipendia, non uti baptismo, non recitare symbolum apostolicum et Nicenum, adeoque abjicere orationem dominicam. Neque vos mutuatis ab iis ulla ceremonias. Res vestiari[a] ab initio reformationis nunquam fuit abolita, et retinetur adhuc, non lege papistica, sed vi edicti regii, ut res media et politica. Ita sane, si ut re civili utamini pileo et veste peculiari, hoc non redolet Judaismum neque monachismum. Nam ii volunt videri a civili vita separari, et constituunt meritum in peculiari sua veste. Sic Eustachius, Sebastiae episcopus, damnatus est non simpliciter propter peculiarem vestem, sed quod in veste religionem constitueret. Noti sunt Gangren. Concilii canones, Laodiceni et sexti synodi. Quod si ex plebe nonnulli sunt persuasi redolere hoc papismum, Judaismum, et monachismum, admoneantur et recte de iis instituantur. Quod si importunis quorundam clamoribus, hac de re ad vulgus profusis, multi inquieti reddantur, videant, qui hoc faciunt, ne graviora sibi onera imponant, regiamque majestatem irritent: denique multos fideles ministros in discrimine adducant; ex quo vix emergere queant.—Bullinger's Letter to Sampson and Humphrey, 1566, in Strype, Annals, Vol. I. Append. No. xxiv.]

Temples of idols converted to christian churches.

Only this they add, that, if the people do abuse and pervert those ceremonies, they ought to be better instructed: which is a counsel not so convenient, that the ministers and pastors which have so many necessary points to bestow their time on, and to inform the people of, should be driven to cut off their time appointed thereto, to teach them not to abuse these things, which if they use never so well, they can gain nothing, and to take heed that they hurt not themselves at those things which in their best estate do no good, especially when one sermon of the taking of them away, joined with authority to execute it, may do more good than a thousand sermons without authority.

Besides that it is absurd that ceremonies, which ought to be helpers to promote the doctrine, should become lets and hinderances, whilst the minister is occupied in teaching to beware of the abuse of them and of superstition. And it is as much as if one should be set to watch a child all day long lest he hurt himself with the knife, when as by taking away the knife quite from him the danger is avoided, and the service of the man better employed. And so it followeth that, although the church may appoint ceremonies and rites, yet it cannot appoint these that have great incommodity and no commodity, great offence and no edifying.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You have omitted divers things in the words of these learned men, whereunto you have not answered one word; as the reader by conference may perceive; and here you have also willingly passed over that which toucheth you something pinchingly, in these words of M. Bullinger and M. Gualter, scil.: “And if so be, through the importunate crying out hereon before the people, &c.”

The reason returned upon himself.

If to preach the truth of the right use of these ceremonies be not so convenient, “because the pastors have so many necessary points, &c.,” how cometh it to pass that you and your partakers have so pestered your sermons and books therewith, and so long time taught the people nothing else but contempt of all good order and obedience in such matters, and have stirred them up against the true preachers of the gospel, and against their magistrates and rulers for the self-same thing? Is it not as convenient for us to root out of the people’s minds errors touching things indifferent, as it is for you to ingraft them? or is not the doctrine of the true and lawful use of indifferent things, of due obedience towards laws and magistrates, a necessary doctrine?

The doctrine of things indifferent necessary.

Where as you say, “It is absurd that ceremonies, which ought to be helpers to promote the doctrine, should become lets and hinderances, &c.;" I will not say you speak absurdly, but undoubtedly you speak unadvisedly. For will you have things indifferent abrogated so soon as they be abused, "lest they should become lets and hinderances, whilst the minister is occupied in teaching, &c.?" then take away tithes, lands, meats, &c.; the abuse whereof must of necessity oftentimes be reprehended in sermons, and the true use taught; and make all things common, that the preachers in their sermons may be occupied about great matters. Do you not see that doctrine of things indifferent is necessary? Understand you not that the taking away of the things from the eyes doth not by and by root the opinion out of the heart? Things abused must not always be taken away when they are abused, but the right use must be taught, and the abuse reprov'd.

[¹ These, Repl. 1 and 2.]

Temples of idols converted to christian churches.

Things abused must not by and by be taken away.

The "child," when he hath discretion, and is able to be instructed, though he sometime "hurt himself with the knife," yet must not the same be altogether "taken from him," but he must be rebuked for using it so indiscreetly, and taught to use it better. Shall the rich and costly apparel be taken from princes, nobles, and men and women of estate, and they brought to a popularity therein, because there is great abuse oftentimes in such apparel, and many provocations to evil? No, truly; but such kinds of abuses are to be by the word of God reprov'd. Neither doth such instructions and doctrine in matters indifferent hinder preachers from weightier matters. Why did the apostles make their decree of abstaining a suffocato et sanguine, "from that that is strangled and blood?" or St Paul, of praying bare-headed or covered? 1 Corinth. xi. Which things afterward might grow to abuse, if they had not thought the doctrine of ceremonies to be convenient.

Acts xv.

Touching "the great incommmodity and offence" that you imagine to be in this apparel, it is but your fancy, which take the apparel to be the cause of your niceness, contempt, disobedience, contention, and such like, remaining in you, when indeed it is nothing else but singularity, and preposterous zeal: wherefore that is to be removed out of the heart, rather than the apparel from the back. To be short, that which you imagine of any opinion of the religion in this apparel, or superstition, or any such like offence, it is but a mere imagination to cloke and cover the corruptions of the mind before mentioned.

Things
wickedly invented may have n^t good use.

Chapter v. The Seventh Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 61, Sect. 1.

I have the rather set down these men's sayings at large, because they be both pithy, learned, and wholly to the confutation of your assertion. Wherefore I conclude that a christian magistrate may retain any civil, politic, or ecclesiastical orders and rites, of whomsoever they were invented, or howsoever they have been abused, so that, first, they be not against the word of God; secondly, that justification and remission of sins be not attributed unto them; thirdly, that the church be not troubled with the multitude of them; fourthly, that they be not decreed as necessary, and not to be changed; and, last of all, that men be not so tied unto them but that by occasion they may be omitted, so that it be without offence and contempt.

T. C. Page 56, Sect. 4.

And, although they have all these properties which you recite, yet, if they be not to edifying, if not to God his glory, if not comely and agreeable to the simplicity of the gospel of Christ crucified, they may not be established.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is sufficient if they pertain to order and comeliness (as I have before declared); the judgment whereof doth not belong to every private man, but to such only as have authority in the church; to whose determination in such matters all other of duty are bound to submit themselves.

Chapter v. The Eighth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 62, Sect. 1.

A difference between worshipping of false gods, and of the true God
falsely².

Yet one thing I must admonish you of, that there is a difference to be made betwixt those things which were wholly dedicated to false gods, and to be used in the worshipping of them, and those things which were used in the false worshipping of the true God: for the papists

[¹ A is not in Def. A.]

[² A difference between the worshipping of false gods and the worshipping of the true God falsely, Answ. 2.]

herein differ from the gentiles, that they acknowledge and confess the true God, and believe the same articles of faith that we do, but yet worship him not aright, nor believe on him in all points as the word of God prescribeth. And therefore, if things abused of the gentiles, and invented by them, may be used of Christians, much more may things invented and abused by papists.

Things wickedly invented may have a good use.

T. C. Page 56, Sect. 4.

Concerning your distinction, whereby you lessen the idolatry of the papists, I have shewed the vanity thereof.

JO. WHITGIFT.

And I have answered whatsoever you have there said³: but yet your reply in that place will not serve every circumstance of this place, except you will say with the Stoics, that peccata sunt paria: "all sins are equal."

Chapter v. The Ninth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 62, Sect. 1.

But of this matter I mind also to speak something in the second part of this Admonition.

T. C. Page 56, Sect. 5.

But of this matter you say you will speak again. Indeed so you do, and again, wherein you confound the memory and understanding of the reader, and declare yourself not only ignorant of Aristotle's rule of καθόλου πρῶτον (which is to speak of one thing generally and once for all), but even to be void of that order, which men have commonly by the natural logic of reason. Neither can you excuse yourself in saying that the Admonition giveth you so oftentimes occasion to speak of them, and so to lay the fault upon it, for that it, being written by divers persons of the same matters, whereof one knew not of another's doing, cannot be blamed for the repetition of one thing twice, when as you cannot escape blame, which might have gathered easily into one place that which is said of them in divers: which thing although it be not so easy for me to do in your book as it was for you to do in theirs, yet I will assay to do it both in this and in all other points that follow; not thinking thereby to bring this treatise of yours to any good order (for that were to cast it new again, and then you would complain of your mind perverted), but that I might remedy this so great disorder, which may be done⁴ without changing anything of that which you have set down.

A manifest untruth.

[³ See Vol. I. pages 333, &c.]

[⁴ Disorder as far as may be done, Repl. 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

I have done as you ought to have done, if you had meant plainly; for I have followed verbatim the book that I confute in the same order that it is written, which I think he that confuteth ought to do. That the Admonition was “written by divers persons, the one not knowing of another’s doing,” cannot be true; for both the parts have one title, they be in one volume, they were printed in one letter, at one time, by one and the same printer, and came abroad together; neither were they ever separated that I know or can understand. Moreover, this bewrayeth all, and condemneth you for one that hath no conscience in writing untruths, that in the beginning of the Admonition mention is made of both of these treatises in these words: “Two treatises you have here ensuing, beloved in Christ, which ye must read, &c.¹” And in the end of both these treatises it is thus written: “We have thought good, in the latter end² of our book, for sundry considerations, to certify you, beloved brethren, of the reasons that have moved us, who are the authors of these treatises, to keep back our names, &c.³” Finally, the order and manner of both these treatises, the style, the quotations, &c. do manifestly convince you of false witness-bearing: but it is too usual with you.

I am not so cunning in Aristotle, that I can be so bold as to attribute that unto him which is not to be found in him; as you do in this place: for, though he speak much of this rule *καθόλου πρῶτον*⁴, yet hath he no such thing as you father upon him in this place.

It is meet that he which writeth a book of any matters should of one matter speak fully in one place; but he that confuteth must follow his order whom he confuteth. Which if you had done in my book, as I have done in theirs, either would not your unfaithful dealing have been so much, or else must it sooner or easilier have been espied. Your taunts I leave to yourself that have so good a grace in them.

[¹ See Vol. I. page 140.]

[² End is not in Def. A.]

[³ Adm. to Parl. fol. C. i. 2: where this latter.]

[⁴ Aristot. Op. Lut. Par. 1629. Analyt. Poster. Lib. II. capp. xvii. xviii. Tom. I. pp. 178, 9.]

Chapter v. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 56, Sect. ult.

And, if there be any other arguments touching any of these points in other places, which I have not gathered together into one, the fault is in this, that I could not bestow so much time in making a harmony of the things which are at so great discord, and then that which is left out shall be answered in place where I shall find it. Now let us see M. Doctor's δεύτερον πλοῦν, and second navigation touching apparel, whether it be any happier, or have any better success than the first.

JO. WHITGIFT.

A proper excuse, if anything fall out in the whole book which you cannot answer; as there be divers which you have not answered.

Divers things concerning apparel in other places of the Answer⁵.

Chapter vi. The First Division.

Admonition.

Now we must have surplices devised by pope Adrian⁶.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 105, Sect. 1, 2.

The impurities you find in the administration of baptism be these: "Surplice, &c.⁷" Touching the "surplice," and such like apparel, I have spoken before sufficiently: the first inventor of it (which you say to be pope Adrian) doth make it neither better nor worse; and yet it was used long before Adrian's time; neither can you prove him to be the first inventor thereof. It is certain that such kind of vesture hath been used in the ministration of the sacraments long before any corruption of doctrine took place in the church; as it appeareth both by Hierome in his first book Adversus

[⁵ Cartwright has hitherto followed the order of Whitgift's Answer: here, as he has just apprised his readers, he collects from some later parts of the Answer matters which bear upon the subject of the apparel. Whitgift of course in his Defence follows Cartwright's Reply.]

[⁶ This is only a portion of that paragraph of the Admonition which is inserted in the place from which the succeeding answer is taken.]

[⁷ Here we find in Answ. instead of &c. the sentence completed: interrogatories ministered to the infant, godfathers and godmothers, holy fonts, crossing.]

White garment used in the ministration¹.

Pelagianos, where he maketh manifest mention of a white garment used in the administration of sacrifice by the bishop, priest and deacon²; and also Chrysostom, Hom. 6. to the people of Antioch, who speaketh of the like garment worn in the church³. Those that answered the Examiner do but childishly cavil at these two places, which indeed be plain of themselves and evident; and so is that of Hierome's also, upon the xlv. of Ezechiel: "The religion of God hath one habit in the ministration, and another in common use and life⁴." Read the place considerably; and it shall easily appear that Hierome meaneth as well of christian ministers as of Jewish priests.

But of the use of this and other apparel prescribed in this church to be worn by ministers, I have spoken partly before, and am ready to speak more as occasion shall be offered. In the mean time, the surplice is not of the substance of baptism, neither required as necessary to the administration thereof, but as comely and decent.

T. C. Page 57, Sect. 1.

In the 105. page, M. Doctor, to prove the use of the surplice, to draw out his book into some competent volume, borroweth certain places of the Examiner; for answer whereunto I will refer the reader to that which is answered unto the Examination⁵, as to a full and sufficient answer, wherein I will rest; and, when M. Doctor hath proved that which he saith, that it is but a childish cavil, he shall then hear further.

In the mean season, it is but a slender reply to so learned an answer (that proveth both out of other authors and out of those same which the Examiner citeth, that by a white garment is meant a comely apparel, and not slovenly) to say it is but a childish cavil, which a D. of Divinity and of forty years of age cannot answer. The place of Hierome upon the

[¹ Of white garments in the church, Answ. 2.]

[² Quæ sunt, rogo, inimicitiae contra Deum, si tunicam habuero mundiore; si episcopus, presbyter, et diaconus, et reliquus ordo ecclesiasticus in administratione sacrificiorum candida veste processerint?—Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Lib. 1. Dialog. adv. Pelag. Tom. IV. Pars 11. col. 502.]

[³ Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Matt. Hom. lxxxii. Tom. VII. p. 789. See before, page 24, note 2.]

[⁴ Porro religio divina alterum habitum habet in ministerio, alterum in usu viteque communi.—Hieron. Op. Comm. Lib. XIII. in Ezech. Proph. cap. xlv. Tom. III. col. 1029.]

[⁵ The books meant are, A brief examination, &c., already repeatedly referred to, and, An answer for the tyme, to the examination put in print, &c. Lond. 1566. The question of the habits is specially discussed in the latter from p. 88 to the end.]

xliv. of Ezekiel, the more it be considered, the more shall appear the truth of the Answer.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You have not answered one word of this, but only shifted it off: I purpose not at this time to unrip the answer to the Examiner, except you had taken the pains to set it down. Both the places of Hierome are to be seen: in the one he sheweth that "in the administration of the sacraments the bishop, priest, and deacon, did wear a white vesture⁶;" and in the other he saith that "the religion of God hath one habit in the ministration, and another in the common use and life⁷." Join these two places together, and see whether the words of Hierome be manifest or no. And, that it may evidently appear that at this time wherein Hierome lived the manner was to wear white garments in the time of divine service and administration of sacraments, I will recite the words of the fourth council of Carthage, at the which there were present 214. bishops, among whom was St Augustine: *Diaconus tempore oblationis tantum vel lectionis alba induatur*⁸: "Let the deacon wear a white vesture only in the time of the oblation and reading." Canone. 41. And this may be a sufficient confutation to whatsoever is spoken of these places of Hierome in the answer to the Examiner.

A white garment in the ministration used in Hierome's time. Hier. Lib. i. advers. Pelag. in 44. Ezech.

Conc. Carth. iv. can. 41.

Chap. vi. The Second Division.

Admonition⁹.

And, as for the apparel, though we have been long borne in hand, and yet are, that it is for order and decency commanded, yet¹¹ we know and have proved that there is neither order nor comeliness nor obedience in using it. There is no order in it, but confusion; no comeliness, but deformity; no obedience, but disobedience, both against God and the prince¹².

*Apparel.*¹⁰

[⁶ Hieron. Op. Lib. i. Dialog. adv. Pelag. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 502. See above, note 2.]

[⁷ Id. Comm. Lib. XIII. in Ezech. Proph. cap. xlv. Tom. III. col. 1029. See above, note 4.]

[⁸ Concil. Carthag. iv. can. 41. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 1203; where alba utatur.]

[⁹ Here again, Whitgift, following Cartwright in his Reply, passes to another place of the Admonition and the Answer.]

[¹⁰ This is inserted from Adm. and Answ.]

[¹¹ Commanded and yet, Adm.]

[¹² The portions of the Admonition as far as obstinate, below, page 72, form one paragraph in Answ.]

Answer to the Admonition, Page 236, the last line but one,
and Page 237, Sect. 1.

To all this also I have answered before, I mean to all the reasons here alleged; as for bare words, they prevail with none but such as have respect to the persons, and not to the matter. And therefore I omit these words of pleasure which you use when you say that "in this apparel there is no order, but confusion; no comeliness, but deformity; no obedience, but disobedience, both against God and the prince."

Disobedience to the prince in civil matters is disobedience to God.

It is not every private man's part to define what is order and comeliness in external matters being indifferent, but is proper to them only to whom God hath committed the government of his church; whose orders and laws (not being against the word of God) whosoever doth disobey, disobeyeth both God and the prince; as you do in disobeying the prince's laws in these matters.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Nothing is said to this; although some part of it necessarily requireth an answer.

Chapter vi. The Third Division.

Admonition.

We marvel that they could espy in the¹ last synod, that a grey amice, which is but a garment of dignity, should be a garment (as they say) defiled with superstition, and yet that copes, caps, surplices, tippets, and such like baggage, the preaching signs of popish priesthood, the pope's creatures, kept in the same form to this end, to bring dignity and reverence to the ministers and sacraments, should be retained still, and not abolished².

Answer to the Admonition, Page 237, Sect. 2.

It is well that you seem to justify the "grey amice," because the bishops have disallowed of it "in their synod." Truly this is your conscience and religion, to be always ad oppositum, and to disallow that which law and authority alloweth, and allow that which they disallow. The next way, as I think, to drive you unto conformity in apparel were to make a strait law, that no man should wear such kind of apparel; because you love to be contrary to laws and good orders.

[¹ Their, Adm. and Answ.]

[² Nullus nec decanus, &c. nec rector, nec quisquam ex illo ordine quocunque nomine censeatur, utetur posthac amictu illo quem appellant graium amicum, aut alia ulla veste simili superstitione contaminata. Sed in ecclesiis quisque suis utentur tantum linea illa veste, quæ adhuc regio mandato retinetur, et scholastica epomide, quæ suo cujusque scholastico gradui et loco conveniat.—Lib. Quorund. Canon. Anno 1571. in A collection of Articles, &c. Lond. 1675. pp. 227, 8.]

T. C. Page 57, Sect. 3, 4, 5.

Now I will desire the reader to turn³ unto the 237, 238, 239, 240, 242 pages, to see whether at this third voyage Master Doctor bringeth any better merchandize. Where first he surmiseth an untruth, as though the Admonition misliked of the taking away of the grey amice, where it saith only that there was less cause to take that away than the surplice, &c. Wherein there is nothing but the truth said; for, because that was used in⁴ few churches, and but of few also in those few churches, therefore, if there were cause to take away that, there was greater to take away the surplice. And to take away the amice out of the church, and leave the surplice, &c. is to heal a scratch, and leave a wound unhealed.

Now, whereas you say that we are "always ad oppositum"⁵ and that, if the law commanded straitly that we should⁶ wear none of this apparel, that then we would wear; if it should be answered again that you do servire scenæ, that is, that you are a time-server, you see we might speak with more likelihood than you. But we will not take (as you do) the judgment of God out of his hands, but will attend patiently the revelation and discovering of that which is now hid both in you and us⁷.

I have served as few times as you.

And, although you will grant us neither learning nor conscience, yet you might afford us so much wit, as that we would not willingly and of purpose want those commodities of life, which we might otherwise enjoy as well as you, if we had that gift of conformity which you have.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The words of the Admonition touching the grey amice be these: "We marvel that they could espy in their last synod, that a grey amice, which is but a garment of dignity, should be a garment (as they say) defiled with superstition, and yet that copes, &c." Do they not say that the amice "is but a garment of dignity, &c." ? consider their words well, and you shall see that Master Doctor hath said truly.

[³ Return, Def. B.]

[⁴ Used but in, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ So Repl. 2: the other edit. have appositum.] [⁶ Would, Def. B.]

[⁷ Hid both in you and in us, Repl. 1 and 2: the word hid was printed had in Repl. 1, and has been altered with a pen.]

The grey amice was justly taken away, because the use of it is not established by any law of this realm, as the use of other vestures be; and in mine opinion the bishops deserved commendation in so doing; for thereby they declared that they will not suffer any rites or ornaments to be used in this church, but such only as are by public authority established.

Some men delight to be contrary to times.

Experience hath taught me that divers men be of that nature, that they have a delight in opposing themselves to the present estate; and I see it by proof to be a great fault in divers of you.

Rom. xii.

Rom. xiii.

I have hitherto "served" as few contrary "times" as you have done. As for "the gift of conformity," which you say I have, I thank God for it, I have learned to conform myself to the time in that sense that St Paul hath willed me so to do, Rom. xii., and to laws also and magistrates, as I am likewise commanded in the xiii. chapter of the same epistle.

What "commodities" you "want" that I have, I cannot conjecture: your meat and drink is provided with less trouble and charges unto you, and in more delicate and dainty manner than mine is; your ease and pleasure ten times more; you do what you list, go when you list, come when you list, speak when you list at your pleasure. What would you have more? I know not why you should complain, except you be of the same disposition with the Franciscan friars, who, when they had filled their bellies at other men's tables, were wont to cry out and say, O quanta patimur, &c. Some men are delighted to be fed at other men's tables, and prefer popular fame before gold and silver.

The Faults wherewith the Admonitors charge the apparel answered.

Chapter vii. The First Division.

Admonition.

But they are as the garments of the idol, to which we should say, Avaunt, and get thee hence. They are as the garments of Ba- ^h Esay xxx.
laamites, of popish priests, enemies to God and all Christians. ^{22.}

Answer to the Admonition, Page 237, Sect. 3, 4;
and Page 238, Sect. 1.

But you say, "they are as the garments of the idol, to the which we should say, Avaunt, and get thee hence.

They are as the garments of Balaamites, of popish priests, enemies to God and all Christians." Be it so: so were all things in Hierico accursed and an abomination to the Lord; neither was it lawful for the Israelites to touch anything thereof; and yet was the gold, and the silver, and the brazen and iron vessels, carried into the treasure-house of the Lord, and consecrated unto him. Josue vi.

Temples of idols converted to christian churches. Cursed things consecrated to God.

Gedeon was commanded to take and sacrifice that ox of his father's to God, which his father had fed and brought up to be sacrificed to Baal, yea, and to burn that ox with the self-same wood that was consecrated and dedicated to the idol Baal. Judic. vi.

Gedeon sacrificed an ox consecrated to Baal².

Our forefathers took the temples dedicated wholly to idols, yea, to devils, and most abominably defiled with devilish and abominable service, and turned them into holy churches, where Christ should be worshipped.

T. C. Page 57, Sect. 6, 7.

Whereas you say that the accursed things of Jericho, and the ox that was fed to be sanctified unto Baal, and the wood consecrated unto the idol, were converted to the service of the living God; when you shall prove that the surplice is so necessary to the service of God as gold and silver and other metal, and as oxen and wood, whereof the first sort were such as without the which the temple could not be built, the other, such as were expressly commanded of God to be used in his service, then I will confess that this place maketh something for you. And yet, if your copes and surplices, &c. should have such a purgation by fire as those metals had, or ever the Lord would admit them into his treasure-house, and should be driven to pass from popery unto the gospel by the chimney, the fire would make such wrack with them, that they should need have better legs than your arguments to bring them into the church.

Here you disport yourself with your own imagination. No such purgation to be found in that place.

Moreover, do you not see here that you have not loosed the knot, but cut it? For the authors of the Admonition object the place of Esay xxx.; and you object again the places¹ of Deuteronomy, and of the Judges: this is to oppose sword against sword; in stead that you should have first holden out your buckler, and latched⁵ the blow of your adversary. As for churches, it hath been answered that they have a profitable use, and therefore very evil compared with the surplice; which, beside that it bringeth no profit, hurteth also, as is before said.

Chap. xxx.
22, 3

[¹ Consecrate, Answ. 2.]

[² Gedeon sacrificed to God an idolatrous ox, Answ. 2.]

[³ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2; which omits xxx. in the text.]

[⁴ Place, Def. B.]

[⁵ Latched: caught.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Temples of idols converted to christian churches.

Things dedicated to idols may be converted to God's
honour.

That "wood," that "gold," and that "ox," &c. was not so "necessary," but that both God might have been served, and "the temple builded without them;" and therefore that is no answer. For, although "gold, wood, oxen, &c." be "necessary," yet the gold and silver found in Jericho, the ox reserved by Gedeon's father, and wood that was consecrated to Baal, was not so necessary; for there might have been other "gold, silver, wood, oxen, &c." provided. In that God commanded these things to be done, you know that St Augustine (in the epistle ad Publicolam, in the words before rehearsed) doth conclude a general doctrine, that things dedicated to idols may be converted to common uses and to the honour of God¹. For he useth the self-same places to prove the same, and answereth that which may be alleged to the contrary out of Deuteronomy. So doth it also the place of Esay, quoted in the margent of the Admonition; which answer if it will not satisfy you, then do I further refer you to that which I have also before alleged out of M. Calvin, writing upon the xxiii. of Exodus, verse 24.² But this place of Esay, and such like, are unaptly alleged against the apparel now used, being nothing of that nature that those things be whereof the prophet in that place speaketh.

You say, "if our copes and surplices, &c. should have such a purgation by fire, &c." I pray you, where read you of any such "purgation by fire of those metals" before they were admitted into the Lord's treasure-house? And what "purgation by fire" could there be of the wood, or of the ox, before they were used in the sacrifice and service of the Lord? There is no such purging of the things taken in Jericho mentioned in that chapter, but the contrary; for thus it is written: "After they burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein; only the silver and gold, and the vessels of brass and iron, they put into the treasure-house of the Lord;" and in the place before, where Josua is commanded to reserve these things, there is no commandment of any such purging.

As your common answer is this, that such things "have profitable uses," and therefore may be retained, though they were consecrated to idols (which is but a shift of your own, without any ground) so I say that these vestures have a decent and comely use, and be referred to order, and therefore may be retained likewise, although they were used in idolatry. And, if you shall answer and say that there may be other things used more comely and decently, then I reply that so there may be places as commodious as these churches; gold, silver, wood, &c. as good and as profitable as that. And, if you object that they be not comely and decent, then I say unto you that it is your part, and the part of all those that be obedient, to submit yourselves to the judgment of those that be in authority, except they command such things as be contrary to the commandment of God.

[¹ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Public. Epist. xlvii. 3. Tom. II. col. 111. See before, page 31, note 4.]

[² Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Harm. in Quat. Libr. Mos. Sec. Præcept. Tom. I. p. 472. See before, pages 33, 4, note 3.]

Chapter vii. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 238, Sect. 2, 3.

To be short, no devil, no idol, no pope, can so defile the nature or form (not being contrary to the scriptures) of any of God's creatures, that the liberty of a christian man should be taken away in using and not using them⁴.

No man can defile the nature and form of things³.

And I say again, with M. Bucer, that "for anything to be a note of antichrist is not in⁵ the nature of any creature in itself (for to that end nothing was made of God), but it hangeth altogether of consenting to antichrist's religion, and the professing thereof. The which consent and profession being changed into the consent and profession of Christianity, there can stick in the things themselves no note or mark of antichrist's religion. The use of bells was a mark of antichristianity in our churches, when the people by them were called to masses, and when they were rung against tempests; now they are a token of Christianity, when the people by them are gathered together to the gospel of Christ, and other holy actions, &c."⁶

Bucer.

[³ The nature and form of things no man can defile, Answ. 2.]

[⁴ In using or not using of them, Answ.]

[⁵ Def. B. omits in.]

[⁶ M. Bucer, Letter to Joan. à Lasco, at the end of A brieve examination for the tyme, of a certaine declaration, &c.—Lond. Jugge, fol. D 1. See before, pages 38, 9.]

How the apparel serveth to edification.

T. C. Page 57, Sect. ult.

"To be short," saith M. Doctor, when he reciteth me almost a whole side word for word, as he hath cited before, where he hath had his answer.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Surely this jesting spirit was never in any of the apostles or martyrs of Christ's church that I can read; but, to pass it over, M. Doctor's "short" is very shortly answered; the cause whereof I refer to the reader. Howsoever you jest out the matter, you have neither answered M. Doctor's "to be short," nor that which is translated.

Chapter vii. The Third Division.

Admonition.

They serve not to edification.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 238, Sect. 3.

Ceremonies
do not edify of themselves, but tend¹ to edification.

You say also that they do not edify. If you say that they do not edify of themselves, you say truly; for only the Holy Ghost on this sort doth edify by the ministry of the word. But, if you say they edify not at all, that is, that they do not tend to edifying, as other ceremonies and things used in the church (as pulpit, church, kneeling, singing, and such like), which be appointed for order and decency, do, then speak you that which you are not able by sound arguments to justify.

JO. WHITGIFT.

To this not one word.

Chapter vii. The Fourth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 238, Sect. ult.

Peter Martyr, in his epistle written to M. Hooper, thinketh that they do edify, after a sort, as other ceremonies do. And so doth M. Bucer also, in his epistle written to M. Alasco.

T. C. Page 57, Sect. ult.

After this he setteth himself to prove that they do edify²; and first³ by M. Bucer's and M. Martyr's authority; and yet in their words before alleged there is not a word of edifying. If he gather it of their words, How the apparel serveth to edification.

[¹ But yet tend, Answ. 2.]

[² They edify, Repl. 1 and 2.] [³ And that first, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

the answer is already made.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I tell you it is in their epistles, not in their “words before alleged.” M. Bucer’s words be these: “Now, if any church Bucer. judge and have experience (such as I doubt not there are many at these days in Germany) that the use of such vesture bringeth some commendation to the holy ministration, and thereby helpeth somewhat in the way of comeliness and order, to the increase of faith; what, I pray you, can be brought out of the scriptures why that church is not left to her own judgment in this matter, neither therefore to be contemned, or to be called into question for her judgment’s sake? That church verily will keep in these things a mean agreeable to the cross of Christ, and will diligently attend that no abuse creep into it⁴.” Hitherto M. Bucer. To the like effect also writeth M. Martyr in the epistle before named⁵.

Chapter vii. The Fifth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 239, Sect. 1.

Furthermore, that they do edify, it is manifest, first, The apparel doth tend to edifying for three causes⁶. because they are by a lawful magistrate, by lawful authority, for order and decency appointed in the church, without any manner of superstition or suspicion of the same.

T. C. Page 57, Sect. ult.

Then he bringeth reasons to prove it; whereof in the first he seemeth to reason that, because it is commanded by a lawful magistrate, and lawful authority, therefore it edifieth. As though a lawful magistrate doth nothing at any time unlawfully, or as though a lawful and godly⁷ magistrate doth not sometimes command things which are inconvenient and unlawful. Saul was a lawful magistrate, and did command unlawful things. David was a lawful and godly magistrate; and yet there slipped

[⁴ M. Bucer, Letter to Joan. à Lasco, at the end of A briefe examination for the tyme, &c. Lond. Jugge, fol. D 1. 2; where many this day in Germany, and church is not to be left.]

[⁵ P. Martyr’s Letter to John Hoper Byshop, &c. ibid. fol. C 1. Conf. Epist. Theolog. ad calc. Loc. Comm. Heidelb. 1613. pp. 1087, 8.]

[⁶ Ceremonies do edify by 3. reasons, Ans. 2.]

[⁷ And a godly, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

How apparel serveth to edification.

from him commandments which were neither lawful nor godly. But he addeth, that it is done "for order and for decency, without superstition or suspicion of it." This is that which is in controversy, and ought to be proved; and M. Doctor still taketh it as granted, and still faulteth in the petition of the principle, wherewith he chargeth others.

JO. WHITGIFT.

That which is appointed in the church by a lawful magistrate, and by lawful authority, for order and decency, without any superstition or suspicion of superstition, doth edify, as other orders do; but it is certain that the apparel now used is so appointed; ergo, it doth edify, as other orders do.

You cavil at the major, and bring in the examples of "Saul and David," to prove that "a lawful magistrate did command unlawful things;" but you omit the other circumstances contained in the major, and therefore you answer not to the purpose. The minor, you say, is "in controversy," and I do "fault in the petition of the principle." Surely I do petere that principium that no good subject can deny. For the queen's majesty is a lawful magistrate: the authority of parliament is a lawful authority: her majesty by that authority hath appointed this apparel, and that, as it is protested, for comeliness and decency, without any superstition; ergo, the minor is true. If you will yet doubt of comeliness and decency, then I still say unto you that what is comely and decent is not every man's part to judge, but the magistrate's, and such as have authority in the church.

Chapter vii. The Sixth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 239, Sect. 2.

Secondly, because we are by due proof and experience taught that such as have worn this apparel, and do wear it, by the ministry of the word have greatly edified, and do daily.

T. C. Page 58, Sect. 1.

The second reason is, that they that wear this apparel have edified, and do edify; which is as if a man would say: The midwives which ^{Exod. i. 19.¹} lied unto Pharaoh did much good among² the Israelites; ergo, their lying did much good. If he will say, the comparison is not like, because the one is not sin in his own nature, whereas the other is sin, then take this: One that stammereth and stuteth in his tongue edifieth the people; therefore stammering and stutting is good to edify. For what if the Lord give his blessing unto his word, and to other good gifts, which he hath that preacheth and weareth a surplice, &c.; is it to be thought therefore that he liketh well of the wearing of that apparel? This is to assign the cause of a thing to that which is not only not the cause thereof, but some hinderance also, and slaking of that whereof it is supposed to be a cause. For a man may rather reason, that, forasmuch as they which preach with surplice, &c. edify (notwithstanding that they thereby drive away some, and to other some give suspicion of evil, &c.), then³ if they preached without wearing any such things⁴ they should edify much more. And yet, if a man were assured to gain a thousand by doing of that which may offend, or cause to fall one brother, he ought not to do it.

[¹ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[² Amongst, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

How apparel serveth to edification.

They that are driven away for that cause do give suspicion of anabaptism.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Indeed, if this apparel were of that nature that a lie is, your similitude of the "midwives" had some shew in it; and yet must you of necessity confess that their "lying" to Pharaon "did much good" per accidens; for otherwise the men-children of the Israelites, and even Moses himself, had been murdered; and you are not ignorant that divers writers in this respect excuse that doing of theirs. You know likewise what the opinion of some is, touching that kind of lie that is called officiosum mendacium; but, for my part, I am in that point of St Augustine's judgment⁵. But your similitude is not like; and, if it were, yet makes it against you; for "their lying did good;" as I have said before.

Your other similitude of "stammering and stutting" is ridiculous, and argueth your great contempt of lawful and decent orders. The laws of this church have prescribed this apparel to the ministers of the word as decent, orderly, and comely, the same laws have inhibited those to preach that refuse to submit themselves unto such orders. Wherefore, seeing they be appointed as fit garments for preachers, and none may preach except he receive them, they do edify, not

[³ Repl. 2. omits then.]

[⁴ Thing, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ Unde etiam sciri potest, utrum et tunc habeat aliquam causam, sicut ipse putat, officiosi mendacii, existimans falsa narratione hominem terribilem posse a libidine cohiberi, atque hoc modo etiam ad spiritualia se consulere mentiendo arbitretur? Quo genere admissio atque approbatio, omnis omnino fidei disciplina subvertitur: &c.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Lib. de Mendac. cap. viii. 11. Tom. VI. col. 427. Conf. ejusd. ad Hieron. Epist. xxviii. cap. iii. 3. Tom. II. cols. 46, 7.]

How apparel serveth to edification.

by themselves, as I have before declared, but per accidens; as all other such like things do. For neither the church, nor the pulpit, nor the bells, nor kneeling, and such other, do otherwise edify than per accidens.

Touching offence that is taken at the wearing of this apparel, I have shewed before that it is an offence taken, and not given; neither is it to be considered whether men be offended or no, but whether they have any just cause of offence. Many be offended with our churches, and will neither hear sermon nor receive the sacraments in them; we must not therefore pull down our churches, or cease to preach and administer the sacraments in them. You must remember the distinction of scandalum acceptum and scandalum datum, "an offence given," and "an offence taken."

Chapter vii. The Seventh Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 239, Sect. 3.

Thirdly, because also by experience we daily understand that such as consent in wearing this apparel consent also in all other points of doctrine, and keep the peace of the church, which is one of the principal causes of edifying; contrariwise, such as refuse the same apparel not only dissent and disagree among themselves, but fall into divers and strange opinions without stay, and slander the gospel with their contentiousness, and tear in pieces the church of Christ with their factions and schisms, and be the cause why both the word of God and christian magistrates be almost generally condemned.

T. C. Page 58, Sect. 2.

The third reason is, that they which consent in wearing the surplices consent also in all other points of doctrine, and they that do not wear it do not consent, not so much as amongst themselves. If this consent in the points of religion be in the surplice, cope, &c., tell us, I beseech you, whether in the matter, or in the form, or in what hid and unknown quality standeth it. If it be in that the ministers use all one apparel, then it is marvel that, this being so strong a bond to hold them together in godly unity, that it was never commanded of Christ, nor practised of prophets or apostles, neither¹ of no other reformed churches. I had thought wholly that those things which the Lord appointeth to maintain and keep unity with, and especially the holy sacraments of baptism and of the Lord's supper, had been strong enough to have first of all knit us unto the Lord, and therefore also to his doctrine, and then one of us to another, and that the dissentings² in such a ceremony as a surplice, &c. neither should nor could in those that pertain unto God break the unity of the Spirit, which is bound with the bond of truth. And, although there be which like not this apparel, that think otherwise than either their brethren, or than indeed they ought to do, yet a man may find greater dissent amongst those which are united in surplice and cope, &c. than there is amongst those which wear them not, either with themselves, or with them that wear them. For how many there are that wear surplices which would be gladder to say a mass than to hear a sermon, let all the world judge. And of those that do wear this apparel, and be otherwise well-minded to the gospel, are there not which will wear the surplice and not the cap; other that will wear both cap and surplice, but not the tippet; and yet a third sort, that will wear surplice, cap, and tippet, but not the cope? It hath been the manner always of wise and learned men to esteem of things by the causes, and not by the event, and that especially in matters of religion; for, if they should be esteemed of the event, who is there which will not condemn the Israelites' battle against Josh. viii.³ Judg. xx.³ Aye, and afterward against the Benjamites? which, notwithstanding, the cause, which was God's will, and God's commandment, justifieth. And therefore in a word I answer that, if there⁴ be such consent amongst those which like well of this apparel, and such jars amongst those that like it not, as M. Doctor would make the world believe, neither is the wearing of a⁵ surplice, &c. cause of that consent in them, nor the not wearing cause of that⁶ disagreement in the other. But, as our knowledge and love is imperfect here in this world, so is our agreement and consent of judgment imperfect. And yet all these hard speeches of yours, or uncharitable suspicions of papism, anabaptism, Catharism, Donatism, &c., whereby you do as much as lieth in you to cut us clean off from you, shall not be able so to estrange us or separate us from you, but that we will by God's grace hold whatsoever you hold well, and keep that unity of spirit which is the bond of truth, even with you, Master Doctor, whom we suppose, as appeareth by this your book, to have set yourself further from us than numbers of those which, although they be content to receive the apparel, and bear with things, yet would have been loth to have set down that against the sincerity of the gospel, and hinderance of reformation, which you have done.

[¹ Never, Repl. 1 and 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Such laws and orders as keep godly peace and unity in the church do edify; but the laws for apparel keep godly peace and unity in the church; ergo, they edify. The minor

[² Dissenting, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ These references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁵ The, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ These, Def. B.]

[⁶ The, Repl. 1 and 2.]

How apparel serveth to edification.

I prove by experience of such as are subject to these laws, and by the event; which is a probable kind of reasoning, though it be not necessary; neither may the examples of a few improve that which is generally true almost in all.

These persons that you talk of, which be thus contrarily minded (if there be any such, as I think you do but feign), yet do they keep the peace of the church; they condemn not their brethren, neither yet the apparel that they themselves (peradventure for some special cause) wear not.

Some I know there are, which agree with us in wearing the apparel, and join with you in contention, subscribe to all our orders and articles, and yet in certain places and companies maintain your opinions; but of such we make no account, neither I think do you, further than they may serve your turn.

Again, I confess that there be some which have not received the apparel, and yet greatly mislike many of your opinions, and keep with us the unity of the church; whom I for my part have always revered, and do reverence, not only for their singular virtue and learning, but for their modesty also. Wherefore, when I speak either of the one or of the other, I speak not of all, but of the most part.

Certain it is that those things which "the Lord appointeth to keep unity with, and especially the sacraments," ought to be the especial bond of the same; and that nothing should separate those that are coupled and joined therein; but we see it fall out otherwise, such is the crooked and rebellious nature of man; and therefore hath God also appointed magistrates, and given them authority to make orders and laws to maintain the peace and unity of the church, that those, which of conscience and good disposition will not, by such laws and orders may be constrained at the least to keep the external peace and unity of the church. Do you take this to be a good reason: "The sacraments are bonds to keep and maintain the unity" of the Spirit; therefore there needeth no laws or magistrates to provide for the external peace and quietness of the church? Your imagination throughout your whole book is of such a perfection in men as though they needed no laws or magistrates to govern them, but that every man might be as it were a law to himself; which whereunto it tendeth may easily be conjectured.

T. C. imagineth such a perfection as is not to be found.

I have not “set down” anything (I trust) “to the hinder-ance of the gospel, or of reformation;” but I seek to reform such contentious spirits as be enemies unto both. And I believe that, when some other (not only such as you mean, but such as you least think of) shall understand the depth of your opinions, together with the strangeness, untruth, dangerous-ness, and other circumstances joined with them, they will think that I have spoken or written nothing either untruly or unnecessarily. In the meantime I discharge my conscience and duty, and so will do (God willing) as long as I can either speak or write.

How apparel serv-eth to edification.

Chapter vii. The Eighth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 239, Sect. 4.

I here omit that which I might as justly bring for this kind of apparel, as you do for sitting at the communion, I mean a fit and profitable signification; whereof M. Martyr speaketh in the epistle before mentioned on this sort: “I will not here say that they which stand to the defence of this matter may pretend some honest and just signification of the apparel, and that not dissenting from the word of God, which is this: the ministers of the church (as the prophet Malachi witnesseth) be angels and God’s messengers; but angels for the most part appeared being clothed in white garments. I pray you, how shall we debar the church of this liberty, that it cannot signify some good thing in setting forth their rites and ceremonies, especially being so done that no manner of God’s honour is attributed unto them, and that they be in sight comely and in number few, and that christian people be not with them overburdened, and matters of greater importance be omitted?”

P. Martyr¹.

T. C. Page 59, Lin. 5.

The white apparel, which is a note and a true³ representation of the glory and pureness in the angels, should be a lying sign and pretence of that which is not in the ministers, which are miser-

Master Martyr’s words perverted.

Acts i. 10.⁴

[¹ This is not in Answ. 2.]

[² P. Martyr’s Letter to John Hoper Byshop, &c. at the end of A briefe examination for the tyme, &c. Lond. Jugge, fol. C 1. 2. Conf. Epist. Theolog. ad calc. Loc. Comm. Heidelb. 1613. p. 1088.]

[³ And true, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

How apparel serveth to edification.

able and sinful men. And our Saviour Christ, which was the minister of God and pure from sin, and therefore meetest to wear the marks¹ of pureness, used no such kind of weed, saving only for that small time wherein he would give to his disciples in the mount a taste of that glory which he should enjoy for ever, and they with him; where for the time his apparel appeared as white as snow. And, if it be meet that ^{Mark ix. 3.2} the ministers should represent the angels in their apparel, it is much more meet that they should have a pair of wings, as the angels are ^{Isai. vi. 2.2} described to have, to put them in remembrance of their readiness and quickness to execute their office, which may and ought to be in them, than to wear white apparel, which is a token of pureness from sin and infection, and of a glory, which neither they have, nor can have, nor ought so much as to desire to have, as long as they be in this world. And, whereas the maintainers of this apparel have for their greatest defence that it is a thing mere civil; to let pass that they confound ecclesiastical orders with civil (which they can no more justly do than to confound the church with the commonwealth); I say, to let that pass, they do by this means not only make it an ecclesiastical ceremony, but also a matter of conscience. For, if so be that the white apparel of the minister have any force either to move the people or the minister unto greater pureness, or to any other godliness whatsoever, then it³ is that which ought to be commanded, and to be obeyed of necessity, and to be retained, although the contrary were forbidden. And then also, if there be a virtue in a white garment, and the signification thereof be so strong to work godliness, it were meet that order were taken that the whitest cloth should be bought, that should⁴ be often (at the least every week once) washed by a very good launder, and with soap; for, if the white help, more white helpeth more, and that which is most white helpeth most of all to godliness. Although the church have authority to make ceremonies (so they be according to the rules before recited of God's glory, and profiting the congregation), I could for all that never yet learn that it had power to give new significations, as it were to institute new sacraments. And by this means is taken clean away from us the hold which we have against the papists, whereby (against all the goodly shews which they make by the colour of these significations) we say that the word of God, and the sacraments of baptism, and of the supper of the Lord, are sufficient to teach, to admonish, and to put us in remembrance of all duty whatsoever. So we are now come to the superstition of the Grecians; for, as they will have neither graven nor carved image in their churches, but painted, so will we⁵ neither have graven, nor carved, nor painted, but woven. And truly I see no cause why we may not have as well holy water and holy bread, if this reason which is here be good; for I am sure the significations of them are as glorious as this of the surplice, and call to remembrance as necessary things. And, if it be said that it may not be, lest the number of ceremonies should be too too great, it

Here you play with a feather.

You understand not this topical place; for it holdeth in those things only, quæ per se aliquid faciunt.

[¹ Mark, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² These references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[³ It is not in Def. B.]

[⁴ That it should, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ We will, Repl. 1 and 2.]

may be easily answered, that these which we have may be taken away, and those set in place of them. And therefore, although the surplice have a black spot, when it is whitest, yet is it not so black as you make it with your white significations, nor the cause so evil as you defend it.

If you press me with M. Martyr's and M. Bucer's authority, I first say they were men, and therefore (although otherwise very watchful) yet such as slept sometimes. And then I appeal from their apocryphas unto their known writings, and from their private letters unto their public records.

How apparel serveth to edification.

An easy kind of answering.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I have here only set down M. Martyr's words to shew that I might as justly bring in a fit and profitable signification of the apparel, as the authors of the Admonition do of sitting at the communion. I did not allow their signification of sitting, neither do I approve any such signification of apparel; but yet you will give me leave to set the one against the other, and to shew that I might as well do the one as they do the other.

You pervert Master Martyr's words; for he saith that, "forasmuch as angels appeared in white apparel, and the ministers of the church be angels and God's messengers, therefore the church may appoint to her ministers such apparel in signification of their office." Which you do not answer, but range up and down at your pleasure, like unto a spaniel not taught to follow his game. M. Martyr doth not say that "the apparel is a sign of pureness" that is in the minister; and therefore all this that you write in confuting of that might have been cut off, and very well spared. But, if Master Martyr should have said that it may be a sign of the pureness that ought to be in ministers, you are to seek for an answer as yet. Christ, being purity itself, needed nothing to put him in mind thereof; but man, being impure, may have external instruments to bid him (as it were) remember what he ought to be. I think that several kinds of habits be appointed to men of divers degrees and calling, partly for that purpose; and, if a man in grave apparel use himself lightly or wantonly, we use commonly to say, such behaviour becometh not that apparel, meaning that his habit and apparel ought to put him in mind of modesty and gravity; and this doth argue that even mere civil things may have significations; which overthroweth another argument of yours, whereby you would prove that the apparel must of necessity be "an ecclesiastical ceremony," because there is attributed unto it some signification. Whether it be a matter "mere civil," or mere ecclesiastical, or mixed of both, is not now the question, neither yet whether "the church may be confounded with the commonwealth" or no; and therefore I will not here deal with any of them, lest I should confound both the matter and the reader: only I speak of your argument which is confuted by common usage; for several habits in the universities signify several degrees in learning; several kind of apparel, several callings and functions in the commonwealth; and this apparel doth put every man in mind of his duty; and yet they are not longer to be retained than the magistrate and the laws do permit, but are alterable according to times, places, and persons. No man saith that there is virtue in such garments or power "to work godliness;" and therefore your pretty jests builded upon that ground are vain and toyish, and your topical place not rightly understood; for it is meant of such things quæ per se aliquid faciunt.

Mere civil things may have signification.

The form of apparel may put a man in mind of his duty.

How apparel serveth to edification.

Everything that signifieth anything is not "a sacrament;" for then were matrimony a sacrament; and so were laying on of hands, and such like.

The papists used unlawful signs, and attributed unto them life and death; for they made them necessary to salvation.

"Images," whether they be "graven," "painted," or "woven," are against the express commandment of God; and therefore these be unapt similitudes; neither would you have used them, if you had well considered M. Martyr's words.

The same I answer to your allegation of "holy water and holy bread:" they be pseudo-adiaphora, and have annexed unto them opinion of salvation and of worship; all which we utterly remove from these orders.

T. C. refuseth the judgment of learned men, when he cannot otherwise answer them. In men's writings the circumstances of time and place must be distinguished.

Your answer to M. Martyr's and M. Bucer's authority is sure, but not greatly commendable; for it is the easiest but the worst answer that can be to deny the authority of wise, learned, and famous men, and that without reason, and only by cavilling. These be "their known writings," and they be written of purpose upon these controversies according to the circumstances of time, place, and person; and therefore, if anything in "their public writings" seem to be against their judgments here, distinguish the time and other circumstances ; and I doubt not but they will well agree with themselves. Interim, you do your endeavour to deface them.

Chapter vii. The Ninth Division.

Admonition.

¹ *Thess. v. 22.*¹ They have the shew of evil (seeing the popish priesthood is evil).

Answer to the Admonition, Page 240, Sect. 2.

[You add and say that “they have the shew of evil (seeing the popish priesthood is evil).”²]

How apparel is a sign of evil, and how otherwise³.

When they were a sign and token of the popish priesthood, then were they evil, even as the thing was which they signified ; but now they be the tokens and the signs of the ministers of the word of God which are good, and therefore also they be good. No man in this church of England is so ignorant but that he knoweth this apparel not to be now the signs of a massing priest, but of a lawful minister ; wherefore it is a shew of good ; even as it is in the like manner in the universities a shew and sign of degrees in learning, and therefore a shew of good ; except you will also condemn degrees of learning. Neither is it any strange matter for the self-same thing, in divers respects, and at divers times, to be the sign both of good and evil. The bells were a sign of evil, when they were rung to call to mass, and to stay storms and tempests ; the self-same bells are now a sign of good, when they be rung to sermons and other godly actions. The churches themselves were a sign of evil, when idolatry was committed in them, and false doctrine preached ; now they be a sign of good, when God is rightly worshipped in them, and his word truly preached. Many such examples I could bring ; but a reasonable man can gather of these sufficiently to confute your error. Furthermore, when we be willed to abstain from all shew of evil, it is meant of evil life, and evil doctrine, lest we do anything with a scrupulous conscience.

[¹ This reference is inserted from Adm. and Answ.]

[² This sentence is added from Answ.]

[³ Signs of evil how apparel is, and how otherwise, Answ. 2.]

T. C. Page 59, towards the end.

M. Doctor proceedeth to prove that they are signs and shews of good, and not of evil, as the authors of the Admonition allege. To the proof whereof, although (according to his manner) he repeateth divers things before alleged, yet the sum of all he hath comprehended in an argument, which is that, forsomuch as the ministers are good which wear them, therefore they are also good; and, because the ministers, whereof the apparel are notes and marks, be good, therefore those be good notes and good marks: so the reason is, they are notes, and notes of good ministers; therefore they be good notes of the ministers. So I will prove the names of idols to be fit and convenient names for good men to be called by. Beltshaser, Saddrake, Misacke, and Abed-nego, were names of Daniel and his three companions, and they were the names of good men; therefore they are good names of men. And so the names of the Babylonian idols are by this reason of M. Doctor justified to be good names. Again, the golden calf was a sign. Also it was a sign of the true God; therefore it was a true sign of God. Concerning the notes of civil professions, and what difference is between those and this cause, I have spoken before.

Untruth.

Falla compositionis.¹Dan. i. 7.²Exod. xxxii.⁴⁻²

JO. WHITGIFT.

The Admonition saith thus: "they have the shew of evil, seeing the popish priesthood is evil." To this I answer that, "when they were a sign and token of the popish priesthood, then they were evil, and a sign of evil, because the thing was evil which they signified; but now they are tokens of the ministers of the gospel which are good, and therefore they are good," and the signs of good. The reason is M. Bucer's³: I am not ashamed of my author; and it is stronger than you can overthrow. For let me hear how you will answer this argument: Whatsoever signifieth and noteth that which is good is a sign of good; but this apparel signifieth that which is good; ergo, it is a sign of good. The major is evident. The minor is thus proved. The ministry of the gospel is good; but this apparel is a sign of the ministry of the gospel; ergo, it is a sign of good. All the logic you have cannot answer this argument, except you will deny the apparel to be the sign of the ministry of the gospel; which were to deny that which is subject to the senses: the other examples that I have used doth make this matter more manifest. I refer it to the reader to judge how fitly you have answered them.

[¹ This is inserted from Repl. 1.][² These references are inserted from Repl. 2.][³ See before, pages 38, 9.]

Whether they “be good signs,” or no, is not now the question, but whether they “be signs of good;” for that the Admonition denieth. If you can conclude that they be evil, because they be signs of evil, why may not I likewise say that they be good, because they be signs of good? We commonly call that a good sign, which is a sign of good; neither can you place this reason in any fallation: it is a sign of good; ergo, it is a good sign; for it is called a good sign in this respect only, that it signifieth that which is good.

Those names, in respect of those whom they signified, were good; in respect of the idols, to whom they properly belonged, they were evil; for such external things in divers respects may be both good and evil. The “golden calf” was an idol made to be worshipped, no “sign of the true God;” and therefore undiscreetly here brought in.

External things may be both good and evil in divers respects.

Wheresoever I have before alleged these things you speak of, yet be they answered neither here nor there; and this the reader may note if he list, that, wheresoever you cannot answer, there either you frump and gird after your manner, or you cavil and confute your own imagination, or closely pass the matter over in silence, or post it over to some other place, where you speak nothing of it.

The divers shifts used by T. C. in answering.

Chapter vii. The Tenth Division.

Admonition.

*They work discord, they hinder the preaching of the gospel*⁴.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 241, Sect. 2.

This is an argument a non causa ad causam; [that is, when as that is put and taken for the cause, which is not the cause of the thing talked of. For⁵] it is not the apparel that worketh discord, or hindereth the preaching of the gospel; no, no more than it is the word of God that engendereth heresies, or wine that maketh drunk, or the sword that murdereth, or the law that worketh injury, &c. But it is the sinister affection, the rebellious nature, the contentious mind of man. For who began this contention, or when was it begun? Truly, if the law for apparel were utterly abrogated, yet would not your contention cease; nay, it would burst out much more¹ vehemently, and in far greater matters; as this your Admonition declareth. And therefore I think rather that the law for apparel will stay further contentions, especially if it be duly executed.

Non causa pro causa.

[⁴ This and other portions of the Admonition, to obstinate, page 72, which appeared in one paragraph in Answ., see above (page 50, note 1), are repeated in separate sentences in Answ. placed at the head of each paragraph thereof.]

[⁵ This is inserted from Answ. 2.]

T. C. Page 60, Sect. 1.

You say the cause of disorder² is not in the apparel, but in the minds of men. You mean, I am sure, those that refuse the apparel; but, if you make them authors of discord, because they consent not with you in wearing, do you not see it is as soon said, that you are the causers of discord, because you do not consent with those which wear not? For, as there should be unity in that point if all did wear that apparel, so should there be if all did wear none of it. It is a very unequal comparison that you compare the use of this apparel with the use of wine, and of a sword, which are profitable and necessary; but it is more intolerable that you match it with the word of God. I could throw it as far down as you lift it up, but I will not do so. This only I will say, if there were no harm in it, and that it were also profitable, yet, forasmuch as it is not commanded of God expressly, but a thing (as you say) indifferent, and notwithstanding is cause of so many inconveniences, and so abused (as I have before declared), it ought to be sufficient reason to abolish them; seeing that the ^{Numb. xxi. 8, 9, 3} brazen serpent, which was instituted of the Lord himself, and ^{2 Kings xviii. 4, 3} contained a profitable remembrance of the wonderful benefit of ^{1 Cor. xi. 22, 3} God towards his people, was beaten to powder, when as it began to be an occasion of falling unto the children of Israel; and seeing that St Paul, after the love-feasts (which were kept at the administration of ^{1 Cor. xi. 22, 3} the Lord's supper, and were means to nourish love amongst the churches) were abused, and drawn to another use than they were first ordained, did utterly take them away, and commanded that they should not be used any more.

It is as soon said, but not so truly; because the one retaineth order, and the other breaketh it.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I may answer you almost in the self-same words and manner that M. Zuinglius answered one Balthazar, an anabaptist, who charged him then, as you charge us now in this place: "Consider," saith he, "who be the authors and causes of dissension; whether we, that attempt nothing of our own private authority, but have submitted ourselves to the judgment of the Zuinglius ad Balt.

[¹ Out more, Answ. 2.]

[² Discord, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ The first two references and the verse of the third are inserted from Repl. 2.]

church, and of those that be governors of the same, or rather you, who so arrogantly, without any such authority, do what you list, speak what you list, allow and condemn at your pleasure⁴." But for further trial hereof I refer you to such notes as I have collected out of Zuinglius and others, and placed in Pag. 19, &c. the second edition of my Answer to the Admonition⁵.

Our consenting is according to our duty required of us by the word of God towards such as be in authority : your dissenting is contrary to your duty of obedience, in such cases enjoined unto you by the word of God. If all refused the apparel with you, yet would you not be quiet ; for you make this the least cause of your schism. I do not compare " this apparel with the word of God," but by these examples I shew the unaptness of such arguments as be a non causa ad causam. You have " thrown it down as low " as you can, and, if you could cast it lower, your will is good ; and therefore to say you " could " do it, and " will not," is as great an offence as was the midwives' lying to Pharaoh.

I have shewed in my Answer that, as the case now standeth, it is rather commodious ; as for abuses in it, as it is now used, you have hitherto shewed none ; and, if it were " abused," yet doth it not follow that therefore it is to be removed ; except the abuse could not be taken away without the abolishing of the thing, as it was in the " brazen serpent ;" which serpent though it was by God commanded to be set up, yet was it (as M. Martyr saith) but for that time⁶, wherein power was given unto it to heal and cure those that were bitten of the serpents, Num. xxi. ; and therefore, being but temporal, Numb. xxi. and thus abused, was lawfully taken away ; neither would the idolatry committed unto it otherwise have ceased. But do you think that any man doth worship the apparel, as the Israelites did worship the serpent ? St Paul, in that chapter of the 1 Cor., reproveth them for certain abuses about the 1 Cor. xi. " Lord's supper," whereof this was one of the chief, that they made it an occasion of feasting and banqueting ; which manner

[⁴ H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1501. ad Libell. Baltaz. Hvebm. Resp. Pars II, fol. 100. 2. See Vol. I. page 131, note 5.]

[⁵ See Vol. I. pages 125, &c.]

[⁶ ... nec erectum, ut esset perpetuo : verum potius ejus temporis calamitatum remedium, et venturi Messiae typus esset : &c.—Melachim, id est Reg. Libr. Duo Post. cum Comm. P. Martyr. in prim. tot. et secund. priora xi. capp., et J. Wolph. in sec. quatuordecim ult. capp. Tigur. 1571. In II. Lib. cap. xviii. fol. 351.]

Calvin.

of feasting in the church was not only borrowed of the gentiles, as M. Bullinger saith, but occasion also of much contention, and very unseemly for that time and place¹. And, as Master Calvin saith upon that place, “The Corinthians are reprov’d, because they had mingled profane banquets (and that also with the contumely of the poor) with that holy and spiritual feast²,” and therefore expedient it was that they should “be taken away;” and, if you can shew the like incurable abuse in the apparel, I will cry, away with it, as fast as you do.

Chapter vii. The Eleventh Division.

Admonition.

They keep the memory of Egypt still amongst us, and put us in mind of that abomination whereunto they in times past have served, they bring the ministry into contempt, they offend the weak, they encourage the obstinate.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 241, Sect. 3, 4, 5.

You say, “they keep the memory of Egypt still amongst us, &c.³” No truly, no more than doth the church, the pulpit, the bells, &c.; but they teach us the true use of christian liberty, and that all things be clean to those that be clean; finally, that godly men may well use that which wicked have abused, howsoever ungodly.

“They bring the ministry into contempt.” Only with you, and such as you (by your continual crying out against them) have deluded. Contemners of good orders, laws, and statutes, are to be severely punished for their contempt. Good laws, orders, and statutes, are not to be altered or dissolved, because by such as forget their duties they are contemned.

[¹ Quoties ergo diebus statis mystica illa in ecclesia peragenda essent sacra, opulentiores instructis in cœtu sacro conviviis epulabantur pro more magis gentili quam christiano: pauperes vero qui in eundem congregabantur conventum vel invidebant, ut fit, ditioribus hanc felicitatem, vel nimis acerbe miseram illam sortem suam et deplorabant et execrabantur. Inde porro dissidia et factionum pullulabant studia, incalescebant contententium jurgia, &c.—H. Bullinger. Comm. in Omn. Apostol. Epist. Tigur. 1539. In 1. Epist. ad Cor. cap. xi. p. 202.]

[² Nunc taxat abusum qui in cœnam Domini obrepserat apud Corinthios: quod sacro et spirituali epulo profana symposia permiscerent, idque cum pauperum contumelia.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. 1. ad Cor. cap. xi. 20. Tom. VII. p. 180.]

[³ This sentence is not in Answ.]

“They offend the weak and encourage the obstinate.” Those that be offended with them think themselves most strong, and glory therein with condemning of others. The obstinate be encouraged through the schisms and contentions that you trouble the church and slander the gospel with; which one day you will understand, if in time you do not repent.

[Admonition.

Therefore can no authority by the word of God, with any pretence of order and disobedience⁴, command them, nor make them in any wise tolerable; but by circumstances they are wicked and against the word of God.

Answer [to the Admonition.]

Now you come to the point where you would have it: it is the mark you shoot at, to spoil the magistrate of all authority in things indifferent, especially in ecclesiastical matters. But you set it down only without proof; wherefore I will thus briefly answer to your bare words (until you bring some proof), that this your assertion is both anabaptistical, and papistical, and contrary also to the word of God, and all learning⁵.]

Anabaptistical assertions.

T. C. Page 60, Sect. 2.

The rest of that which followeth in this matter is nothing else but either that which hath been oftentimes repeated, or else reproachful words, or unjust accusations of contempt of magistrates, without any proof at all; and therefore are such as either are answered, or which I will not vouchsafe to⁶ answer, especially seeing I mean not to give reproach⁷ and reviling for reviling; and seeing that I have before protested of our humble submission, and loving fear or reverence, which we bear to the prince, and those which are appointed magistrates underneath her.

True; for you have given ten for one.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is a short answer, to say you “will not vouchsafe to answer.” What reproachful words or unjust accusations are here uttered by me? except this offend you, that I say, “contemners of good orders, laws, and statutes, are to be severely

[⁴ Obedience, Adm.]

[⁵ The paragraphs between brackets appear to be omitted in the Defence: they are inserted here from Answ.]

[⁶ The, Def. B.]

[⁷ Seeing that I mean not to give reproach for reproach, Repl. 1 and 2.]

punished for their contempt. Good laws, orders, and statutes are not to be altered and dissolved, because by such as forget their duties they be contemned." If this cast you into that choler, I cannot mend it: you must bear with me when I speak the truth.

Whether of us two have more offended in "reproachings and revilings," because we are both partial in our own causes, let us refer it to the indifferent readers. How far you are from performing that in deed to the magistrates, that you protest in word, is in another place declared.

Chapter vii. The Twelfth Division.

T. C. Page 60, Sect. 3.

And therefore I will conclude that, forsomuch as the ceremonies of antichristianity are not, nor cannot be, the fittest to set forth the gospell, and for that they are occasions of fall to some, of hinderance to other some, of grief and alienation of minds unto others (the contrary of all which ought to be considered in establishing of things indifferent in the church); therefore neither is this apparel fittest for the minister of the gospel, and, if it were, yet, considering the incommodities that come of the use of it, it should be removed.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This conclusion consisteth wholly upon false principles; whereof though some of them have been before spoken, yet not one of them proved: for trial whereof I refer the reader to that which we have both written of this matter.

Admonition¹.

The twelfth.

Then as God gave utterance^b they preached the word only: now they read homilies, articles, injunctions, &c.

^b John vi. 38.
John xii.
49.
1 Cor. xi.
23.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 62, Sect. 3.

Here you quote in the margent the sixth of John, verse 38; where Christ saith that he "came down from heaven not to do his own will, but the will of his Father that sent him." Likewise the twelfth of John, verse 49; where also he saith that he hath "not spoken of² himself, but the Father that sent him gave him commandment what he should say and what he should speak." And the first to the Corinthians, xi. chapter, verse 23; where St Paul saith that he "received of the Lord that which he delivered unto them." No man denieth but that the word of God only ought to be preached, and that as God giveth utterance. But do you mean that we may not study for our sermons, or that we may speak nothing but the very text of scripture, without amplifying or expounding the same? When I know your meaning herein, you shall understand more of my mind. In the mean time, this I am sure of, that the homilies appointed to be read in the church are learned, godly, agreeable to God's word, and more effectual to edification, than a number of your sermons, which consist in words only, and intreat of little else but of cap, surplice, &c., archbishop, lord bishop, &c.; the end whereof is not edification, but contention. Homilies read in the church have always been commendable, and usual even from the beginning; look Augustine, Chrysostom, and others; and why may not articles and injunctions, being collected to the setting forth of true religion and good orders in the church, be read there also, as in a most meet place? But I perceive you are enemies to reading, because you love so well to hear yourselves talking; I will say no worse.

[¹ Here Reply takes up again the order which had been interrupted. See before, page 47, note 5.]

[² So, Answ.]

Scriptures
may be amplified.

Homilies
read in the church are commendable.

T. C. Page 60, Sect. 4.

You know they allow studying for sermons, and amplifying and expounding of the scriptures, and why then do you ask? But by this question you would have your reader think, or at the least have the authors of the Admonition in suspicion, that they liked not of study for sermons. God make us more careful of the good name of our brethren, than by such light and ungrounded suspicions, nay, without any suspicion, nay, contrary to that which is daily seen and heard³, to raise up such slanderous reports of them. But homilies are smally beholding unto you, which, to prove that they may be read in the church, allege that Augustine and Chrysostom made sermons in their churches; for that which we call a sermon, they called of the Greek word an homily; so that the argument is, that Augustine and Chrysostom preached sermons or homilies in their churches, therefore we may read homilies in ours. But peradventure you have some better thing to say for them afterward.

[³ Harde, Repl. 1 and 2; hard, Def. A.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

I have heard some fautors of theirs earnestly reason against "studying for sermons;" and it is not long since it was almost in plain terms in the pulpit preached. I think they study for their sermons, but how diligently they study, or whether they would seem to study, or no, I know not: the words of the Admonition are very suspicious.

That which I speak of Augustine and Chrysostom aptly serveth for my purpose; for, although they were Augustine's and Chrysostom's sermons, yet in that they have both committed them to writing, and left them to their posterity, it argueth that they thought them to be very profitable for the church; neither do I see any cause why they should rather now be thought unlawful to be read, than they were then to be preached; but yet one thing we may note, that both Augustine and Chrysostom writ their homilies or sermons; and therefore it may be that they did also sometime read them in the church¹.

[¹ Cartwright says that he had originally determined to answer this tractate; but, "considering after that this cause hath been so fully debated," "considering also" that he, Whitgift, "triumphs in his own shame," "considering that he hath almost nothing at all not before answered, and that he hath not fetched from any treasury of good learning, but as taken up by the highway-side, and considering that we have this question with very few (him, the papists, or those which have already cast an eye unto the papists only excepted,...), all these things considered, with that, that it may better appear we take not these things for the greatest matter we complain of; I thought good," he adds, "to tread this treatise under my foot, and to save some good hours, which might be lost in unripping this beggary."—Sec. Repl. pp. 402, 3.]

Of Archbishops, Metropolitans, Bishops, Archdeacons, &c.

Tract. VIII.

The reasons of T. C. answered, whereby he goeth about to take away the superfluous lop (as he termeth it) of these offices.

Chapter i. The First Division.

Admonition.

The thirteenth and fourteenth².

^c 1Tim. iii. 1. Then ^c it was painful; now gainful. ^d Then poor and ^a Phil. iv. 11. *ignominious*⁴; now rich and glorious⁵.
² Cor. vi. 4, 8, 10.³

Answer to the Admonition, Page 63, Sect. ult.

It was then as it useth to be under the cross. And it is now as it useth to be when God doth bless it with peace, quietness, and godly magistrates. And yet surely even now it is more painful than gainful, more ignominious than rich and glorious; and that do those know that bear the heat of the day. But it is the more painful and ignominious for you, who cease not with railing and spiteful words, in pulpits and at tables, to deprave and backbite your brethren, and to trouble the whole state with your factions, and daily-invented new opinions: the persecution of the sword ceaseth; but the persecution of the tongue is extreme hot: and we, who gain so much, and be so glorious, are molested as well by you as by the papist and atheist; and therefore not very glorious.

*Scilicet, the ministry*⁶.

The ministry is now more painful than gainful.

T. C. Page 61, Sect. 1.

A hundred pounds by year is taken of some benefice, for which four sermons only are preached, and those sometimes by another. If this be Prov. xxx. "more painful than gainful," it is because "the horseleach hath 15.7 two daughters, Give, give, &c." And I cannot see how they can be more glorious, unless the palace were turned into a court, and their chair

[² Though "the fourteenth" is here mentioned, the examination of what is so called does not commence for a considerable space.]

[³ 2 Cor. vi. 4, 4, 10, Adm.]

[⁴ Here Adm. adds in the eyes of the world.]

[⁵ Here Answ. continues the quotation from the Admonition, as far as removed, page 79.]

[⁶ This marginal note is not in Answ.]

[⁷ The verse of this reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

The twelfth of Matthew strangely applied.

A vain brag, though it were true.

into a throne. There are divers places that God hath blessed with peace, where the ministers take more pain, and have less gain, and which make less noises¹ when they go in the streets. We have amongst us which have had bishoprics offered, and, as things unmeet for a minister of the gospel, have refused them. God be praised, the sun shineth not so hot in this country now, that you need to complain of any great heat; and, if you feel any heat, you have better shade than Jonas had by his gourd. Matt. xii. 19. 2
Jonas iv. 6. 2

JO. WHITGIFT.

It may be that he which hath “an hundred pounds by the year, for which four sermons only are preached, &c.” (if there be any such) taketh more pains for the church, is more careful for the state of it, suffereth more opprobrious words, and false slanders (which is not the least kind of persecution), for doing his duty, and keeping himself within the lists of obedience towards God and his prince, than those do that glory most of persecution, and lack of living. He that hath much is also occasioned to spend much; neither is his pains the less, but more, if he be once desirous to do his duty. And, the higher he is in degree, the more subject to the envious backbiter, and to the slanderous tongue.

“Those that have such palaces, and make such noise when they go in the streets, &c.,” I think verily take more pains and care in and for the church of God, profit their country more in one month, than you and all your company do in a whole year; nay, I would to God it might be said you profited. Their pomp and their palaces are by lawful authority committed unto them; and the true martyrs of God have occupied the same or the like before them, and yet martyrs too.

Who “amongst” you they be “that have had bishoprics offered” unto them, I know not; but, if they boast of their denial, and have suborned you to make it known, they have their reward. It may be the bishopric was too little for them; and they looked for some greater, and so missed both; but I will not judge: surely this brag cometh here out of place.

The heat of the tongue and backbiter both I and other may “greatly complain of;” and I hope we get not our living by going up and down the streets, and feasting daily at other men's tables, or, as Diogenes did, by disdaining and contemning all others. Melius est vinum bibere cum ratione, quam aquam cum fastu et superbia: "It is better to drink wine with discretion, than water with haughtiness and pride." It is also more acceptable to God to dwell "in a palace," and live in abundance, with doing a man's duty toward God and his church, than to lie in prison for disdain and contempt. Godly men may enjoy preferment; and such as be arrogant and wilful may seem to condemn the same.

[¹ Noise, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² The verse of the first reference and the last altogether are inserted from Repl. 2.]

Chapter i. The Second Division.

Admonition³.

And therefore titles, livings, and offices by antichrist devised, are given to them, as metropolitan, archbishop, lord's grace, lord bishop, suffragan, dean, archdeacon, prelate of the garter, earl, county palatine, honour, high commissioners, justices of peace and quorum, &c.
† Matt. xxiii. 11, 12. Luke xxii. 25. 1 Cor. iv. 1. 1 Pet. v. 2, 3.
All which together with their offices, as they are strange and unheard of in Christ's church, nay, plainly¹ in Christ's⁴ word forbidden, so are they utterly with speed out of the same to be removed.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 64, Sect. 2.

Here you are in your ruff, but you shew your ignorance and contemptuous stomach. You have given sentence that "the names of metropolitan, archbishop, &c., and their offices, were devised by antichrist;" likewise that "they are strange and unheard of in Christ's church;" also that "they be plainly in God's word forbidden;" and last, that "they are utterly with speed to be removed." If you can prove all these points, it is time the church were transformed, and the whole kind of government of this realm altered. But, if you cannot prove them, then is it high time that such insolency should be repressed, and perturbors of churches and commonwealths⁵ reformed. Well, I must do the best I can to improve all these points, which I might do sufficiently, if I should as barely deny them as you have affirmed them; but I will not deal so nakedly in so great a matter.

[³ Answ. having completed this paragraph before (see above, page 77) here introduces it again: You add and say that "therefore &c." Some words are omitted in this repetition, and God's word found instead of Christ's word.]

[⁴ God's, Adm.]

[⁵ Common weals, Answ.]

T. C. Page 61, Sect. 2.

Of those¹ offices something hath been spoken before, where it hath been proved out of the words of Christ that neither the names, nor offices of archbishop or archdeacons, do agree to the ministry of the gospel. Now, as M. Doctor bestoweth great cost here and travail, in digging about them, and laying (as it were) new earth to their roots, that they being half-dead, if it were possible, might be recovered and quickened again, so I (because these trees mount up so high, and spread their boughs and arms so broad, that for the cold shade of them nothing can grow and thrive by them) will, before I come to answer these things that are here alleged, set down certain reasons (as it were instruments) to take away the superfluous lop and spread of their¹ immoderate offices.

Because they flourish more prosperously than the envious man can well bear.

JO. WHITGIFT.

T. C. hath a special quarrel against archbishops, bishops, and other that have the name of authority and degree in the church. For he perceiveth that they be the principal stops and hinderances of his confused platform, and that also they be the enemies unto sects and contentions, wherewith he is so greatly delighted. Moreover, he and many of his adherents be of that nature whereof Cæsar and Pompey were reported to be: the one could abide no superior, the other no equal; even so is it with them, as it is well known to those that have been conversant with some of them. And, although they pretend equality in words, yet, if you mark well their writings, it shall easily appear that they mean it in others, not in themselves; for they would have him to be the best rewarded, and most revered, that hath the most and best gifts, which every one of these chief captains persuaded himself to have; so that in the end there would be as great ado (after their manner) which of them should be the chief, as ever there was betwixt the bishop of Rome and other bishops, or betwixt Canterbury and York in times past. In the meantime you may easily understand, if you please, that, notwithstanding they themselves would be exempted from the jurisdiction of archbishop, lord bishop, &c., yet do they challenge unto themselves as great jurisdiction over their parishes, and as lofty dominion over prince, nobles, and all, as ever the pope did over the whole church; as shall (God willing) be more fully declared, when I come to speak of their seigniorie and kind of government. Now to his Reply.

T. C. maketh his chief quarrel against those in authority in the church, and why he so doth.

What kind of equality is pretended.

[¹ These, Repl. 1 and 2.]

Where “hath something been spoken before of these offices and names?” Or what arguments have you hitherto used to prove that they do not “agree to the ministers of the gospel?” If you have so done, I trust you are fully answered in that same place. But I promise you I do not presently remember where you have hitherto done it. If you mean the places of Matth. xx., &c., you have your full answer.

I have “bestowed” the more cost and labour in this matter, because I see your chief force bent against it. For, mark you who will, all your drift is against superiors. But let us hear your reasons².

Chapter i. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 61, Sect. 3.

And for the names first, I desire the reader that we be not thought studious of contention, because we strive about the name of archbishop, &c. For this is not to strive about words, unless it be counted a strife of words, which is taken for the maintenance of the word of God; as it hath before appeared out of the evangelists. Then it must be remembered which Aristotle saith very well in his Elenchs, that τὰ ὀνόματα τῶν πραγμάτων μῆματα ἐστὶ³, which is, that “names are imitations,” or, as it were, express images “of the things whereof they are names,” and do for the most part bring to him that heareth them knowledge of the things that are signified by them. Howsoever the thing be itself, yet oftentimes it is supposed to be as the name pretendeth; and thereupon followeth that a man may be easily deceived, when the names do not answer to the things whereof they are names. There may be, I grant, a free⁴ and more licentious use of names; but that licence is more tolerable in any thing rather than in matters of the church and salvation. And, if there be some cases wherein names that are not so proper may be borne with, yet are there also which are intolerable. And⁵ who can abide that a minister of the gospel should be called by the name of a Levite, or sacrificer, unless it be he which would not care much if the remembrance of the death and resurrection of our Saviour Christ were plucked out of his mind? Again, It is unlawful for any man to take upon him those titles which are proper to our Saviour Christ; but the title of an archbishop⁶ is only proper to our Saviour Christ; therefore none may⁷ take that unto him. That it is proper to our Saviour Christ

If Christ be called an archbishop, then is not the title devised by anti-christ.

[² Cartwright says, “Unto the first and second division, being beside the question, I answer nothing.” But, before advancing to the third, he reverts to the examination at length of the passages Matt. xx. 25, &c., Luke xxii. 25, &c. which had been discussed before (see Vol. I. pages 148, &c.).—Sec. Repl. pp. 404, &c.]

[³ The precise words have not been found; but for a very similar idea see Aristot. Op. Lut. Par. 1629. De Interp. cap. i. Tom. I. p. 37.]

[⁴ Freer, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ As, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁶ Of archbishop, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ Therefore no man may, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

appeareth by that which St Peter saith, where he calleth him ἀρχιποίμενα, which is “arch-shepherd,” or archbishop; for bishop and shepherd are all one. And in the Hebrews, where he is called “the great Shepherd of the sheep;” and in the Acts, and Hebrews, “arch-leader” of life and of salvation; which titles are never found to be given unto any, but unto our Saviour Christ, and are proper titles of his mediation, and therefore cannot be without bold presumption applied unto any mortal man.

1 Epist. v. 4.¹Heb. xiii. 20.¹Acts iii. 15.¹Acts v. 31.¹Heb. xii. 2.¹

JO. WHITGIFT.

To contend about names, when there is an agreement of the matter and substance, hath always been taken for a manifest note of a contentious sophister. But your answer is ready, that you contend for the substance also, which being true you might have cut off the most part of this section, whereby you would excuse yourself for improving the name of an archbishop. But, to come to the purpose, you say: “It is unlawful for any man to take upon him those titles which are proper to our Saviour Christ; but the title of archbishop is only proper to our Saviour Christ; therefore, &c.” The minor you prove by the words of St Peter, 1 Epist. chap. v., where he calleth him ἀρχιποίμενα, and Acts iii. v., and xiii. to the Hebrews, &c.; where he is called “the great Shepherd of the sheep,” “arch-leader,” &c. But, before I come to your minor, I must a little better search your major; for you pass it over smoothly, as though there could be nothing said unto it.

Names proper to God may in some respect be attributed to other.

I grant that those names which be proper unto God cannot be given to any other, in that respect that they are proper unto God; but that they can in no other respect be attributed to any other, it is untrue, and against the manifest words of the scriptures. What name is more proper unto God than is this name “God?” And yet is the same also attributed unto man. Moses, Exod. vii., is called “Pharao’s god,” because he was God’s minister to speak unto Pharao in his name, and to execute his judgments upon him. Nec vero, as M. Calvin saith, quicquam sibi detraxit Deus &c.²: “Neither did God derogate anything from himself, in that he transferred Calv. in Harin.

[¹ The verses are added from Repl. 2. In the third reference, Repl. 1 has Acts ii.]

[² Nec vero quicquam sibi detraxit Deus quod in Mosen transferret: quia sic communicat cum servis suis quod sibi proprium est ut maneat semper integer.—Calvin, Op. Amst. 1667-71. In Quat. Libr. Mos. Harin. Exod. vii. Tom. I. p. 278.]

(his name) unto Moses, because he doth so communicate that which is proper to himself with his servants, that he still remaineth whole." In the xxii. of Exod., the judges are called "gods;" and, in the lxxxii. Psalm, magistrates are called "gods" also. In the xxiii. of Matth., Christ speaketh of the names of "Master," "Father," and "Doctor," as proper to himself; for he saith: "Be not ye called Rabbi; for one is your Master, to wit, Christ, &c. And call no man your father upon earth; for there is but one your Father, which is in heaven. Be not called doctors; for one is your Doctor, even Christ;" and yet no man is so ignorant that he will deny these names to be common to others, though not in the same respects; as I have shewed before. Christ also calleth himself a "Pastor," John x.; and so doth St Peter call him "Bishop," and "Pastor," 1 Epist. ii.³; and so he is properly and of himself, and yet these names be communicated with other. In the viii. of John, he is called Lux mundi, which is a most proper name, aptly given unto him; and yet doth he himself give the same name to his disciples, Matth. v. Divers such examples might I shew for the improving of your major; but these be sufficient.

Thus therefore I answer in few words, both to your major and minor, that some names that be proper to God are also attributed unto man, but not in the same respect; for they belong unto God properly and per se, to man per accidens, and in respect that he is the minister of God, and such other like causes. And therefore, although this name "arch-shepherd," or (if you will) "archbishop," be proper to Christ in the respect that he is not only the chief Shepherd, but also the only Shepherd, to whom the sheep do properly pertain, and to whom all the other shepherds must of necessity submit themselves, and in whose name, and under whom only, the church is governed, yet, in the respect of the external policy of the church, and of pastors and bishops that are to be kept and directed in such things as pertain to their duty, the same name of archbishop may aptly and fitly be attributed unto him that hath the ordering and direction of the rest, in the external government of the church.

But, whiles you confound the spiritual and the external regiment of the church, you confound both yourself and your reader also. In the spiritual regiment Christ is only the Pastor;

How the name archbishop may be transferred to other than Christ.

The spiritual and external government confounded.

and all other be his sheep: in the external regiment there be many other pastors. In the spiritual regiment Christ is only the Archbishop, and governeth all, to whom all other must make their account; but in the external government there be many archbishops, as the state of every church requireth. In the spiritual government Christ is only the Prince, the King, the Judge, and in respect of him all other be subjects; but in the external government there be several countries, several kings, princes, magistrates, judges. Again, in the spiritual kingdom of Christ, and regiment of his church, there is no respect of persons, but all be equal: in the external regiment and government there is and must be degrees of persons. To be short, in respect of Christ and his spiritual government, there is neither magistrate nor archbishop, &c.; but, in the respect of men, and the external face of the church, there are both, and that according to Christ's own order; as shall hereafter be declared. So that now you may perceive your error to be in not rightly distinguishing the states and times of the church and government¹.

Chapter i. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 61, Sect. 4.

And, if any man will reply and say that it is not said that our Saviour Christ is only archbishop, I answer that he is not only said the head, and yet notwithstanding there is no more heads of the church but he. And, if it be further said that these archbishops are but under and as it were subordinate archbishops, I say that a man may as well say that men may be also under-heads of the church; which is the same which is alleged for the pope. Which thing is not only true in those words which do signify and set unlawful things before our eyes, but even in those names also which, having no corruption in their own nature, yet through the corrupt use of men have as it were gotten such a tack² of that corruption, that the use of them cannot be without offence.

[¹ Cartwright rejoins that Whitgift's examples are unsatisfactory, asks if "a man which confesseth himself mortal may be called by the name of Jehovah, &c.," calls the answer "insufficient," and "full of disorder," and complains that "it confoundeth and shuffleth together the authority of our Saviour Christ, as he is the Son of God only before all worlds, co-equal with his Father, with that which he hath given of his Father, and which he exerciseth in respect he is Mediator between God and us."—Sec. Repl. pp. 408, &c.]

[² Tack: spot, stain.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

He is only "Archbishop" and Bishop in respect of his spiritual government, which he keepeth only unto himself, and in the respect that all other be under him, and have their authority from him. But this name may also aptly be given unto those that have the oversight of other bishops in the external government of the church; in the which, as I have said, magistrates be called gods.

How Christ is the only Head of the church.

Christ is "the only Head of the church," if by the head you understand that which giveth the body life, sense, and motion; for Christ only by his Spirit doth give life and nutriment to his body: he only doth pour spiritual blessings into it, and doth inwardly direct and govern it. Likewise he is only the Head of the whole church; for that title cannot agree to any other. But, if by "the head" you understand an external ruler and governor of any particular nation or church (in which signification head is usually taken), then I do not perceive why the magistrate may not as well be called the head of the church, that is, the chief governor of it in the external policy, as he is called the head of the people, and of the commonwealth. And, as it is no absurdity to say that the civil magistrate is head of the commonwealth, next and immediately under God (for it is most true), so is it none to say that, under God also, he is head of the church, that is, chief governor, as I have before said. Constantine, in an epistle that he writeth to the people of Alexandria, as it is reported by Athanasius, Apol. 2, calleth bishops *ecclesiarum capita*³: "the heads of their churches." And yet is the pope's supremacy usurped, both because it taketh from magistrates that which is due unto them, and also usurpeth the authority of Christ in remitting and retaining sins, in making laws contrary to God's laws, which he saith be necessary to salvation, in making his supremacy a matter of salvation, and in challenging authority over the whole church of Christ, and an hundred such like presumptions.

How the magistrate may be called head of the church.

Bishops called heads of churches; and yet the pope's supremacy is usurped.

The archbishop, being both under God and his prince, hath his name only in respect of his authority in certain causes above other bishops, and that but in one province or kingdom only; neither can either the name or use of it (as it is in this church) offend any but such as be offended with all superiors, and think that none ought to be better than themselves¹.

[³ Εἰ μὲν οὖν . . . ἄχρι λόγων ἦσαν ἐνσπάντες οἱ ἀληθῶς ἐπίσκοποι, ἡ τυχόντες ἦσαν ἄνδρες, ἀλλὰ μὴ ἐπισήμων πόλεων, καὶ κεφαλὰὶ τοσοῦτων ἐκκλησιῶν, κ.τ.λ.—Athanas. Op. Par. 1698. Constant. Cæs. Epist. ad Pop. Alex. in Apolog. contr. Arian. 89. Tom. I. Pars 1. p. 204.]

Chapter i. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 62, Sect. 1, 2.

In the primitive church the name of a pope was honest, and was all one with the name of a good pastor²; but now by the ambition of the man of Rome it is so defiled that every good man shaketh at the very mention of it.

Tertullian, Lib. De Pudicitia; Cyprian, Lib. ii. 7; Jerome in his epistles to August.

The name of a tyrant was first honourable, and the same with a king, and yet, through cruelty and unjust rule of certain, it is become now so hateful, that no upright and just-dealing prince, none that governeth with³ equity, and to the commodity of his subjects, would bear to be called tyrant; whereby it may appear that it is not for nought that we do stand of these names.

JO. WHITGIFT.

A lawful name may remain, though it hath been abused.

Papa signifieth a father, and was in times past common to all bishops, but now it is proper to the bishop of Rome, and therefore hated for his sake, whom it now signifieth. So tyrannus sometime signified a king generally, now it signifieth a cruel king, and a bloody governor, and therefore also abhorred. But an archbishop, though the persons at some time have degenerated, yet the name hath continued in the same signification; and therefore the reason is nothing like; except you will also for the like cause condemn the name of a bishop, or of a king; for there hath been many evil men called by the name of bishops, and many tyrants by the name of kings, and yet the names never the worse. If names

[¹ Cartwright here enters into a long disquisition "to prove the title head of the church to belong only to our Saviour Christ." He reverts to what Whitgift had said before (see Vol. I. page 392), declares that he has borrowed arguments from Harding, and cites Jewel's authority against him (Conf. Bp. Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. III. pp. 265, &c.).—Sec. Repl. pp. 411, &c.]

[² ... bonus pastor et benedictus papa concionaris &c.—Tertull. Op. Lut. 1641. De Pudic. 13. p. 729. Optamus te, beatissime ac gloriosissime papa, &c.—Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Cler. Rom. ad Cypr. Epist. xxx. p. 61. Domino vere sancto et beatissimo pape Augustino, Hieronymus in Christo salutem.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Hieron. ad August. Epist. xxxix. Tom. II. col. 33. Conf. cols. 156, 61, 8, 89, 612, 730. Et in Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad August. Epist. lxxvi., lxxix., lxxi., lxxiv., lxxv., lxxix., lxxx. Tom. IV. Pars II. cols. 604, 8, 11, 17, 29, 43, 4.]

[³ Governeth it with, Repl. 1.]

should be changed so oft as they be abused, some had need to have an office only to invent new names. There was a certain kind of heretics that called themselves "Apostolic;" and yet the name of an apostle is never the worse. A lawful name of a lawful office may remain together with the office, howsoever beforetime it hath been abused⁴.

Chapter i. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 62, Sect. 2.

Now, if the names ought to be odious, being both horribly abused, and also forbidden by our Saviour Christ, the things themselves must be in greater hatred; the unlawfulness whereof may thus appear.

Petitio principii; for you have not yet proved this.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is a manifest petition of the principle, and in no point as yet proved. But let us hear the reasons why the office should be condemned.

Chapter i. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 62, Sect. 3.

First of all, the ministry is by the word of God, and heavenly, and not left to the will of men to devise at their pleasure; as appeareth by that which is noted of St John, where the Pharisees, coming to St John Baptist, after he⁶ had denied to be either Christ, or Elias, or another prophet, John i. 25,⁵ conclude, "If thou be neither Christ, nor Elias, nor of the prophets, why baptizest thou?" which had been no good argument, if St John might have been of some other function than of those which were ordinary in the church, and instituted of God. And therefore St John, to establish his singular and extraordinary function, allegeth the word of God, whereby appeareth that, as it was not lawful to bring in any strange doctrine, so it was⁷ not lawful to teach the true doctrine under the name of any other function than was instituted of⁸ God.

Scriptures willingly falsified to make them serve his turn. The Pharisees made false arguments; and so do you in following them.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is your first argument: "The Pharisees, coming to St John Baptist, after he had denied to be either Christ, or Elias,

[⁴ Cartwright rejoins, "The question is not whether the name of archbishop is, but whether it ought to be continued: &c." He then returns again to the discussion of Matt. xx.—Sec. Repl. pp. 420, &c.]

[⁵ This reference is inserted from Repl. 1 and 2; the former of which does not give the verse.]

[⁶ After that he, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ Was it, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ By, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

The disordered argument of the Replier.

Deut. xviii.

Matt. xi.

or another prophet, conclude, If thou be neither Christ, nor Elias, nor of the prophets, why baptizest thou?" Ergo, there may be no archbishops; which is your meaning. But, lest you should think that I cavil, I will use your own conclusion, which is this: ergo, "there was no other ordinary function in the church." This argument hath neither head nor foot, form nor matter; is this your exquisiteness in logic? First, your antecedent is untrue, and builded upon the false allegation of the scripture. For the Pharisees do not say unto him, "If thou be neither Christ, nor Elias, nor of the prophets;" but these be the words of the text, "If thou be not the Christ, nor Elias, nor the prophet:" now there is a great difference betwixt these two kind of speeches, "if thou be not of the prophets;" and, "if thou be not the prophet." For the first signifieth that they should ask him, whether he were any of the prophets; the other, whether he were that prophet whom they looked for to be such a one as Moses was, according to that which is written Deut. xviii. verse 15; for else John would not have denied himself to have been a prophet, seeing that Christ saith he was one, Matth. xi. Moreover, they ask him not of those ordinary functions that were then in the church, but of such extraordinary persons as they looked for to come, as Christ, Elias, or that prophet. Thirdly, they did not recite all the ordinary functions, as Levite and priest; which were then most ordinary and almost only at that time. So that your reason hath neither form nor truth in it¹.

Chapter i. The Eighth Division.

T. C. Page 62, Sect. 4.

Let the whole practice of the church under the law be looked upon, and it shall not be found that any other ecclesiastical ministry was appointed than those orders of high priest and priests and Levites, &c., which were appointed by the law of God; and, if there were any raised extraordinarily, the same had their calling confirmed from heaven, either by signs or miracles, or by plain and clear testimonies of the mouth of God, or by extraordinary exciting and moving² of the Spirit of God. So that it appeareth that the ministry of the gospel, and the functions thereof, ought to be from heaven, and of God, and not invented by the brains³ of men:

[¹ Cartwright says that, though Whitgift declares there is "neither head nor foot" in his reason, he can find both, and censures his exceptions to it as "vain."
—Sec. Repl. pp. 436. 7.]

[² Movings, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ Brain, Repl. 1 and 2.]

from heaven, I say, and heavenly, because, although it be executed by earthly men, and the ministers also are chosen by men like unto themselves, yet, because it is done by the word and institution of God, that hath not only ordained that the word should be preached, but hath ordained also in what order and by whom it should be preached, it may be well⁴ accounted to come from heaven and from God.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Neither is there any new ministry or order appointed in this church, because there be archbishops. For archbishops be ministers of the word and sacraments, and quoad ministerium do not differ from other pastors (in respect of whom they are called archbishops) but touching order and government; as you may read afterward in the Answer to the Admonition. So that all this which is here spoken is grounded upon a false principle. For you would make the reader believe that to institute an archbishop is to institute a new ministry; wherein you are marvellously overshot. The Jews had government in their church, and superiority in the ecclesiastical estate; and so have we. But you may not tie the church of Christ to the pattern of the Jews' synagogue; for that were to make it servile.

The archbishop no new ministry.

Chapter i. The Ninth Division.

T. C. Page 62, Sect. 5.

Seeing therefore that these functions of the archbishop and archdeacon are not in the word of God, it followeth that they are of the earth, and so can do no good, but much harm, in the church. And, if any man will say that we do the church great injury, because we do tie her to a certain number of orders of ministers, as it were to a stake, so that she⁵ may not devise new functions; I say that both the church and Christ doth accuse him again: Christ esteemeth himself to have injury, because that by this means he is imagined not to have been careful and provident enough for his church, in that he hath left the ministry, wherein doth consist the life of the church (being that whereby it is begotten), so rawly⁶ and unperfect, that by permitting it⁷ to the ordering of men there is a great danger of error, which he might have set without all danger, by a word or two speaking.

Weak proofs must needs infer a weak conclusion.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Your proofs hitherto alleged are most insufficient to justify this conclusion; and yet do you boldly go on as though all

[⁴ Well be, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ We, Def. A. and B.]

[⁶ Raw, Repl. 2.]

[⁷ Permitting of it, Repl. 1 and 2.]

were sure. This is but boldness and confidency, it is not sound and pithy dealing. I still deny that there is any other ministry in the church, because there are archbishops, than is by the word of God confirmed; but you have not yet proved, by either scripture or reason, that there ought not to be governors or superiors among the ministers of the gospel, to whom any other names may be given than is expressed in the word; which you ought to prove, else you do but dally, and study with vain words to enlarge your book.

It is manifest that Christ hath left the government of his church, touching the external policy, in sundry points in the ordering of men, who have to make orders and laws for the same, as time, place, and person requireth, so that nothing be done contrary to his word; as it is before proved, Tract. ii.¹ and shall be more hereafter.

Chapter i. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 62, Sect. 6.

The church of the other side riseth against him; for that he maketh Christ less careful for her than he was for that under the law. For, tell me, in the whole volume of the testament is there any kind or degree of ministry whereof God is not the certain and express author? Was there ever any man (I except Jeroboam and such profane men) either so holy, or so wise, or of such great knowledge, that ever did so much as dream of instituting of a new ministry? After the long wandering of the ark in the wilderness, when it came to be placed in Jerusalem, tell me if any, besides the Levites and priests, the ordinary ministers, and the prophets which were immediately stirred up of God, were found to have ordained any office or title which was not commanded, or whether there was at any time anything added or enjoined to those offices of priesthood and Leviteship which was not by the law prescribed.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Surely here is nothing but vain repetitions of that false principle, whereupon this tautology and multiplication of words is builded, that is, that the institution of an archbishop is the institution of a new ministry; as though the apostle St Paul, when he placed Timothy at Ephesus and Titus at Creta, did institute a new ministry, because he gave them authority and jurisdiction over the rest, as it is afterward proved; or the church, when it did appoint one among the bishops to govern

T. C. faulteth still in the petition of the principle.

[¹ See Vol. I. pages 175, &c.]

the rest in *schismatis remedium*²: “to remedy schisms,” as Hierome saith, and as it shall more at large hereafter be declared. Neither can it therefore be said that Christ doth shew himself “less careful for his church than he did for that under the law.” For his carefulness appeareth and consisteth in this, that he hath now much more plainly set down the doctrine of salvation in all points, than it was in the law, and hath also ordained that there should be not only fit ministers to publish that doctrine, but offices also to govern the people in godliness. As for names and titles and other external things variable according to divers circumstances, he hath left them to the liberty of his church; as I have before declared; which is one part of his singular goodness towards the church, in that it is not so servilely tied to external things, and to the letter, as it was under the law.

Christ is not less careful for this church than for that under the law.

And it is evident that under the law there were offices and titles in the church, which are not commanded in the scripture, nor whereof we read “God to have been the express author;” as, archisynagogus, Mark v.; scribæ, or legis doctores, or σπατηργοὶ τοῦ ἱεροῦ, magistratus seu duces templi, Luke xxii. ver. 52; and those seniores populi, and that συνέδριον whereupon you ground your seigniory. For M. Calvin upon the xviii. of Matth. saith that this συνέδριον was appointed after the children of Israel returned from the captivity of ⁴Babylon⁵.

Titles and offices in the church under the law whereof God is not the chief author.

[² Quod autem postea unus electus est, qui cæteris præponeretur, in schismatis remedium factum est: ne unusquisque ad se trahens Christi ecclesiam rumperet. —Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 803.]

[³ This word is corrected from the list of errata in Def. A.: both A. and B. have where in the text.]

[⁴ Scimus ex quo reversi fuerunt ab exilio Babylonico Judæi, delecto concilio quod vocabant Sanhedrin, Græce Synedrion, mandatam fuisse censuram morum et doctrinæ.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Harm. Euang. Matt. xviii. 16. Tom. VI. p. 212.]

[⁵ Cartwright makes a long rejoinder to this division. He first sets himself to prove that “the archbishopric” is “a new ministry.” Here among other arguments he says: “Whereas a bishop may be ordained by two or three other bishops, the archbishop must be ordained by all the bishops of the province, either present, or at the least consenting. Now, seeing the ordination is of the form of their ministry, and these formal causes be divers, it followeth that these offices must needs be divers. And that the substantial and essential form of a bishop is different from that of the archbishop, it is plain also by that they are members of one division, and therefore of necessity differ in the substantial form; as a man differeth from a brute beast, not in circumstance, but in that he is of another nature. &c.” He further says that Timothy and Titus “shall never be proved to have

Chapter i. The Eleventh Division.

T. C. Page 63, Sect. 1.

All men know that the ark of Noah was a figure of the church. Noah was both a wise and a godly man; yet what doth the Lord leave to his wisdom, when as he appointeth the matter, the form, the length, the breadth, the height, the wood, the kind and sort of wood? Gen. vi. 14, 22.¹

JO. WHITGIFT.

Uncertain reasoning of figures and allegories.

Something left to Noah not commanded.

Gen. viii.

Calvin, in
vi. Gen.

“All men know” how uncertain a reason it is that is grounded upon figures and types, except the application thereof may be found in the scriptures. For a man may apply them as it pleaseth him, even as he may do allegories; and yet was there many things required to the ark, whereof there is no express mention made, and namely nails or pins to join it together; neither is it expressed whether the window was of glass, or of crystal, or of neither. Moreover, he is not prescribed to make a cover for it; and yet it had one, as is declared cap. viii. The overseers and masters of the work likewise are not there appointed, but left to the discretion of Noah. There are many other things required to the making of such an ark, whereof there is no express mention in that place. To conclude, Noah being in the ark did things which the scripture doth not express that he was commanded to do; as when he sent out the raven and the dove, &c. cap. viii. Wherefore I say with M. Calvin, *Arcam fuisse ecclesiæ imaginem certum est, teste Petro, verum singulas ejus parteis ad ecclesiam aptare minime consentaneum est*²: “It is certain that the ark was a figure of the church by the testimony of Peter, but it is not meet to apply every part thereof unto the church.”

had any such authority over the rest, and, if they had, yet it falleth not on the archbishop's side; seeing they were no bishops, but evangelists, &c.” Then he exclaims that “there is great injury done unto the church, great dishonour done unto our Saviour Christ:” if “he is said to have done less in appointing the outward government of his church now than under the law,” he “is robbed” of part “of his kingly office.” Afterwards he censures what is said about the “servile tie” as “papistical and anabaptistical,” and declares “the examples brought as exceptions against the certain and commanded ministry” are such as to set Whitgift's cause “in the mockery and laughter of all men.”—Sec. Repl. pp. 438, &c.]

[¹ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[² Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Gen. cap. vi. Tom. I. p. 43.]

Chapter i. The Twelfth Division.

T. C. Page 63, Sect. 4.

Exod. xxvi.⁴ In the tabernacle the church is yet more expressly³ shewed forth. Moses that was the overseer of the work was a wise and godly⁵ man, the artificers that wrought it, Bezaleel and Aholiab, most cunning workmen; and yet observe how the Lord leaveth nothing to their will, but telleth not only of the boards, of the curtains, of the apparel, but also of the bars, of the rings, of the strings, of the hooks⁶, of the besoms, of the snuffers, and of the things, the matter, and the form.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is well known that the Israelites had long continued among the Egyptians, a most superstitious kind of people, without any law of God written, and therefore now being delivered from them, and yet inclined to their idolatry, God (as most writers think) of his infinite wisdom did so charge them with ceremonies of his own institution, that they should neither have leisure to use any other, nor yet desire the Egyptiacal kind of worshipping.

Why God appointed so many ceremonies to the Israelites.

Touching the tabernacle and the particular description of things pertaining to the same, I say with Pellican: "These things are particularly described according to the word of the Lord, that the people might know that they ought not so much to obey Moses' precepts as the will of God, in building the tabernacle, and in freely offering to the same their gold, their silver, their brass, their purple, &c.; the which otherwise they would have abused to their own vanities; and that also they might not be without that beauty in ceremonies and worshipping of God, which they see among the gentiles; moreover, that they might have matter to occupy them with, lest they should fall to slothfulness and idleness⁷." So that Pellican.

[³ Expressedly, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ These references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁵ And a godly, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ Books, Def. A. and B.]

[⁷ Hæc sigillatim sic descripta sunt, juxta verbum Domini, ut populus non tam Mosis institutis, quam divinæ voluntati se obsequi debere sciret: tabernaculum extruendo, et pretiosa quæque sponte largiendo, quibus alioqui abusi fuissent ad suas vanitates: et ne carerent suis ceremoniis, et splendore divini cultus, quem apud ethnicos passim admirari et concupiscere consueverunt, ut haberet populus occupationes contra iners otium, utque prudentiores in populo essent in majori autoritate, quibus obedirent libentius ad bonum suum.—Comment. Biblior. Op. C. Pellican. Tigr. 1536-46. Exod. cap. xxv. Tom. I. foll. 99, 100.]

of this place it may be well gathered, that nothing wherein the worship of God doth consist is to be used without his prescription; but how you can¹ aptly apply this figure to the external government and policy of the church, I cannot well understand; and, if you may so use it, yet do you but allegory; which is no good kind of proof, because allegories may be applied according to every particular man's invention. But all that can be truly gathered of this figure is (as I have said before) that no kind of worship may be brought into the church of God which is not grounded upon his word; and therefore M. Calvin, speaking of this tabernacle, saith that God "gave precepts of the tabernacle, and things pertaining to it;" *ne externa pietatis exercitia, quæ videmus fuisse admodum necessaria, populum deficerent*²: "lest the people should want the outward exercises of godliness, which we see to have been very necessary." And again he saith that, when Moses in the mountain, did see the example of the tabernacle, he was then instructed *de vero Dei cultu et mysteriis*³: "of the true worship of God and of heavenly mysteries." And again, speaking of this tabernacle, he saith: *Lex Judæos ad spirituales solum Dei cultum instituit, sed ceremoniis vestitum, ut ferebat temporis ratio*⁴: "The law did institute the Jews only to the spiritual worship of God, but yet covered with ceremonies, as the time required." Therefore in this figure there was only expressed what should be done in the worshipping of God, and not in the external policy and government of the church.

Calvin. xxxv.
Exod. in expos. 2. præcepti.

Chapter i. The Thirteenth Division.

T. C. Page 63, Sect. 3.

Let us come to the temple, which as it was more near the time of Christ, so it doth more lively express the church of God which now is. Salomon,

[¹ Can you, Def. B.]

[² Et probabile est, ex quo Deus fœdus suum pepigerat, statim de tabernaculo, ejusque appendicibus præcepta dedisse: ne &c. quæ vidimus &c.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. In Quat. Libr. Mos. Harm. Sec. Præcept. Tom. I. p. 408.]

[³ Nunc si quis objiciat, compositum fuisse tabernaculum ad exemplar quod Moses viderat in monte: in promptu est solutio, Mosén non tunc primum in monte fuisse edoctum de vero Dei cultu et cælestibus mysteriis, &c.—Id. ibid. p. 409.]

[⁴ Id. ibid. p. 410.]

1 Kings iii. the wisest man that ever was, or shall be, doth nothing in it, 12.⁵
 1 Chr. xxviii. neither for the temple, nor for the vessels of the temple, nor for 11, &c. 19.⁵ the beauty of it, but according to the form that was enjoined him ;
 1 Kings vi.⁵ as appeareth in the first of the Kings, and the second⁶ of the 2 Chron. iii. Chronicles⁷. And in the restoring of that temple Ezechiel is
 iv. v.⁵ witness how the angel by the commandment of God doth, part Ezek. xl.⁵ by part, appoint all to be done both in the temple and in the furniture thereof.

JO. WHITGIFT.

These two examples of the “tabernacle,” and of the “temple,” tend to one end, and might more aptly have been alleged in the title of ceremonies than of the government of the church, because, whatsoever is here spoken of either of them pertaineth to ceremonies, and to the worshipping of God, and not to external policy and government of the church, and therefore most unaptly alleged against archbishops, &c.

But what need I labour much in this matter, when you yourself, in the 22. page of your book, “offer, for one thing that I shall bring left to the order of this church, to shew me that the Israelites had twenty that were undecided by the express word⁸?”

The Replier
 confuted by his own words.
 Pag. 22,
 sect. 1.

And it is certain that both David and Salomon appointed orders, the one about the tabernacle, the other about the temple, which we read not in scripture they were commanded to do. And David appointed degrees of officers in the temple, and Salomon workmen and overseers, whereof we do not read that they had any special commandment⁹.

1 Chron.
 xxiv.

Chapter i. The Fourteenth Division.

T. C. Page 63, Sect. 4.

Now, if the Holy Ghost in figures and tropes doth so carefully and (as a man may speak) curiously comprehend all things, in the truth itself how much more is it to be thought that he hath performed this! If in the

[⁵ These references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁶ And second, Repl. 1.]

[⁷ In the Kings and Chronicles, Repl. 2.]

[⁸ See Vol. I. page 270.]

[⁹ Cartwright maintains at length that his reasonings hold in this and the two preceding divisions, calls Whitgift's citations inconclusive, and accuses him of inconsistency, because he had before said (see Vol. I. pages 263, 4), “neither was there the least thing to be done in the church omitted in the law.”—Sec. Repl. pp. 444, &c.]

shadows, how much more in the body! If he have done this in earthly things, and which shall perish, how¹ is it to be thought that he hath not performed it in heavenly, and those which abide for ever? And then tell me what are those times of which it was said, "the Messiah when he cometh will tell us all?" Is it a like thing that he, which did John iv. 25.² not only appoint the temple and the tabernacle, but the ornaments of them, would not only neglect the ornaments of the church, but also that without the which (as we are borne in hand) it cannot long stand? shall we think that he, which remembered the bars there, hath forgotten the pillars here? or he, that there remembered the pins, did here forget the master-builders? how he should there remember³ the besoms, and here forget archbishops, if any had been needful? that he should there⁴ make mention of the snuffers to purge the lights, and here pass by the lights themselves? and, to conclude, that he should make mention there of the motes, and here say nothing of the beams? there reckon up the gnats, here keep silence of the camels? What is this else but that which Aristotle saith, τὰ μικρὰ ὁρᾶν καὶ τὰ μεγάλα παρορᾶν⁵, that is, "to look to small things, and not to look to great;" which if it cannot fall into the Lord, let it be a shame to say that the chief pillar and upholder of the church is not expressed in the scripture, nor cannot be concluded of it?

JO. WHITGIFT.

You have before confessed, page 15,⁶ that "certain things are left to the order of the church, because they are of that nature which are varied by times, places, persons, and other circumstances, &c.;" which is sufficient to answer whatsoever you have here spoken of "the carefulness of the Holy Ghost in the truth itself, above figures and tropes." Although there is no doubt but the Holy Ghost was as careful in the one as in the other, and loved the one people as well as the other; and therefore it may be an argument a paribus, but not a minori; as you seem to make it. I have told you before also why God did more particularly prescribe every ceremony to the Israelites in the law, than he hath done to his people in the gospel.

God hath in his gospel performed and fulfilled all "the tropes and figures" of the law whatsoever. Christ which is the Messiah hath told us all things that are necessary to sal-

[¹ Which are perished how, Repl. 2.]

[² This reference is inserted from Repl. 1 and 2: in the former the verse is not given.]

[³ Should he there remember, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Needful? there, Repl. 2.]

[⁵ ... οἱ μικρὰς ὁμοιότητας ὁρῶσι, μεγάλας δὲ παρορῶσι.—Aristot. Op. Lut. Par. 1629. Metaphys. Lib. XII. cap. vi. Tom. II. p. 979.]

[⁶ See Vol. I. page 195.]

[⁷ Answereth, Def. A.]

vation, John xx.; and so is that place in the iv. of John to be John xx. understood⁸.

We make not an archbishop necessary to salvation, but profitable to the government of the church, and therefore consonant to the word of God; as shall be declared. We know the church of Christ is not builded upon any man, either as upon foundations⁹, or “pillars,” if we speak properly, but upon Christ himself, and his word, which remain unmoveable: we know also that the same church may stand without the external help of man. But yet hath God appointed functions in his church both ecclesiastical and civil, as means to keep it in external peace, discipline, and order; and, though he hath not expressed the names, yet hath he allowed the offices. Among men the chief “pillar” that upholdeth the church is the christian prince and magistrate; and yet where have you in the gospel any such express mention made thereof, as there is in the appointing of the tabernacle “of besoms, snuffers, &c.”? which examples you use in derision; such is your modesty and reverence. We know that all things necessary to salvation are much more plainly expressed in the gospel than in the law: we are also well assured that Christ in his word hath fully and plainly comprehended all things requisite to faith and good life; but yet hath he committed certain orders of ceremonies, and kind of government, to the disposition of his church, the general rules given in his word being observed, and nothing being done contrary to his will and commandment therein contained; as I have proved before.

Chapter i. The Fifteenth Division.

T. C. Page 63, Sect. 5.

Moreover, these¹⁰ ministries, without the which the church is fully builded and brought to perfection and complete unity, are not to be retained in the church; but without the ministries of archbishop, &c., the church may be fully builded and brought to perfection; therefore these ministries¹¹ are not to be retained.

A dangerous major.

An untrue minor.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Your minor is untrue. For the church, in a kingdom

[⁸ “That out of St John xx. is spoken of the miracles our Saviour did, not of his doctrine; and is thrust in by strong hands in this place.”—Sec. Repl. p. 447.]

[⁹ Foundation, Def. A.] [¹⁰ Those, Repl. 2.] [¹¹ Ministers, Def. B.]

The place
in the iv.
Ephes. discussed.

The major tendeth to the shutting out of the civil magistrate.
The church must not only be brought to perfection, but also be preserved therein.

where it hath an external government, where it includeth both good and bad, where it is molested with contentious persons, with schisms, heresies, &c., cannot enjoy complete unity, nor be perfectly governed touching the external form and government, without such offices and governors. Your major also containeth dangerous doctrine, including as well the christian magistrate as the archbishop. And it is in effect all one with this argument: "The church is fully builded and brought to perfection and complete unity" without the christian magistrate; therefore christian magistrates "are not to be retained;" which is the very argument of the anabaptists against christian magistrates. You must therefore understand that the church must as well be preserved and kept in perfection, peace and unity, as builded and brought thereunto, and that such offices and functions are lawful as tend to that end, and be therefore by lawful authority appointed, howsoever some wayward persons think the contrary¹.

Chapter i. The Sixteenth Division.

T. C. Page 63, Sect. 6.

And that without these ministries the church may be complete, it appeareth by that which is in the fourth to the Ephesians², where Eph. iv. 11, it is said that Christ "gave some apostles, some³ evangelists, ^{12.4} some pastors and doctors, to the restoring of the saints unto the work of the ministry, until we all come to the unity of faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, and unto a perfect man."

JO. WHITGIFT.

The place in the iv. Ephes.
discussed.

In that place to the Ephesians there is no mention made of deacons and widows, nor of your elders; and therefore it maketh as much against them as it doth against archbishops. Moreover, it hath apostles, evangelists, and prophets; all which you seclude from the state of this church. Thirdly, it containeth those ministries only which are occupied in the word and administration of the sacraments, not those which pertain

[¹ Cartwright rejoins that, as the "question is, what ecclesiastical ministries are sufficient, the mention therefore of the civil magistrate is absurd." He adds, "Beside that, hereby at unawares he confesseth 'that the church may be fully builded, and accomplished without a christian magistrate;' which is against that he saith, 'the magistrate is the head of the church.'"—Sec. Repl. p. 448.]

[² Is in the Ephesians, Repl. 2.]

[³ Apostles, some prophets, some, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

to order and discipline; as you afterward yourself confess. And therefore I understand not how that place can help you any-thing at all.

The place
in the iv.
Ephes. discussed.

Chapter i. The Seventeenth Division.

T. C. Page 63, Sect. ult.

The learned writers have thus reasoned against the pope: that, forasmuch⁵ as apostles, prophets, &c. are sufficient for the building of the church, therefore there ought to be no pope. The argument and necessity of the conclusion is as strong against the archbishop, and all one. For by the same reason that the pope is cast away as a superfluous thing, for that these offices are able to make perfect the church, is the archbishop likewise thrown out of the church, as a knob or some lump of flesh, which being no member of the body doth both burden it and disfigure it. And, as they say that God gave no pope to his church, therefore the pope can do no good; so we may well say God gave no archbishop to his church, therefore the archbishop can do no good.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If there were no stronger places than this against the pope of Rome his usurped authority, it might stand still, for anything that I know; because this place speaketh only of the offices occupied in preaching the word and administrating the sacraments, as I have said, not of any office of government. Neither is it a perfect pattern; because it hath omitted those offices before mentioned. I have told you before that a negative argument from the scripture (except it be in matters of salvation) is but weak; likewise that an archbishop is no new ministry, but may well be contained in the number of those of whom the apostle there speaketh. For the name of a pastor doth comprehend both archbishops and bishops. The name doth but signify an office of government convenient for the state of the church in the external policy of it. And, if it did prevail against the pope, yet doth it not so against the archbishop. For the pope doth challenge his authority by succession from Peter; so doth not the archbishop. The pope saith that he is the head of the universal church of Christ; so doth not the archbishop. The pope saith that to be subject to him is necessary to salvation; the archbishop thinketh no such matter. The pope challengeth power to remit and retain sins, to dispense with the word of God, to make new articles of

The great difference betwixt the pope and the archbishop.

[⁵ Forsomuch, Repl. 1 and 2.]

The place
Ephes. iv.
discussed.

faith, &c.; so doth not the archbishop. To be short, the pope claimeth authority over kings and princes, and saith that they have authority from him; but the archbishops (if you speak of ours) acknowledge themselves to be subject to their prince, and to have that authority and jurisdiction from her, which they practise over and above that that other bishops do; and therefore you must needs be reproved here, either of great lack of discretion, or else of gross ignorance, or purposed malice. You might say that God gave no magistrate in that place to his church; ergo, the magistrate can do no good. Surely I think that, if you should well consider how near your arguments approach to the anabaptists, you would either more circumspectly use them, or else quite cast them away¹.

Chapter i. The Eighteenth Division.

T. C. Page 64, Sect. 1.

Neither did God give any archdeacon to his church; therefore he cannot profit the church. But it will be said that this argument followeth not, because no mention is made here of the deacon or of the elder, which notwithstanding are both necessary in the church; and therefore that there are functions profitable in the church whereof no mention is made here. But how easily do all men know that the apostle speaketh of those functions here only which are conversant in the word, and have to do with the preaching thereof, and therefore made here no mention of the deacon or elder. It is said again that in the epistle to the Corinthians St Paul speaketh only of apostles, prophets, and doctors, leaving out ^{1 Cor. xii. 28, 2} evangelists and pastors, and yet evangelists and pastors necessary; and so, although archbishops are not spoken of in the place to the Ephesians, yet they may not therefore be³ shut out as unnecessary. But they that say so should have considered that the diversity of the matter which the apostle handleth in these two places bred a diverse kind of speech. For, in the epistle to the Corinthians, going about to condemn the ambition of men which will thrust themselves into other men's callings, and take upon them to do all themselves, and to be as it were eye, and ear, and hand, and all; St Paul proveth that the church is a body wherein there are many mem-

It is easily known and as easily forgotten again of you; as ap-peareth afterwards.

[¹ Cartwright says that "it is Calvin which reasoneth of the place of the Ephesians" that "there ought to be no pope;" and that, though Whitgift may consider this slender reasoning, he will find "that it is weighty." He insists that it is equally conclusive against an archbishop, and adds: "Therefore this difference between the archbishop and pope, being accidental, and not touching the nature of the government whereof we have to enquire, is unskilfully alleged."—Sec. Repl. pp. 449, 50.]

[² The verse is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[³ Be therefore, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

bers, and the same diverse one from another, and that it is not one member only. And, to prove that, it was sufficient to say that he placed some apostles, some prophets, some doctors, without rehearsing all the kinds⁴ of functions. But, in the epistle to the Ephesians, meaning to shew the liberality of our Saviour Christ in giving those which should be able by doctrine and teaching to make perfect and absolute his church, it was necessary that he should reckon up all those functions whereby that work is done.

The place
Ephes. iv.
discussed.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You have in this place yourself answered your former reasons touching the place to the Ephesians. For I have told you that the names of archbishops and archdeacons be names of jurisdiction and government, not of any new ministry; and therefore such bishops and ministers as be so called to have those names, not in respect of the ministry of the word, but of order and policy.

T. C. hath answered himself touching the place,
Eph. iv.

The objection made of the place of⁵ the 1. to the Corinth. cap. xii. is of more weight than you can be able to remove with all the might you have. For the apostle there as well declareth the diversity of offices in the church, as he doth in that epistle to the Ephesians; yea, and more perfectly too; as the place itself and the very order that the apostle keepeth doth declare. Your distinction is but in vain invented for a shift only, against both reason and authority; against reason, because, the apostle having before made a perfect division of gifts in the church, it is not like but now speaking of offices he doth the same. Moreover, he doth rehearse them in order, saying, first apostles, then prophets, thirdly doctors, &c. Lastly, he reciteth here more offices than he doth there; for here he reciteth eight, and there only five at the most. Authority, both of learned writers, and of the manifest words of the apostle himself, is against it. Peter Martyr saith that in this place *Recenset.....singulatim quas partes habeat hoc corpus*⁶: “he rehearseth particularly what parts this body hath,” meaning the church. And the apostle himself, reciting the divers parts of the body and functions of the same, to declare the divers functions that be in the church, doth no doubt make as perfect a division here as he doth in any other place; so that this shift cannot serve your turn; and, if it did, yet

P. Martyr in 1 Cor. xii.

[⁴ Kind, Def. B.]

[⁵ To, Def. B.]

[⁶ P. Martyr. Comm. in D. Pauli prior. ad Corinth. Epist. Tigur. 1572. cap. xii. 28. fol. 182.]

The place
Ephes. iv.
discussed.

have you proved nothing by it, for you yourself have given the solution, saying that "in the place to the Ephesians he only speaketh of such functions as are conversant in the word;" which is true¹.

Chapter i. The Nineteenth Division.

T. C. Page 64, Sect. 2.

You imagine that they are hanged, and therefore help before you be desired.

But how cometh it to pass that St Paul, neither in the one place, neither in the² other, nor elsewhere, maketh mention of the archbishop, which is said to be the chiefest pillar and undersetter of the church? Now I hear what is said to this, that under the pastor is contained bishop: he is not contained, but is the same that bishop³. How then? Forsooth, say they, an archbishop is bishop: well then, of bishops some are archbishops, some⁴ are what? Here I see that they are hanged in the bush, but I will help them. Of bishops some are archbishops, some are by the common name bishops. For, if they answer not thus, what have they to say? But what an absurd thing were that to say, that St Paul comprehended an archbishop under a pastor or bishop, which neither was at that time nor certain hundred years after! This were not to divide, but to prophesy. And how is it that they never marked that St Paul speaketh of those functions which were in the church, and not of those which should be afterward? and of those that God had given, and not of those which he would give? For the words are, "and he hath given."

JO. WHITGIFT.

No man can deny but a bishop may aptly be comprehended under this name pastor, and archbishop under the name of a bishop; and it may as well be said that "of bishops some be called archbishops, and some by the name of bishops," as it may be said of kings, some be called emperors, some by the common name of kings; of dukes, some archdukes, some by the common name of dukes; of justices, some chief justices, some by the common name of justices.

Things may be lawful which were not in Paul's time.

What if the name of an archbishop were not in St Paul's time? Doth it therefore follow that the thing signified by the name was not in his time? This word ἀρχιεπίσκοπος was not in St Paul's time, but afterward invented in the council of Nice. Yet was the thing thereby signified in St Paul's time,

[¹ Cartwright makes light of what Whitgift says in this division, and accuses him of keeping to "his old wont; which is to cut the knot, and not to loose it."—Sec. Repl. pp. 450, &c.]

[² Neither the, Repl. 1.]

[³ That pastor, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Archbishops and some, Repl. 1 and 2.]

and from the beginning. Other names there be also which were invented since the apostle's time, and yet both lawfully and necessarily used. The authority and thing whereof the archbishop hath his name was in Paul's time, and therefore the name lawful; and, if it had not been in St Paul's time, yet were both the name and the office lawful; because it pertaineth to the external policy and regiment of the church, which is variable according to the place, time, person, and other circumstances. Shall not the authority that christian princes have in matters ecclesiastical be thought lawful, because there were no such princes in St Paul's time? Or shall not they have the chief authority in ruling and governing the church in external policy and regiment, because there is no such express mention of them in those two places of St Paul?

The place
Ephes. iv.
discussed.

But you shall answer yourself, for you say that "in those places St Paul speaketh of such functions as were then in the church, not of such as should be afterward;" which is true. And therefore I conclude that, as all those offices (by your own confession before) are not necessary for all times in the church, so are they not only for all times of the church, but other may be brought in meet for the government of the same. I know your meaning is nothing less; yet this is my collection which I think you will very hardly answer.

How many hundred years the name of archbishop was after the apostle's time shall appear in another place⁵.

Chapter i. The Twentieth Division.

T. C. Page 64, Sect. 3.

Moreover, if so be under the pastor the apostle comprehended an archbishop, then the archbishop is necessary, and such as the church cannot be without, and commanded of God, and therefore not taken up by the policy of the church for the time, country⁶, and other circumstances, and such also as cannot be put down at the will of the church; which is contrary to the judgment of those which are the archbishop's patrons.

[⁵ Cartwright denies that "our kind of bishop should be comprehended under St Paul's pastor." He afterwards goes on to say: "And, although the word consubstantial were not in St Paul's time, yet words of the same weight were. If you can shew therefore words of the same value with archbishop, although you shew not this, it shall be sufficient: if you cannot, then this example maketh against you." He also accuses Whitgift of reasoning as Harding did against bishop Jewel.—Sec. Repl. pp. 452, &c.]

[⁶ Time and country, Repl. 1 and 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

The place
Ephes. iv.
discussed.

Your argument, if it be thus framed, Pastors are necessary at all times, in all estates of the church, and in all places, and cannot be put down at the will of the church: archbishops are pastors; therefore they be necessary at all times, &c.—I deny your argument, because the major in the first figure cannot be particular. If you make your major universal, then I do deny it, and put you to the proof. If you say that to preach the word and to administer the sacraments (which is the office of a pastor) is necessary at all times, then I confess it to be true, and distinguish the minor on this sort; that an archbishop, in respect of the ministry of the word and sacraments, is at all times necessary, not in the respect of policy and government, in consideration whereof he hath the name of an archbishop¹.

Chapter i. The Twenty-first Division.

T. C. Page 64, Sect. 3, 4, 5.

You mislike that against yourself now, which before you were glad to use as a shift for yourself.
Here he con-futeh his own shadow.

The last refuge is, that the apostle made mention of those functions which have to do with the ministering of the word and sacraments, and not of those which have² to do with order and discipline.

Speak in good earnest, had the apostles nothing to do with discipline and order? With what face can you take away the reins of government out of the apostles' hands, and put them in the archbishops' and archdeacons' hands? what a perverseness is this, that the ministries invented by men should be preferred to all the ministries appointed and commanded of God!

The apostles, forsooth, have in common with the archbishops and archdeacons the power of ministering of the word and of the sacraments, of binding and loosing; and thus far as good as the archbishops and archdeacons. But for discipline and order the apostles have nothing to do, but herein archbishops and archdeacons are above them, and better than they.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You wonderfully forget yourself, for it is your own distinction, as it appeareth in the 5. line of the same page of your book³; and thereby you shifted off the objection of deacons and elders. I know no man that "taketh the reins of government out of the apostles' hands," and giveth it to any to whom it is not due by the word of God. But is your meaning that the apostles should now execute it themselves? else, Quorsum hæc? Surely you are so full of passions that you forget the matter. I know the apostles had in their time, together with the ministry of the word and sacraments, power to exercise ecclesiastical discipline and order. But truly I understand not your meaning; for never any such thing as you here fancy entered once into my cogitation. I rather say that, because in the apostles there was joined the administration of discipline with the ministry of the word and sacraments, therefore it may be so likewise now in archbishops and bishops. For that authority of discipline and government that the apostles had in their time is now, for the most part, executed by archbishops and bishops; which is the overthrow of your whole assertion⁴.

[¹ Cartwright declares that, "all shifts and colours failing him," Whitgift has here changed his argument. He re-states it, and insists that the answer is absurd and inconsistent with what had been before set down.—Sec. Repl. pp. 454, &c.]

[² Hath, Repl. 1.]

[³ See before, page 100.]

Chapter i. The Twenty-second Division.

T. C. Page 64, Sect. ult.

Now, sir, if I would follow your vein of making so many exclamations, as, "O the impudency," "O the insolency," with twenty other such great "Os," you see I have occasion both here and elsewhere. But I would not gladly declaim, especially when I should dispute, nor make outcries instead of reasons.

Indeed you have made yourself occasion.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Where have I used these exclamations? or what cause have you so suddenly to burst into them at this time? except it be to set some countenance upon your evil-favoured reasons. But I will let you alone in such toys, and suffer you to play with yourself.

Chapter i. The Twenty-third Division.

T. C. Page 65, Sect. 1.

But, to come to this distinction, I had thought before this time that the apostles had been the chief builders in setting up the church, now I perceive you make the archbishops and archdeacons the chief builders, and the apostles under-carpenters or common masons, to serve

^{1 Cor. iii. 10.} Surely the man is in a dream.

[⁴ Cartwright retorts: "... before you have said once or twice 'that the office and authority of an archbishop was in the apostles' times.' Which if it be true, how doth the archbishop receive his authority of order and government by their death? for, having it before, he cannot receive it by their departure."—Ibid. p. 457.]

[⁵ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

and to take the commandment of the archbishop and archdeacon. And, whereas it is said that the ministries which St Paul speaketh of are in the word¹ and sacraments, binding and loosing only, and that there be other which are besides these occupied in the order and discipline of the church (of which number are archbishops and archdeacons), let us mark a little what deep divinity here is.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Surely you wander you know not whither: without doubt your mind when you writ this was upon some other thing than upon my book. For where have I made this comparison betwixt the apostles and archbishops? or what have I spoken sounding that way? I would have you to deal honestly and plainly. If you mean the book in Latin², whereof you afterward speak, the words of that book sounding anything this way be these: Archiepiscopi ab episcopis quoad ministerium non differunt (omnes enim pari potestate docendi, baptizandi, ligandi et solvendi præditi sunt), sed quoad ordinem et politiam; ordinis enim et politiæ causa quædam ultra episcopos archiepiscopis concessa sunt: "Archbishops differ not from bishops in respect of the ministry (for they are all endued with equal authority to teach, to baptize, to bind and loose), but in respect of order and policy. For some things are granted to archbishops for order and policy's sake above the bishops." And further, answering that place to the Ephesians, it saith: Apostolus eo in loco eos tantum ministros et ministeria enumerat, quæ in precibus, verbo, et administratione sacramentorum versantur, non eorum quæ ad ordinem et disciplinam instituuntur, qualia sunt archiepiscoporum et archidiaconorum: "The apostle in that place doth only recite those ministers and ministries which are occupied in prayer, the word, and the administration of the sacraments, not of them which are instituted for order and discipline, such as are the functions of archbishops and archdeacons." The which self-same distinction for that place you use in the beginning of the 64. page of your book³, these only words excepted

Pag. 64, lin.
5.

[¹ Words, Def. A and B.]

[² The book intended is very probably that which Strype mentions, Life of Parker, Book iv. chap. xli., namely the Reply to a treatise, De Disciplina, which treatise Walter Travers had put forth, and which the archbishop was anxious to have answered. It does not appear by whom the Reply was composed; and, according to Strype, Parker kept "it some time by him, and would have more judgments before he put it out."]

[³ See before, page 100.]

(qualia sunt archiepiscoporum et archidiaconorum); as I have before shewed, and your own words declare. And I am sure these words do not “make the archbishops and archdeacons chief builders, and the apostles under-carpenters,” as it pleaseth you to collect; but this is your modesty.

Chapter i. The Twenty-fourth Division.

T. C. Page 65, Sect. 2.

And, first of all, I would gladly ask them with what advice they have laid on a greater burden and weight of the archbishops' and archdeacons' shoulders than the apostles were able to sustain.

What burden? who hath laid it on?

JO. WHITGIFT.

When you have told where “they have laid on this greater burden and weight,” or what “the burden and weight is,” that you say “they have laid on,” or who they be that have laid it on, then shall your question be answered: in the mean time, let this suffice the reader, that you do but forge matter to increase your volumes, and to sport yourself.

Chapter i. The Twenty-fifth Division.

T. C. Page 65, Sect. 3.

Secondarily, I ask with what boldness, and upon the confidence of what gifts, any man dare take upon him both that which the apostles did, and more too?

JO. WHITGIFT.

To this I answer as to the former.

Chapter i. The Twenty-sixth Division.

T. C. Page 65, Sect. 3.

Then I say that it is too too unskilfully done to separate order and discipline from them that have the ministry of the word in hand, as though the church without archbishops and archdeacons were a confused heap and a disordered lump; when as St Paul teacheth it to be
Rom. xii. 4, 5, 4 without them a body consisting of all his parts and members, comely knit and joined together, wherein nothing wanteth nor nothing is too much.

JO. WHITGIFT.

“Order and discipline” are not “separated from the ministry of the word;” although all such as be ministers of the word

Authority to execute discipline is not equally given to all.

[⁴ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

have not the like authority to execute them. For as it is said in that Latin book, “for order and policy’s sake more is granted to the archbishop than to the bishop¹,” neither will any learned man so greatly marvel at this, seeing the practice thereof was in the apostle’s time. For Paul had more large and ample authority than Timothy, and Timothy than the rest of the ministers of Ephesus.

What if “the church without archbishops and archdeacons” were perfect in St Paul’s time, and may be perfect at other times? doth it therefore follow that the church in no time or state may have them, or, rather, that they be not necessary at some time for the church? In St Paul’s time apostles, prophets, workers of miracles, gifts of healing, diversity of tongues, were counted necessary, and principal parts of this body; which notwithstanding you confess now to be cut off, and yet the body perfect: so that you see this is no reason at all, to say that the church in St Paul’s time was a perfect body without archbishops and archdeacons; ergo, they are not necessary in the church of Christ. For I might as well reason thus: The church of Christ in St Paul’s time was not perfect without apostles, prophets, doers of miracles, gifts of healing, diversity of tongues; therefore it is not now perfect being without them. And likewise: It was then perfect without christian magistrates; ergo, christian magistrates are to be removed from the church. This kind of reasoning, as it is unskilful, because it doth not distinguish the times of the church, neither considereth necessary circumstances, so it is most perilous, and openeth a door to anabaptism and confusion.

The unskilful
reasoning of
T. C. openeth a door to anabaptism.

The office of the archbishop expressed in scripture.

Moreover, I told you before that, although this name archbishop is not expressed in the scripture, yet is the office and function, as it is evidently to be seen in the examples of Timothy and Titus, yea, and in the apostles themselves, whose office of planting churches through the whole world is ceased, but their care for the good government of those churches which were planted, and their authority over those pastors whom they placed, doth and must remain in such places where there are churches. And therefore M. Bucer, writing upon the fourth to the Ephesians, saith thus: Miletum presbyteros ecclesiæ Ephesinæ convocat; tamen, quia unus inter eos præerat aliis et primam ecclesiæ curam habebat, in eo pro-

Bucer in iv.
Ephes.

[¹ See before, page 106, note 3.]

*prie residebat nomen episcopi*²: “In the Acts, Paul calleth the same men bishops and elders, when as he called together the ministers of the church of Ephesus unto Miletum; yet, because one amongst them did rule over the rest, and had the chief care of the church, the name of bishop did properly remain in him.” So that this superiority and jurisdiction which we speak of was even in the apostle’s time, as it is more at large afterward proved³.

Chapter i. The Twenty-seventh Division.

T. C. Page 65, Sect. 3.

Doth it not pertain to order that the apostle saith, that *1 Cor. xii. 28.*⁴ God hath set “first apostles, secondly prophets, thirdly teachers”?
*Col. ii. 19.*⁴ are not these words, “first,” “second,” “third,” differences of order? If this be not order, surely I know not what order is. And yet neither archbishop nor archdeacon author of this; and it was kept also before they were hatched.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Yes, but will you have the same “order” now? then must you have apostles and prophets, which you deny; so that this order you see is not perpetual; wherefore from time to time that “order” among the ministers of the word must be observed that is most convenient for the state of the church. Neither is any against such order but those that will not live in order. Did ever any man deny but that there was “order” in the apostles’ time? All this is but to make the reader believe that some such thing is in that Latin book, when there

That order must be observed which is convenient for the state

[² Et in Actis Paulus eosdem vocat episcopos et presbyteros, cum Mileti presbyteros &c.—M. Bucer. Prælect. in Epist. ad Ephes. Basil. 1562. cap. iv. p. 107.]

[³ Cartwright says that his reason is not answered. “For, if the church without the archbishop and archdeacon be a body consisting of all the parts comely knit together, wherein nothing wanteth, nor nothing is too much, then it followeth that these offices bring neither ornament nor accomplishment to the church, but make only an unprofitable knob and lump of flesh, to the both disfiguring and hinderance of the growth of the body.” He goes on to except against Whitgift’s inferences: “For, considering that the perfection of the body must be measured by the will of him whose the body is, that is, Christ; as when he gave apostles, evangelists, &c., he made it appear that he would not have his body perfect without them; so, when he took them away from his church, he made it known that the body was perfect without them. &c.” He adds: “If M. Bucer speak as you make him, I can by no means subscribe unto him.”—Sec. Repl. pp. 459, 60.]

[⁴ These references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

is not one word whereof any such thing can be gathered. Is this your simplicity?

Chapter i. The Twenty-eighth Division.

T. C. Page 65, Sect. 4.

Let us see of discipline and government, which we may see to be committed to those which have the preaching of the word, and to others also which did not preach the word, when St Paul saith that "the elders which govern well are worthy double honour, especially ^{1 Tim. v. 17.} those which travail in the word;" where he appointeth the government to the ministers of the word, and to those also that were not ministers of the word. And thereupon it followeth that the ministers of the church are not severed one from another as you, because² some have the ministration of the word and sacraments only, and some with the administration of the sacraments and word have also the government and discipline in their hands; but clean contrariwise St Paul distinguisheth them, and sheweth that all the ministers in the church have the government, but all have not the word to handle; so that he distinguisheth the ministry into that which is occupied in the word and government, and into that which is occupied in the government only. But in this distinction you do not only forget St Paul, but you forget yourself. For, if St Paul speak in that place of those that meddle with the ministering of the word and sacraments only, why doth the bishop, which is one of the ministers that St Paul speaketh of (being the same that pastor is), why, I say, doth he meddle with the discipline and order of the church, seeing that belongeth not to him by your distinction? why doth also the archbishop (whom you say is a bishop) meddle with it? And thus you see you need no other adversary than yourself to confute you.

You falsify my words, by displacing the word 'only.'

JO. WHITGIFT.

The reader should better have understood what you had gone about, if you had set before his eyes the words that you confute. Now I scarce understand your meaning myself. You shoot altogether without a mark³. I know no man that denieth "discipline and government to be committed to those that have the preaching of the word, and to others also which preach not the word." But, if you mean that either all kind of ecclesiastical discipline and government is committed to all such as preach the word, or in as ample manner to one as to another, you have not yet proved it, neither will you be able to prove it with all the learning that you think yourself to have.

[¹ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[² As you sever them because, Repl. 2.]

[³ "The mark I shoot at is certain, that is, to confute your distinction of ministries of the word and sacraments only, and ministries of government and order; and it seemeth I shot so nigh, that I have driven you away from the mark. For you wander, and tell us of things that have neither head nor foot; and which, if they were true, make neither hot nor cold unto this question."—Sec. Repl. pp. 460, 1.]

That in 1 Tim. v. doth prove no such matter, as you pretend. For what doth St Paul mean there by “governing well”? Christo et ecclesie suæ tum doctrina tum integritate vitæ fideliter inservire, non sua sed quæ Dei sunt quærere: “To serve Christ and his church faithfully both in doctrine and integrity of life, to seek not those things which are his, but those which are God’s.” Thus do the learned interpreters expound bene præesse in this place. Is not the office of teaching, exhorting, reproof, an office of ruling and governing? But you say that the apostle doth make two kind of governors, one that travaileth in the word, the other that doth not. And what then? he, that diligently doth that office that is committed unto him, whether it be in preaching the word, providing for the poor, visiting the sick, or any such like function, doth rule well. But doth it therefore follow that all have like authority, or that there is no kind of ecclesiastical government or discipline but that which is common to all the ministers of the word? Certain it is, that every pastor that doth his duty in preaching ruleth well; and so do they also that duly and truly administer the sacraments, relieve the poor, visit the sick, privately admonish, &c. But is there therefore none that hath superiority over them, to procure that those things be done accordingly, to correct them if they be not done, to see that every man be kept in order, be obedient to laws, teach true doctrine, break not unity, &c.? This place therefore helpeth you not. For, although all ministers of the word rule and govern, after a sort, yet do they not all so, in all kind of government, nor equally, for they also must have governors.

But consider your reason, or at the least the end of your drift. “All ministers of the word govern” their parishes by preaching the word, rebuking sin, &c.; ergo, they must have none to govern them, and keep them in order, and see that they do their duty: it is all one with this: Every master of a family ruleth over his family; and therefore he must have no superior to rule over him; or: Every chief officer of cities or towns be rulers and governors of those places; therefore they must have none to rule and govern either their cities and towns, or themselves. Indeed this is a plausible doctrine, to make every pastor chief governor within his own parish, and to make every city and town a kingdom within itself; but it is a pestilent doctrine; for in short time there would be as many popes as pastors, as many religions as parishes, as many sects as families, and in the end an overthrow both of religion, the church, and the kingdom. Neither could there possibly have been invented a more readier way for the pope to make his entry in hither again.

What it is to rule well.

All ministers govern, but not alike.

Whereunto the drift of the Repl^r tendeth.

Of your distinction of presbyter I will speak in a more fit place.

I have not "forgot myself;" but you neither understand (as it appeareth) my writings, neither yet your own, for hitherto you have fought without an adversary.

And yet I must put you in mind of your falsehood and subtle dealing; for, whereas I say that the apostle in the iv. Ephes. "speaketh only of those ministers and ministries, which are occupied in prayers, the word, and administration of the sacraments," you, by displacing the word "only," make your reader believe that I affirm the apostle to speak in that place "of those that meddle with the ministering of the word and sacraments only;" as if I should seclude the ministers of the word from all kind of government.

Chap. i. The Twenty-ninth Division.

T. C. Page 65, Sect. 5.

The book is named; but yet you have confuted your shadow and not the book, as hath appeared.

And, lest any man should say I confute my¹ own shadow, I must let him to understand² that there is a pamphlet in Latin, which is called the Book of the doctors, which goeth from hand to hand, and especially (so far as they could bring it to pass) to those only that they thought to favour that opinion; in the which book all these answers unto the place of the Ephesians are contained, and almost all that which is comprehended in this defence of archbishops and archdeacons, with other things also which are found in this book of M. Doctor's; and therefore it is very likely that he, having no other way to vent his rhapsodies and rackings³ together, thought he would bring them to light after this sort. But how much better had it been that this misshapen thing had had the mother's womb for the grave, or being brought out had been hidden as the former is, in some bench-hole or dark place, where it should never have seen any light, nor no man's eye should ever have looked of it!

[¹ Mine, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² Him understand, Repl. 2.]

[³ Rakings, Repl. 1 and 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

It had been much for your credit if you had set down the words of that book, the which you and your fautors in derision call "the Book of doctors⁴;" which you have only named, and not confuted. The book dare abide the light, and the author also; but so dare not you. To the rest of your words my answer is only this, that you bewray your spirit: for further proof hereof I refer the reader to the third chapter of St James, from the tenth verse to the end.

Chapter i. The Thirtieth Division.

T. C. Page 65, Sect. 5.

And thus, all these clouds being scattered by the sun of the truth⁵, you see that the place to the Ephesians standeth strong against the archbishop and archdeacon.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Nothing less; but the contrary for any thing that you have spoken yet.

Chapter i. The Thirty-first Division.

T. C. Page 65, Sect. 5; and Page 66, Sect. 1.

Now I will⁶ reason also after this sort out of the place of the Ephesians and Corinthians joined together. There is no function but hath gifts fit and apt to discharge it annexed and given unto it; whereupon the apostle, by a metonymy, doth call the apostles, prophets, &c., "gifts," because they have always gifts joined with them. This being granted (as no man can deny it) I reason thus:

Those functions only are sufficient for the church, which have all the gifts needful, either for the ministering of the word and sacraments, or for the government of the church; but all these functions reckoned of St Paul to the Ephesians, with those which St Paul calleth ἀντιλήψεις and Eph. iv. 11.⁷ κυβερνήσεις (which are the deacons and elders), have the gifts needful either for the government of the church, either else 1 Cor. xii. 20.⁷ for the ministering of the word and sacraments; therefore these functions only are sufficient for the church. For it is a superfluous thing to make more offices than there be gifts to furnish them; for so they that should have them should rather be idols than officers. And therefore,

[⁴ See before, page 106, note 3.]

[⁵ Sun of truth, Repl. 2.]

[⁶ Will I, Repl. 2.]

[⁷ These references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

forasmuch as there is no gift which falleth not into some of these functions, it is altogether a vain and unprofitable thing to bring more offices and functions into the church besides these.

JO. WHITGIFT.

In what sense every function is said to have gifts to discharge it.

You say "there is no function but hath gifts apt and fit to discharge it annexed and given unto it." If you mean that there is no function but there is gifts meet for it, which God hath in his power to bestow, it is most true; but, if your meaning be that the gifts be so annexed to the function, that of necessity whosoever is called to that function must also have those gifts, it is most untrue. For experience doth teach that every man hath not gifts according to his function, although he be lawfully thereunto called, touching his external calling; for the inward calling none knoweth but God himself, and a man's own conscience. But you put me in remembrance of that which Master Bullinger writeth of the anabaptists, Lib. v. cap. 1; where he (confuting the reason they use to prove that Christians ought not to have magistrates, because Christians be so perfect of themselves that they can govern themselves, and therefore need not to be subject to any other superior authority) saith thus: *Solent autem anabaptistæ libenter ea imaginari et animo suo fingere, quæ nunquam fuerunt, neque extant, aut posthæc futura sunt*¹: "The anabaptists willingly use to imagine and conceive those things in their minds, which never hath been, nor are, nor hereafter shall be." Even so I say unto you that, in imagining the "gifts" pertaining "to every function so to be annexed unto the function," that he which hath the one must of necessity have the other, you fancy that which never was, is, or shall be; and in so reasoning what do you else than use that argument against superiority in the ecclesiastical estate, which the anabaptists use both against ecclesiastical and civil magistrates? But I answer you as M. Bullinger answered them: "Except you were blinded with pertinacy, you might easily see in yourself just cause why there should be magistrates and superiors."

Bulling. Lib. v. advers. Anabapt. cap. 1.

Idem.

Moreover, God doth not tie his gifts to any certain and definite number of names or titles of offices, but bestoweth them as it pleaseth him, to the commodity of his church, upon such as be meet to use them, by what name or title soever they be called. Wherefore this assertion of yours is either unadvisedly avouched, or else doth it contain some secret poison not yet uttered.

[¹ Solent, &c. et in animo suo confingere, &c. posthac futura sunt. Nam nisi pertinacia excecati essent, facile hoc ipsum in seipsis experiri et deprehendere potuissent.—H. Bullinger, adv. Anabapt. Libri v. i. Tigr. 1560. Lib. v. cap. 1. fol. 153.]

This being said to the ground that you have laid, thus I answer to your argument: it is in no "mode," and indeed too bad for any boy to use in his sophisms. It is in form the same with this: Those things only are sufficient for salvation which are contained in the scriptures; but all those things in the Ave Maria are contained in the scriptures; therefore those things only which are in the Ave Maria are sufficient to salvation. Or this: Those only are men which are endued with reason; but all the costardmongers in London are endued with reason; therefore the costardmongers of London only are men. Besides this, the major is particular, which is against all form of syllogism in the first or second figure. To be short, in your major you have this word "only" in your medium; and in the minor it² is left out. And therefore your conclusion followeth not, except you had said in your minor that only "these functions reckoned of St Paul to the Ephesians, &c. have all gifts needful for the ministering of the word and sacraments, and for the government of the church." And yet, if it were so, your argument should be of no force, being ex solis particularibus. So that in your syllogism there is no manner of form, and therefore not worthy of any other answer until it be better framed. Although I could say unto you that all those functions have gifts necessary for them; but not only those functions; because there be other not mentioned of you which have gifts necessary also, and which the apostle rehearseth, 1 Cor. xii. So likewise could I answer that most of those functions (according to your own opinion) be not perpetual, but for a time; and therefore your reason is no good reason. Likewise, that the apostle hath not made in either of these places any perfect division of offices which were, even at that time, in the church. For in the first to the Corinthians, the xii. chap., he leaveth out evangelists, pastors, bishops, deacons, widows; and in the fourth to the Ephesians, deacons, widows, workers of miracles,

The deformed argument of
T. C.

[² Def. A. omits it.]

&c. So that he hath not left any perpetual pattern of offices, or names, in either of those two places. To conclude, I could tell you that God hath left to his church authority to appoint both names and offices, as shall be for the same most convenient and profitable; the which authority the church hath also from the beginning used, as in appointing catechists, lectors, and such like, not superfluous but most necessary offices, and profitable for the church in those times wherein they were¹.

Chapter i. The Thirty-second Division.

T. C. Page 66, Sect. 2.

And so it may be thus reasoned: If men may make and erect new ministries, they must either give gifts for to discharge them, or assure men that they shall have gifts of God, whereby they may be able to answer them. But they can neither give gifts, nor assure men of any gifts necessary to discharge those functions; therefore they may make or erect no new ministries.

JO. WHITGIFT.

First, there is no "new ministry erected." But among the ministers some are appointed to govern the rest, and to have the chief direction of them; and such are chosen to that superiority, upon whom God (as far as man can judge) hath bestowed gifts meet for the same. Secondly, it is not necessary that those that appoint any office should be able to give gifts incident thereunto. For then no man might appoint any office. It is therefore sufficient if he appoint such persons as God hath endued with gifts meet for such an office, and such offices as there may be persons meet to execute; which being observed, your argument is soon answered.

[¹ "My words have light enough to have kept you from this wandering, but that you take pleasure in untruth. For, beside that the scope of my disputation doth beat you from that vagary, my words are plain. For I say not that 'every one that occupieth a ministry in the church hath gifts sufficient for his calling;' but, 'any function, or ministry of the church, hath gifts sufficient, &c.'... This is that I said, 'every function hath proper gifts for the execution of it;' and that, forso much as now there is no gift necessary for the ecclesiastical ministry not contained in these, and that all these fall into the ordinary ministry instituted and specified in the scripture, therefore these ordinary ministries specified in scripture are sufficient." Cartwright goes on to accuse Whitgift of changeableness in his interpretation of 1 Cor. xii., and maintains that his own argument excepted against "is as good as I can make any."—Sec. Repl. pp. 461, &c.]

Chapter i. The Thirty-third Division.

T. C. Page 66, Sect. 3.

Last of all, to² conclude against these made and devised ministries of archbishops and archdeacons after this sort: If men may add ministries they may also take away; for those both belong to one authority: but they cannot take away those ministries that God hath placed in his church; therefore they cannot add to those that are placed in the church. And this foundation I thought first to lay or ever I enter³ into M. Doctor's not reasons, but authorities, not of God, but of men, in confuting of which there will fall forth other⁴ arguments against both these offices of archbishop and archdeacon.

The major untrue.
The minor ambiguous.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Your whole book is for the most part builded upon that false-founded argument, that is called petitio principii. For this will not be granted unto you, which you have so oftentimes repeated, and whereupon all your arguments are grounded, that “to appoint archbishops or archdeacons is to appoint a new ministry.” It is (as I told you before) but to keep an order in the ministry, and in the church, and to execute that office of government which the apostles themselves did. When Hierome said, “That for the avoiding of schisms the ministers appointed one among themselves to govern the rest⁵,” did he mean that they instituted a new ministry? A man may see by this how unable you are to defend your cause; seeing you are enforced to frame principles unto yourself, against the which you may reason, that the ignorant reader may think your quarrel to be just. But now to your argument. The major is not true; for men “may add ministries” to those that be, and break not the will and commandment of God; because they may be helps and furtherances to those ministries that God hath appointed⁶. But he “cannot take away such ministries as God hath placed in his church” to be perpetual, without breach of his will and commandment. Moreover, besides those ministries that God hath appointed in his word as necessary at all times, there may be some added

The Reply grounded upon the petition of the principle.

[² I, Repl. 2.][³ Entered, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.][⁴ Forth also other, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.][⁵ Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 803. See before, page 91, note 2.][⁶ “... the papists may as well answer thus for the multiplying of their sacraments, as the D. for increase of the ministries.”—Sec. Repl. p. 465.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

that be convenient for some times; and yet the church, that hath authority "to add these," hath not the like authority "to take away" the other; so that your major lacketh proof. Your minor also is ambiguous; for man "cannot take away those ministries that God hath appointed" to be perpetual in the church, but he may take away those that be but temporal, as occasion serveth.

If your "foundation" be no sounder than this that you have hitherto laid, surely your building cannot long stand, and M. Doctor's "authorities" may well enough encounter with all your "reasons."

¶ That the names of Metropolitan, Archbishop, &c., be not antichristian.

Chapter ii. The First Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 65, Sect. 1.

The antiquity of archbishops.

First, therefore, I prove that the names of metropolitan and archbishop, &c., be not antichristian names, that is, names invented by antichrist, but most ancient; yea, that they were in the church long before the gospel was publicly embraced by any prince or in any kingdom. Polydore Vergil, Lib. iv. de Inventoribus Rerum, cap. 12, saith that Clement, in his book entituled Compendiarium Christianæ Religionis, testifieth that the apostle Peter did in every province appoint one archbishop, whom all other bishops of the same province should obey. He saith also that the same archbishop was called primas, patriarcha, and *metropolitanus*². Peter

Clemens saith that Peter appointed archbishops¹.

[¹ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[² ...placuit auctore apostolo Petro, sicut D. Clemens in suæ Christianæ religionis compendario libello perhibet, ut similiter in singulis gentium, quæ religionem in posterum complecterentur, urbibus in locum flaminum episcopi substituerentur, et in qualibet provincia archiflaminis vice, unus archiepiscopus constitueretur, cui reliqui illius regionis episcopi subessent:...Ii archiepiscopi modo primates, modo Græca voce patriarchæ, h.e. patrum principes dicti, quatuor principio fuere,...Verum posthac...plures creati sunt,...Et quoniam hisce pontificibus sedes in iis præsertim locis, qui insigniores essent, datæ sunt, idcirco et metropolitanos vocamus &c.—Polyd. Verg. De Invent. Rer. Amst. 1671. Lib. iv. cap. xii. pp. 273, 4. Conf. Clement. ad Jacob. Epist. i. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 91; et Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Prim. Pars, Dist. lxxx. cans. 1, 2. cols. 381, 2.]

was not antichrist; ergo, the name of an archbishop is no antichristian name.

The name of archbishop and metropolitan.

T. C. Page 66, Sect. 4, 5, 6, 7; and Page 67, Sect. 1, 2.

Now I will come to the examining of your witnesses; whereof some of them are so bored in the ears and branded in their foreheads, that no man need to fear any credit they shall get before any judge, wheresoever or before whomsoever they come, but in the Romish court, and the papists only excepted. For, to let go Polydore Vergil, because whatsoever he saith he saith of the credit of another, let us come to Clement, which is the author of this you speak. And what is he? Is there any so blind that knoweth not that this was nothing less than Clement of whom St Paul speaketh, and which some think was the first bishop of Rome ordained by Peter⁴, and not rather a wicked hell-hound into whom the Lord had sent Satan to be a lying spirit in his

Phil. iv. 3.³
Tertull. de Præscript.
advers.
Hæret.

mouth, to deceive them for their unthankful receiving of the gospel? And he must witness for the archbishop; a worthy witness. For, as all that popish hierarchy came out of the bottomless pit of hell, so, to uphold the archbishop the neck of it, whereupon the⁵ Romish monster standeth, are raised up from hell bastards, Clemens and Anacletus, and indeed, as it may appear, the very natural sons of Satan, and the sworn soldiers of antichrist.

A man would have thought that the bishop of Salisbury, M. Jewel, had so pulled off the painting off the face of this Clement, that all good men would have had him in detestation; so far off would they have been to have alleged out of him to prove anything that is in controversy.

The bishop allegeth both Eusebius and St Hierome to prove that none of those works which go in his name are his⁷; and, although the proofs be strong which the bishop useth, being the witness of unsuspected witnesses, yet, because the law, although it allow two witnesses, notwithstanding doth like the better⁸ of three, I will set

In the Reply to M. Harding, fol. 7.⁶

down here also Irenæus, which was a great while before them both, and followed hard after the time⁹ of the true and uncounterfeit Clement, and therefore could best tell of him and of his writings; and yet he maketh mention but of one epistle, which upon occasion amongst the Corinthians he wrote to them¹⁰. Indeed in another

Lib. iii.
cap. 3.

[³ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Hoc enim modo ecclesiæ apostolicæ census suos deferunt: sicut Smyræorum ecclesia Polycarpum ab Ioanne conlocatum refert: sicut Romanorum, Clementem a Petro ordinatum itidem.—Tertull. Op. Lut. 1641. De Præscr. Hæret. 32. p. 243.]

[⁵ That, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ The fol. is added from Repl. 2.]

[⁷ See Bp. Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. 1. pp. 111, 12.]

[⁸ Like better, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁹ Times, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[¹⁰ Ἐπὶ τούτου οὖν τοῦ Κλήμεντος στάσεως οὐκ ὀλίγης τοῖς ἐν Κορίνθῳ γενομένης ἀδελφοῖς, ἐπέστειλεν ἡ ἐν Ῥώμῃ ἐκκλησία ἱκανωτάτην γραφὴν τοῖς Κορινθίοις, εἰς εἰρήνην συμβιβάζουσα αὐτοὺς, κ. τ. λ.—Iren. Op. Par. 1710. Lib. 111. cap. iii. 3. p. 176.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

place of that book he sheweth that it is very probable that Clement also either wrote or turned the epistle to the Hebrews¹. Now, if that epistle to the Corinthians were extant², we should easily see, by comparing those that are now in his name with that, what a misshapen thing this is.

And, if so be that Irenæus' conjecture be good, that Clement was the author or interpreter of the epistle to the Hebrews, then what horrible injury is done to the Holy Ghost, while the same is supposed the writer of this book to the Hebrews, which is the author of such beggary as this Clement brought into the world! And, I pray you, do you hold that it is the true christian religion which that book containeth? Could none of these considerations drive you from the testimony of this Clement? It goeth very hard with the archbishop, when these Clements and Anacletuses must be brought to underprop him.

But what if there be no such book as this is which you name (when you say "in his book entituled Compendiarium Religionis Christianæ")? it is like you know not him nor what he saith, when you cannot tell so much as his name. Only, because Polydore writeth that Clement saith this in a certain short and summary book of christian religion, you have set down that he writeth thus in a book entituled Compendiarium Christianæ Religionis; where there is no such title neither in the Councils, where his epistles are, neither yet in all other his works.

Thought you to disguise him with this new name of the book, that he should not be known? or meant you to occupy your answerer in seeking of a book, which because he should never find he should never answer? The place which Polydore meaneth is in the first epistle which he writeth unto James, the brother of the Lord, which is, as the rest are, both ridiculous in the manner of writing, and in the matter oftener times wicked and blasphemous; which I speak to this end, that the reader, through the commendation that M. Doctor hath given to this Clement, in taking him as one of his witnesses in so great a matter, be not abused.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Here is much more labour spent than is necessary. No man denieth but that the epistles attributed to Clement are counterfeit; neither do I otherwise allege him or Anacletus, or any such like, than both M. Calvin, M. Jewel, and many other learned men do; as it is evident in their writings. That testimony which I use is out of Polydore; and therefore have I quoted both the book and chapter. Polydore writeth as other do that entreat of such matters; and, forasmuch as he was learned, and of purpose gave himself to the searching out of such things, his report is not lightly to be rejected. But (God be thanked) neither the name nor the authority of an archbishop dependeth upon these witnesses; neither do I use them as sure grounds, but as probable testimonies of the antiquity of the name. You have cited the Canons of the Apostles thrice at the least in this your book, and Higinus likewise, and used them as proofs; and yet is there as great suspicion in the counterfeiting of them as there is of this book of Clement's. I pray you, therefore, give me that liberty in reciting authors that you take to yourself, and that no man refuseth when they serve to his purpose. For I protest unto you that I have as evil an opinion of many of them, and think as great corruption to be in them, as any man doth; and that not only because I have so read in other men's writings of them, but also for that I myself in reading of them have noted the same. But I am well assured that Polydore meant that Clement which is supposed to be "the first bishop of Rome:" how he was therein deceived (being so learned a man) I leave it to others to judge.

[¹ It would seem that Cartwright is here in error. No such place has been found in Irenæus. But see Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. xxxviii. p. 88; where the probability of Clement's having translated the epistle to the Hebrews is maintained.]

[² This epistle is extant, having been first printed from the Codex Alexandrinus in 1633.]

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

It is not like that Polydore meant that epistle, for he knew what difference there was betwixt an epistle and a book; neither doth the length or the matter of that epistle give any occasion that it should so be called: wherefore it is like that Polydore had it out of some book attributed unto Clement under that title, though the same be not extant. For there be divers works of ancient fathers, which be not now extant in print, and yet in some places to be had. But I will not stand longer in this matter. The words of Polydore be these: *Sicut D. Clemens in suo Christianæ Religionis Compendiario libello perhibet, &c.*³

[³ "The Answerer in defence of his forged doctors is like unto one which to defend him from the cold covereth himself with a wet sack. For before his ignorance might have in part excused him: now by this maintenance of his Answer he hath doubled his folly. For first, to make himself clean, he defileth as much as he can Master Calvin, and the bishop of Salisbury; both which he neither sheweth to have used this Clement; and, if they do, yet their use of him or such like is so far from lessening his fault, that it maketh it more appear. For they use them against the papists, which for the most part attributing unto them as great weight of authority as to the scriptures themselves are so set up, &c."—Sec. Repl. pp. 465, &c. It is most probable that Polydore Vergil meant the spurious epistle which has been cited. See before, page 118, note 2.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

Chapter ii. The Second Division.

T. C. Page 67, Sect. 3.

For answer unto him, although he be not worth the answering, I say, first¹, it may be well said here of the office of the archbishop, that the father of it was an Amorite and mother an² Hittite; that is, that it cometh of very infamous parentage, the beginning thereof being of the idolatrous nations.

JO. WHITGIFT.

These be but words of pleasure: it will appear in this discourse that the parents and authors both of the office and of the name be such as ought with greater reverence to be spoken of, and with greater signification of duty.

Chapter ii. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 67, Sect. 4.

And, whereas Clement maketh St Peter the apostle to make it as it were his adopted son, thereby to wipe away the shame of his birth, it doth³ St Peter shameful injury. For, besides that it was far from St Peter to take this authority to himself, not only of making archbishops throughout every province, but also instituting a new order or office, without the counsel of the rest of the apostles, which none else of the apostles did, and which is contrary to the practice of St Peter both in the first and sixth of the Acts, contrary also to the practice⁴ of the apostles; which after shall appear—I say besides this, is it like that St Peter would graff the noblest plant, as it is said, of the ministry of the gospel, in such a rotten stock of that which was most abominable in all idolatry? For the greater they were in the service of the idols the more detestable were they before God.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I do not take upon me the defence of Clement's words in that epistle, or of Polydore in the book and chapter before recited, in all things that they spake touching the matter. But I cannot suffer your vain reasons to serve for an answer. For, if St Peter did thus place archbishops, yet did he not appoint any "new order or office;" as you have been oftentimes told. Of all bishops there is one order or ministry, but divers degrees. Between an archbishop and a bishop there is only a difference of degree and dignity, not of order of bishops, but divers degrees.

One ministry

[¹ Say that first, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² A, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ So edit.; but according to list of errata in Repl. 1 he doth.]

[⁴ Practices, Repl. 1 and 2.]

or ministry; as divers learned men give unto Peter, above the rest of the apostles, the preeminence of honour for order's sake, but not of power. Moreover, Peter, in appointing them without the consent of the other apostles, did no otherwise than the apostle St Paul, when he placed Timothy at Ephesus, and Titus at Creta. It may be also that in some places where there were before archiflamines he placed such as were called archbishops, &c.; which might be done in respect of the city and place, and not in respect of the idolatrous priests. For archiflamines were but in great cities, which, being converted unto Christ, might have in the place of their archiflamines godly and learned archbishops, to oversee and direct the rest of the bishops and preachers, that unity and order might be observed. Thus Paul did at Ephesus and Creta. And why might not Peter do it in other places likewise?

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

Chapter ii. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 67, Sect. 5, 6, 7, 8.

The Lord, when he would give laws of worshipping to⁶ his people in the things that were indifferent, of shaving and cutting, and apparel-wearing, saith to his people, that they should not do so and so, because the gentiles did so; yea, even in those things, the use whereof was otherwise very profitable, and incommodious to forbear, he would have them notwithstanding to abstain from, as from swine's flesh, coney, &c., to the end that he might have them severed, as appeareth by⁸ St Paul, by a great and high wall from other nations.

And therefore it is very unlike that St Peter would frame the ministry of the gospel (which is no ceremony, but of the substance of the gospel) by the example of the heathenish and idolatrous functions.

If one had said that the Lord had shapen his⁹ commonwealth by the pattern of other commonwealths, although it had been most untrue (all other flourishing commonwealths of Athens, Lacedemon, and Rome borrowing their good laws of the Lord's commonwealth), yet had it been more tolerable; but to say he framed the ministry of the gospel by the priesthood of idolatry is to fet¹⁰ chastity out of Sodom, and to seek for heaven in hell.

[⁵ Cartwright makes a long reply to this division, contending that Whitgift contradicts here what he has elsewhere asserted, and that his reasoning is inconclusive.—Sec. Repl. pp. 467, &c.]

[⁶ Unto, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ The first four references, and the verse of the last are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁸ In, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁹ This, Def. A. and B.]

[¹⁰ Fetch, Repl. 1 and 2.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

And, if so be that the Lord had delighted in this hierarchy, he would rather have taken of his own than borrowed of others, of his own church than of the synagogue of Satan. For under the law besides the Levites there were priests, and above them a high priest.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The Israelites had some things like to the gentiles.

God gave unto the Israelites a king, though other nations had so in like manner. And he ordained degrees of priests among them to offer unto him sacrifices, though the gentiles had the like¹; and what inconvenience could there come by placing archbishops (which should faithfully preach the word of God, and carefully govern the church of Christ) even in those places where there were archiflamines, who did deface Christianity and persecute the Christians? For by these means there could no harm come unto them, as there might have done to the Israelites by using of such things of the gentiles as he forbad unto them, but the contrary; for this was a means to pluck them from all their superstition and idolatry. Neither is this in any respect a “framing of the ministry of the gospel by the examples of idolatrous and heathenish functions.” Except you will say also that, because the gentiles had flamines, and the Christians had bishops, therefore the christian bishops were framed according to the example of the gentiles’ flamines. If you cannot say so truly in bishops, neither can you justly affirm it of archbishops; for the reason is all one. Do you think this to be a good collection? Where in the pope’s time there was a massing priest, now is there placed a minister of the gospel; ergo, the ministry of the gospel is framed according to the example of massing priests. And yet thus do you conclude, that, because there are now-a-days archbishops where before there were archiflamines, therefore “the ministry of the gospel is framed according to the heathenish and idolatrous functions.”

[¹ “The Lord’s priests and sacrifices were before the priests and sacrifices of the gentiles; therefore that exception (‘God instituted priests and sacrifices though the gentiles had the like’) is vain to prove that there may be archbishops, as there were archflamines.”—Sec. Repl. p. 470.]

Chapter ii. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 68, Sect. 1.

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

And to say that Peter appointed archbishops and bishops by the example of idolaters² is after a sort to make the law to come out of Egypt or Babylon, and not out of Sion or Jerusalem, as the prophet saith.

No man hath said so.

Essay ii. 3.³

JO. WHITGIFT.

Neither Clement in that epistle, nor Polydore in that book, nor Gratian, Dist. 80, saith “that Peter appointed archbishops and bishops by the example of idolaters;” but this only they say, that in those cities, where there were before archiflamines, there were placed archbishops, and, where there were flamines, there bishops⁴. There is great difference betwixt their kind of speech and yours. Howsoever the authors please you, or displease you, yet report their words truly. M. Fox, Tom. I. p. 14, is of this judgment, that, where before there were archiflamines, &c., there were placed patriarchs, &c. His words be these: “Thus it is made plain how the bishop of the first seat, or first bishop, or primate, is none other but he which then was called patriarch, and belonged not only to the church of Rome, but to all such cities and places where as before among the gentiles were primiflamines, &c. *Dist. 80, cap. Urbes et loca; et, In illis*⁵.” Hitherto M. Fox.

M. Fox,
Tom. I. fol.
14.

Chapter ii. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 68, Sect, 1, 2, 3.

You say after that James was an archbishop: if he were, he was the first, and placed over the Jews.

And, although St Peter might, to gain the gentiles, be content to use their idolatrous functions with a little change of their names, yet there is none so mad to think that he would translate any such function from the gentiles to⁶ the Jews; which were never before accustomed with any such flamines or archiflamines. And this I dare generally and at once say against you and your Clement, that the Lord translated divers things out

[² Of the idolaters, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[⁴ See before, page 118, note 2.]

[⁵ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 12; where he which was called.]

[⁶ Unto, Repl. 1 and 2.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

צדיקים צדקה^a of the law into the gospel, as the presbytery or eldership, excommunication, and the office of deacons (as it is thought); for that the Sadducees, of whom so often mention is made in the gospel, are thought to have had that office to provide for the poor; for those that know the Hebrew tongue do understand that Tsadikim and Tsidkiah do not only signify justice³ and just men, but also alms and almsmen—I say these and others more translated from the law unto the gospel; but neither you nor your Clement shall ever be able to shew that the Lord ever translated anything from gentilism into the gospel.

We read in the Acts that all the gentiles were commanded to conform themselves unto the Jews in the abstaining from blood and strangled meat for a time; but we can never find that the Jews were commanded to conform themselves⁴ to the gentiles in their ceremonies; the reason whereof is, because the one was sometime⁵ the law of God, and therefore he that had conscience in it was to be borne with; and the other came from men and out of their forge, which the Lord would never give so much honour unto, as to make other men by any means subject unto them.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you had not learned that point of sophistry which is called petitio principii (whereof I have so oftentimes told you), without doubt you had lacked much matter, and your book would have been very thin. For all this added in this place is nothing but descanting upon a false plain-song. The offices of an archbishop and bishop are no “idolatrous functions,” but christian, and meet both for Jew and gentile converted unto Christ; neither are they translated from the gentiles, but grounded upon the word of God, practised in the apostles’ time, approved by the best councils, as is declared in the Answer to the Admonition; and shall be more amply hereafter, occasion being offered. Wherefore all this that you have here said (the ground being taken away) serveth to no purpose.

Your conjecture of the deaconship to be taken from the Jews is but a mere conjecture; if there had been any such office in the law, it would have been specified in one place or other of the old testament⁶.

[¹ The verses are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[² The words in the margin are not in Repl. 1 or 2.]

[³ Justices, Def. A. and B.]

[⁴ Them, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ Sometimes, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ “Here he hath at one push thrust the archbishop quite out of the church.
For if this be a good reason, there were no deacons amongst the Jews, because they were not specified in the old testament, then it is likewise true that, forasmuch as Touching your eldership, we shall see what you have to say for it in place. I will not trouble myself and the reader with by-matters not incident to this question. And yet I would gladly learn of you in what portion of the law your presbytery is commanded or prescribed; for I told you before, out of M. Calvin, that it was appointed after the return of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon.

The name of archbishop and metropolitan.

Your reason why there should be no orders or ceremonies taken from the gentiles is not sufficient; for it is a negative reason ab auctoritate. But to speak of that matter is now from the purpose, because I have denied these offices to be taken from the gentiles.

Chapter ii. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 68, Sect. 4.

But what if there were no such offices among⁷ the gentiles and pagans as archiflamines and⁸ protoflamines? whereof before I shew the conjectures which I have, I must give thee, gentle reader⁹, to understand that I am not ignorant that there are divers which say there were such offices among⁷ the gentiles, and namely here in England that there were 25. flamines and three archiflamines, whereof were made three archbishops, of London, Canterbury, and York, and 25. bishops; as Platine hath in the chapter Eleutherius¹⁰. And Galfridus Monemutensis in his second book and first chapter¹¹. And, as I think, Gildas¹² also¹³; and Lombard in his fourth book¹⁴ speaketh of it, as a¹⁵ general thing that was in all places where paganism was. But, if so be that the religion of other pagans did follow and was like unto that of the Romans (which is very probable), they being then the rulers of the whole world in a manner, unto whose example all men do lightly conform themselves even without commandment, then there is great likelihood there were no such archiflamines or protoflamines out of Tully, which sheweth that there were among¹⁶ the Romans divers kinds there is no archbishop specified in the new testament, there was no archbishop in the apostles' times."—Sec. Repl. pp. 470, 1.]

[⁷ Amongst, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ Or, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁹ The gentle reader, Edit. ; Repl. 2., however, has the (gentle reader), "the" evidently standing here, as it often does, for "thee."]

[¹⁰ Erant tum in Britannia pontifices quinque et viginti, quos flamines vocabant. Inter hos autem tres archiflamines habebantur, quorum in loco archiepiscopi tres constituti sunt, ut Ptolemæus ait. Protoflaminum vero loco primitiva ecclesia patriarchas instituit.—Plat. De Vit. Pont. Col. 1551. Eleuth. fol. 21.]

[¹¹ Galfrid. Monemut. De Orig. et Gest. Brit. 1517. Lib. II. cap. i. fol. 33.]

[¹² There does not seem to be anything to the point in Gildas. His treatise De Excid. Brit. may be seen in Biblioth. Vet. Patr. Stud. Galland. Venet. 1765-81. Tom. XII. pp. 192, &c.]

[¹³ The six preceding words are not in Repl. 2.]

[¹⁴ P. Lombard. Libr. Sentent. Col. Agrip. 1576. Lib. IV. Dist. xxiv. M. fol. 396.]

[¹⁵ As of a, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[¹⁶ There was amongst, Repl. 1 and 2.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

of priests¹, whereof some were called flamines, of a several attire which they ware always on² their heads, other pontifices, and a third sort were called Salii, and the³ chief of those flamines was called flamen dialis, who was also distinguished from the rest by a white hat; but of any archiflamines, or protoflamines, he maketh no mention at all; and therefore it is like that there was never any such office amongst the pagans.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Archi-flamines.

M. Fox,
Tom. 1. fol.
146.

Whether “there were such offices among the gentiles” or no, the matter is not great, nor worthy of deciding. But that there were such it is manifest, if any credit is to be given to so many histories and writers both ecclesiastical and profane, not only those whom you have reported, but Gratian, Polydore⁴, and others. But, as a sufficient confutation of all this that you have here written, and as an argument of your unskilfulness in stories, I will set down the words of Master Fox, Tom. 1. p. 146, which be these: “Let us return to Eleutherius, the good bishop, who, hearing the request of the king, and glad to see the godly towardness of his well-disposed mind, sendeth him certain teachers and preachers, called Fugatius, or by some Fagamus, and Damianus or Dimianus, which converted first the king and people of Britain, and baptized them with the baptism and sacrament of Christ’s faith. The temples of idolatry and other monuments of gentility they subverted, converting the people from their divers and many gods to serve one living God. Thus, true religion with sincere faith increasing, superstition decayed with all rites of idolatry. There were then in Britain 28. head priests which they called flamines, and three arch-priests among them which were called archiflamines, having the oversight of their manners, as judges over the rest. These 28. flamines they turned to 28. bishops, and the three archiflamines to three archbishops, having then their seats in three principal cities of the realm; that is, in London, in York, and in Glamorgantia, videlicet, in Urbe Legionum, by Wales⁵.” Your “conjecture” therefore is but vain, and cannot countervail so many witnesses.

[¹ See Cic. De Orat. Lib. III., De Harusp. Respons., De Leg. Lib. II. 8.]

[² Of, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ And that the, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ See before, page 118, note 2. Conf. Polyd. Vergil. Anglic. Hist. Basil. 1555. Lib. II. p. 41.]

[⁵ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 118; where of this king, Fagamus, and all other monuments, all other rites, arch-flamines, and manners and as judges.]

Moreover, your argument is negative from human authority; for you argue that there were no archiflamines among the pagans, because Tully maketh no mention of them; and therefore of no credit. Besides, why might not the Grecians call those archiflamines whom Tully called flamines diales? But the matter is not worthy the labour; and therefore thus briefly to have answered it shall suffice: only I would have the reader by the way to note the antiquity of archbishops here in England, even from the first beginning of the public profession of Christianity, which was anno 180, or thereabout⁶.

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

Archbishops in England. An. Dom. 180.

Chapter ii. The Eighth Division.

T. C. Page 68, Sect. 5.

And, if there were, I have shewed how wicked it is to say that Peter framed the ministry of the gospel by it. Now let it be seen of all men how strongly you have concluded, that the names of archbishops are not antichristian, when as it is most certain that he was a pillar of antichrist upon whom your reason is grounded.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Though it be certain “that Peter framed not the ministry of the gospel by any custom of the pagans,” yet your arguments are of no force to prove that he did not place ministers of the gospel where there were before priests of the pagans, call them by what other name you will; or that in the chief cities he placed not such as might direct and govern the rest; seeing it is the consent of all writers that the apostles, when they had planted churches, did place bishops and other ministers in the churches which were planted⁷.

Whether he were “a pillar” or no “of antichrist,” by whom I have hitherto proved “the names of archbishops not to be antichristian,” I leave it to the learned to judge. If you mean Clement, of whom Polydore doth borrow his report,

[⁶ Cartwright replies at considerable length, discrediting Whitgift’s authorities, and exposing the story of Lucius and Eleutherius as a fable. And he adds (but not truly) that bishop Jewel in his controversy with Harding had rejected it (See Bp. Jewel’s Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. III. p. 163).—Sec. Repl. pp. 471, &c.]

[⁷ “You shall not be able to shew ‘that the bishops which the apostles planted were other’ than which with the elders had the oversight of one particular congregation; and therefore your proofs are always by other things, as doubtful as the question in hand.”—Ibid. p. 476.]

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

it is evident that Polydore meaneth that Clement that was one of the first bishops of Rome, who was no "pillar of anti-christ," but a godly bishop. If you mean Polydore himself, upon whose credit I take the report, then surely, howsoever in divers points of papism he erred, yet is he one that hath greatly detected and opened their superstitions, and whose authority neither yourself nor any other learned man in many things will refuse.

Reports of antiquity may be taken from infidels.

But, if all this were true that you say, yet may we take reports of antiquities even from Turks, pagans, papists, or else must we condemn the most part of histories.

Chapter ii. The Ninth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 65, Sect. 2.

Volusianus.

Volusianus, bishop of Carthage, who lived anno Dom. 865, in one of his epistles which he writ¹ to Nicholas the first, in the defence of the marriage of priests, saith that Dionysius Areopagita, St Paul's scholar, was by St Paul made archbishop of Athens².

T. C. Page 68, Sect. ult.

The times wherein Volusianus lived declare sufficiently how little credit is to be given to his testimony; which were when the mass had place, if not so wicked as it was after, yet notwithstanding far differing from the simplicity of the supper which was left by our Saviour Christ. And Eusebius is of more credit in this than Volusianus, which, in the third Eus. iii. Lib. 4.³ book and fourth chapter, and in the fourth book and three and Eus. iv. Lib. 23.³ twenty chapter, saith, of the report of Dionysius, bishop of Lib. 23.³ Corinth, that St Paul made Dionysius Areopagita bishop of Athens⁴: he saith not archbishop, but bishop, although he spake⁵ twice of it; and in

A notable argument.

[¹ Write, Def. A. and B.]

[² Quod et Dionysius Areopagita theosophus, id est, Deum sapiens, Pauli apostoli discipulus, et ab eo Atheniensium archiepiscopus ordinatus, &c.—Volus. Epist. ii. in Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. II. p. 396. For an account of this epistle and the author see Oudin. Comm. de Script. Eccles. Lips. 1722. Tom. II. cols. 247, &c.]

[³ These references are inserted from Repl. 2, which omits any notice in the text of the places in Eusebius.]

[⁴ 'Επὶ τούτοις καὶ τὸν Ἀρεοπαγίτην ἐκεῖνον, Διονύσιος ὄνομα αὐτῶ... τὸν ἐν Ἀθήναις ἐκκλησίας πρῶτον ἐπίσκοπον, ἀρχαίων τὶς ἕτερος Διονύσιος... ἱστορεῖ γεγονέναι.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. iv. p. 59. Conf. Lib. iv. cap. xxiii. p. 116.]

[⁵ Speake, Repl. 2.]

the preface before his works it is said that after his conversion he went to Rome to Clement, and was sent with others of Clement into the west parts, and that he came to Paris and was there executed⁶. Whether soever of these opinions is true, that falleth which Volusianus affirmeth. And, if either Volusianus or you will have us believe that Dionysius Areopagita was archbishop of Athens, you must shew some better authority than Eusebius, or Dionysius bishop of Corinth; and then your cause shall have at the least some more colour of truth.

The name of arch-bishop and metro-politan.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Thus indeed may you easily wipe away all authority of histories and fathers. But this shift will not serve your turn with wise and learned men. Volusianus was very well learned, and a very godly bishop in his time; neither is it to be thought that he would write anything in such a matter which he had not certainly learned of worthy writers. Your reason, brought out of Eusebius to prove the contrary, faileth in two respects. First, because it is negative from authority, and that of man; for thus you conclude: "Eusebius did not call him archbishop;" ergo, he was no archbishop; which kind of argument is never good in any respect, when it is taken from the authority of man. Secondly, your argument faileth, because histories be not so curious in calling men by their several titles. They think it sufficient, if they use the common and most usual name; even as it is the common use amongst us to call the archbishops of Canterbury and York oftener by the names of bishops of Canterbury and York, than by the names of archbishops. So that indeed, your argument being denied, you are not able by any sound reason to confirm it. If Eusebius or Dionysius had denied him to be an archbishop, your argument had been good⁷.

[⁶ Maximus says that Dionysius was made bishop of the Athenians. See Dion. Areop. Op. Antv. 1634. S. Max. Prolog. Tom. I. p. xxxv. Conf. Vit. S. Dion. per Sym. Metaphrast. ibid. Tom. II. pp. 193, 4, 9; where he is said to have been first bishop of Athens, and afterwards to have gone to Rome and Paris. The works extant under his name are of a later age.]

[⁷ Cartwright rejoins that Volusianus could not have learned of "worthier writers in this behalf than Denis bishop of Corinth, and Eusebius." He goes on to say: "Likewise when the bishop of Salisbury made this challenge after performed, that it could not be shewed out of any allowed writer 600. years after Christ, that there was any mention of such and such things maintained by popery, the Answ. hath, with one word, wiped away the profit of all those travails. For it may be answered that such things were, although none made mention of them." —Sec. Repl. pp. 476, 7.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.
Erasmus¹.

Chapter ii. The Tenth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 65, Sect. 3.

Erasmus, in his argument of the epistle to Titus, saith that Paul made Titus archbishop of Creta². [The same saith Pellican in his argument upon the epistle to Titus³.]⁴ But antichrist was not in Paul's time; ergo, the name of an archbishop was not invented by antichrist.

T. C. Page 69, Sect. 1.

A slender
proof.

Erasmus followeth, which saith Titus was archbishop of Crete; whom I could answer with his own words. For I am sure he will grant me, that Titus and Timothy had one office, the one in Ephesus, the other in Crete; but it appeareth by Erasmus his own words that Timothy was but bishop of Ephesus; therefore Titus was but bishop of Crete. For Erasmus, in his argument upon the first epistle of Timothy, saith that St Paul did inform Timothy of the office of a bishop, and of the discipline of the church⁵. If either he had been an archbishop, or an archbishop had been so necessary as it is made, he would have instructed him in that also.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This maketh wholly against yourself; for hereby it appeareth that the writers use not any great curiosity in observing proper titles, but they think it sufficient if that name of office be used that comprehendeth all. Where doth Erasmus say, "that Timothy was but a bishop⁶?" Will you not learn to deal plainly? But let us hear your argument: "Erasmus saith that St Paul did inform Timothy of the office of a bishop, and of the discipline of the church;" ergo, Erasmus saith that Timothy was no archbishop. Undoubtedly

[¹ This word is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[² Titum...insulæ nobilissimæ Cretæ præfecerat apostolus, et illinc abiens archiepiscopum consecrarat.—Erasm. Op. L. Bat. 1703-6. In Epist. ad Tit. Arg. Tom. VII, cols. 1067, 8.]

[³ Titum discipulum suum, ac filii loco habitum ob eximias dotes, insulæ nobilissimæ Cretæ præfecerat apostolus, et illinc abiens archiepiscopum consecrarat.—C. Pellican. Comm. in Omn. Apost. Epist. Tigur. 1539. In Epist. ad Tit. Arg. p. 577.]

[⁴ This sentence is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[⁵ Quoniam autem huic [Timotheo] ecclesiarum curam delegarat [Paulus], sicut et Tito, quas ipse non poterat adire, instituit eum in functione episcopali, et in disciplina ecclesiæ.—Erasm. Op. In Epist. ad Timoth. prior. Arg. Tom. VII. cols. 1033, 4.]

[⁶ "If a spade be but a spade, and a fig but a fig; then a bishop is but a bishop."—Sec. Repl. p. 479.]

you had need bear with other men's unskilfulness in logic, if you use such reasons in good earnest. This argument also is negative ab humana auctoritate. Whatsoever is necessary for a bishop is necessary for an archbishop; and the office of a bishop is the office of an archbishop. There is no difference of bishop and archbishop, but only this, that the archbishop hath authority over other bishops, to call them together when occasion serveth, to see that they walk according to the laws and rules prescribed, to keep unity and concord in the church, and such like. There is no difference, quantum ad ministerium: "in respect of their ministry and function," but only quoad politiam et ordinem: "in respect of policy and order;" as I have said before.

The name of archbishop and metropolitan.

The difference betwixt an archbishop and a bishop.

Chapter ii. The Eleventh Division.

T. C. Page 69, Sect. 2.

And, I pray you, tell me whether Erasmus or the Greek scholiast be more to be believed in this point, out of whom is taken that which is in the latter end of the epistles to Timothy and Titus, where they both are called the first elected bishops that ever were, either of Ephesus or Creta⁷: for my part, I think they were neither bishops nor archbishops, but evangelists; as shall appear afterwards. But it may be sufficient to have set against Erasmus' authority the authority of the scholiast. And here, if⁸ you will cavil, and say that the scholiast, which saith he was bishop, denieth not but that he also was an archbishop, because an archbishop is a bishop, it may be answered easily, that the scholiast did not speak nor write so improperly as to call them by the general name of bishop, whom he might as easily have called (if the truth would have let him) by a more proper and particular name of archbishop. And further, in this division of the ministers, the archbishop and the bishop are members of one division, and therefore one of them cannot be affirmed and said of another; for that were contrary to the nature of a true division.

This is often promised, but never performed.

This division is not so strange as you make it.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I tell you that "Erasmus" and "the Greek scholiast," do very well agree, and the one doth expound the other. I tell you also that your negative arguments are not worth a rush, use them as oft as you list. What you "think" of Timothy

[⁷ See the notes at the end of the second epistle to Timothy and of that to Titus, in editions generally of the Greek Testament. Conf. Ecumen. Op. Lut. Par. 1631. Comm. cap. ix. in 11. Epist. ad Tim. Tom. II. p. 283; in Epist. ad Tit. cap. vi. p. 300; where in the former passage πρωτον does not appear.]

[⁸ If here, Repl. 1 and 2.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

or Titus being archbishops or bishops is not material; but of what force your reasons are shall be considered when you utter them. If Erasmus and the Greek scholiast were of divers judgments in this point (as they be not), yet were it an unlearned answer to set the one against the other¹.

He that calleth an archbishop a bishop speaketh properly; for so he is in the respect of his ministry and substance of his office; the name of archbishop he hath only in respect of order and policy. "Archbishop and bishop are members of one division;" as chief justice and justice is. Every chief justice is a justice; but every justice is not a chief justice: even so, every archbishop is a bishop; but every bishop is not an archbishop; neither is this such a strange division as you think it to be. For Aristotle did in like manner divide πολιτεία in regnum, aristocratiam, and πολιτεία, that is, that which is commonly called πολιτεία².

Chapter ii. The Twelfth Division.

T. C. Page 69, Sect. 3.

And yet I have a further answer both to Erasmus and Volusianus, and whatsoever other have written after this sort, that they spake³ and gave titles to those men they wrote of, not according to that which they were, but according to the custom and manner of that age wherein they wrote. And so we may read that Vincentius and Nicephorus, Vinc. x. Lib. writing of Victor, speak far otherwise of him than Eusebius cap. 124. doth; which notwithstanding wrote of the same man which they Nicoph. iv. Lib. cap. 39. did. The one calleth Victor the pope of Rome⁴; and the other saith that in glory he passed all the bishops before him⁵; which Eusebius never maketh any word of. Even so Volusianus and Erasmus, living in the times when as they which were the most esteemed in the ministry were called archbishops, call Titus and Dionysius archbishops, upon whom depended the chief care of those churches which they governed.

Nicephorus
falsified.

[¹ "I will also refer to the reader's judgment, what 'unlearnedness' it is 'to confute authority' by better 'authority'; and in what place the D. will have us receive men's authority, when he will not have them controlled by other men."—Sec. Repl. p. 480.]

[² 'Επεὶ...διειλόμεθα, τρεῖς μὲν τὰς ὁρθὰς πολιτείας, βασιλείαν, ἀριστοκρατίαν, πολιτείαν' κ.τ.λ.—Aristot. Op. Lut. Par. 1629. De Rep. Lib. iv. cap. ii. Tom. II. p. 364. Conf. ibid. Lib. iii. cap. vii. p. 346.]

[³ Speake, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Ea tempestate Eleutherio papæ Romæ Victor successit. &c.—Hugo Floriacens. cit. in Vincent. Biblioth. Mund. Duac. 1624. Lib. x. cap. cxxiv. Tom. IV. p. 412.]

[⁵ See below, note 7.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

This is no answer at all, first, because Erasmus would then have given to Timothy the same title also; secondly, because Erasmus, being a man of so singular knowledge and judgment, would not otherwise than truly report of any man, especially in such a case, and handling matters of divinity; thirdly, because when he wrote there was neither bishop nor archbishop at Creta, as there was at Rome when Vincentius and Nicephorus writ. And, if this were true that you say, then should Eusebius when he wrote of Victor have termed him a “patriarch,” or an “archbishop,” or “metropolitan” at the least. For those names were usual in Eusebius his time⁶.

But why do you untruly report of Nicephorus? for in that book and chapter he giveth unto Victor no other name and title than the same that Eusebius doth, for he calleth him by the bare name of Victor, without any other title; neither doth he say, “that in glory he passed all the bishops before him;” but this he saith, that the other bishops which were with him did dissuade him from excommunicating the bishops of Asia, and addeth: *Et acrius severiusque cum illo qui gloria eos anteiret egerunt*⁷: “They dealt more sharply and severely with him that excelled them in glory.” Therefore he saith that he did excel in glory those bishops that were then, not those which were before him. But what is this to your purpose? If he had given unto Victor any other title than was usual when he lived, doth it therefore follow that Erasmus and Volusianus had done so in like manner? Will you answer such learned and notable men’s authority with so vain and childish conjectures?

[⁶ “Let him shew one approved author for the name of archbishop, or patriarch once only used in Eusebius’ time, or before, to note the superiority of one bishop over all his fellows; and we will all clap our hands unto him: if he cannot, then it is shame to say, ‘those names were usual in Eusebius’ time.’”—Sec. Repl. p. 481.]

[⁷ ... καὶ πληκτικώτερον δὲ προσεφέροντο τῆς προτέρας ἐχομένης δόξης.—Niceph. Call. Eccles. Hist. Lut. Par. 1630. Lib. iv. cap. xxxviii. Tom. I. p. 339. Whitgift appears to have followed an old Latin translation. Conf. Niceph. Call. Eccles. Hist. Op. J. Langi in Lat. Sermon. transl. Par. 1574. col. 227; where the words stand exactly as here cited.]

Chapter ii. The Thirteenth Division.

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 65, Sect. 4; and Page 66, Sect. 1.

Anacletus¹.

I omit Anacletus, a godly bishop and martyr, who lived anno Domini 85, which in his epistle, Tom. i. Concil., divers times maketh mention of archbishops, patriarchs, primates, metropolitans, and saith that St James, which was called Justus, was the first archbishop of Jerusalem².

St James, archbishop¹.

I omit also Anicetus, who lived anno Domini 155, which likewise in his epistle maketh mention of archbishops³; because these epistles are not without just cause suspected either to be none of theirs, or else in divers points corrupted.

T. C. Page 69, Sect. 3.

This is untrue, as will appear in the end.

It is the 11. chapter.

There followeth Anacletus, another of these witnesses which must depose that the name of an archbishop is not antichristian, of whom as of Clement that went before, and Anicetus which followeth after, the common proverb may be verified: Ask my fellow if I be a thief. And, although the Answerer be ashamed of him, and saith therefore he will omit him, yet even very need driveth him to bring him in, and to make him speak the uttermost he can. And this honest man saith that James was the first archbishop of Jerusalem; but Eusebius saith James was bishop, Lib. ii. 23.

not archbishop of Jerusalem, and appointed by the apostles⁴. And, in the third book, 22. chapter, he saith⁵ that the apostles Lib. iii. 22.⁵ did appoint after his death Simeon the son of Cleophas bishop of Jerusalem⁷. And Ireneus, in his fourth book, 63. chapter, saith⁸ Lib. iv. 63.⁵
that the apostles in all places appointed bishops unto the churches⁹; whereby it may appear what an idle dream it is of Clement,

[¹ These marginal notes are inserted from Answ. 2.]

[² Porro et Hierosolymitarum primus archiepiscopus beatus Iacobus, qui justus dicebatur, &c.—Anaclet. Epist. ii. 1. ad Episc. Ital. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 521. Conf. ibid. 4. col. 524.]

[³ Nulli archiepiscopi primates vocentur, nisi &c.—Anicet. Epist. 2. ad Episc. Gall. in eod. ibid. col. 581.]

[⁴ ... ἐπὶ Ἰάκωβον, τὸν τοῦ Κυρίου τρέπονται ἀδελφόν, ᾧ πρὸς τῶν ἀποστόλων ὁ τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς τῆς ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις ἐγκεχειριστο θρόνος.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. II. cap. xxiii. p. 50.]

[⁵ These references are added from Repl. 2.]

[⁶ And in another place he saith, Repl. 2.]

[⁷ Συμμεῶν ὁμοίως δεύτερος μετὰ τὸν τοῦ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν ἀδελφόν, τῆς ἐν Ἱεροσολύμοις ἐκκλησίας κατὰ τούτους τὴν λειτουργίαν ἐγκεχειρισμένος ἦν.—Id. Lib. III. cap. xxii. p. 73. Conf. cap. xi. p. 69; where the appointment of the apostles is more particularly noted.]

[⁸ And Ireneus saith, Repl. 2.]

[⁹ Iren. Op. Par. 1710. Lib. IV. cap. xxxiii. 8. p. 272. See below, page 138.]

Volusianus, and Anacletus, either that Peter did this by his own authority, or that the primitive church was ever stained with these ambitious titles of patriarch, primate, metropolitan, or archbishop; when as the stories make mention that, throughout every church, not every province, not by Peter or Paul, but by apostles, a bishop, not an archbishop, was appointed.

The name of archbishop and metropolitan.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If they be the Anacletus, or Clemens, or Anicetus that commonly they are taken for, and these writings were theirs uncorrupted, then were their witness sufficient, although they were bishops of Rome. But I neither will defend their writings, neither do I think them to be worthy any defence, only I require but that liberty of using them that no learned man refuseth when they serve his turn. Master Calvin doth allege this Anacletus his authority to prove that the people's consent was required in the appointing of ministers. *Instit. cap. viii. sect. 61.*¹⁰ So doth M. Fox, Tom. i. page 12, who writeth thus: "Wherefore, as we must needs grant the bishop of Rome to be called a metropolitan, or an archbishop, by the council of Nice, so we will not greatly stick in this also to have him numbered with patriarchs or primates; which title seemed in old time to be common to more cities than to Rome, both by the epistle of Anacletus, of pope Stephanus, and pope Julius, and Leo, &c."¹¹

Calvin.

M. Fox.

Master Jewel also himself doth use his authority in that sort that I do¹². But what need you be so curious, who have so often alleged the canons of the apostles; and in your 95. page you use the authority of Iliginus or Pelagius, as great a counterfeit as this Anacletus is. I speak not this to win any credit to Anacletus his epistles or decrees, but to avoid your cavils, and to shew that, in citing him in this manner and form that I do, I do no otherwise than other godly and learned men have done. You shall understand ere I come to an end that I have not alleged him for any need.

M. Jewel.

Page 95. Sect. 4.

Your argument to prove that James was no archbishop, because Eusebius and other do call him "bishop, and not arch-

[¹⁰ Quonquam in presbyteris quoque semper exigebatur civium consensus: quod etiam testatur canon primus dist. 67. (Conf. Anaclet. Epist. ii. l. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Tom. I. col. 521) qui Anacleto tribuitur.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. iv. 10. Tom. IX. p. 283.]

[¹¹ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 11; where to be a metropolitan or archbishop, and seemeth in the old time.]

[¹² See Bp. Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. IV. p. 1299.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

bishop," is of the same nature that your other arguments be, that is, ab auctoritate negativè; and therefore must be sent away with the same answer.

Whether the "apostles placed James and Simeon at Jerusalem," or no, is not the question. But you are something deceived in your quotation, for you should in the place of the 22. chapter of Eusebius have noted the 11. chapter.

Irenæus.

The place of Irenæus, though it make not against any thing that I have spoken, if it were as you do allege it, yet must I tell you that it is by you not truly understood. For Irenæus doth not say that the apostles did together in every place appoint bishops, but he saith: *Secundum successiones episcoporum, quibus illi eam quæ in unoquoque loco est ecclesiam tradiderunt*¹: "According to the succession of bishops, to whom they committed the church that was in every place."

Sometime one apostle did appoint bishops.

Meaning that every one of the apostles did appoint bishops in those churches which they had planted; as St Paul did at Ephesus and Creta². And, notwithstanding that in some churches the apostles together did place bishops, yet that in other churches which they planted they did the same severally, it is manifest, not only by these examples of Timothy and Titus, but of sundry other, whereof we may read in ecclesiastical histories, and namely of Polycarpus, made bishop of Smyrna by St John. And you yourself testify the same of St John out of Eusebius, even in the next section. Moreover, it cannot be gathered either out of the words of Irenæus, or any other ecclesiastical history, that the apostles did place bishops anywhere but in the chief and principal towns and cities, committing unto them the government of other villages and towns, and the appointing of several pastors for them; as it is also evident in the foresaid examples of Timothy and Titus; and the words of Irenæus import the same. But, if they had in every hamlet placed pastors, yet doth it not follow but that there might be some one in a diocese or province by whom these pastors should be directed, as Timothy at Ephesus, Titus at Crete.

Tertull. de
Præscript.3

[¹ Iren. Op. Par. 1710. Lib. iv. cap. xxxiii. 8. p. 272.]

[² "For the exposition of Irenæus, which interpreteth (they) 'every one severally,' if they severally ordained bishops every one in his circuit, so it be understood with the church's consent, as is before declared, I am well content."—Sec. Repl. p. 482.]

[³ Tertull. Op. Lut. 1641. De Præscr. Hæret. 32. p. 243. See before, page 119, note 4.]

Chapter ii. The Fourteenth Division.

T. C. Page 69, Sect. ult.

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

And here you put me in remembrance of another argument against the archbishop, which I will frame after this sort. If there should be any archbishop in any place, the same should be either in respect of the person or minister, and his excellency, or in respect of the magnificence of the place; but the most excellent ministers that ever were, in the most famous places, were no archbishops, but bishops only; therefore there is no cause why there should be any archbishop; for, if there were ever minister of a congregation worthy, that was James. If there were ever any city that ought to have this honour, as that the minister of it should have a more honourable title than the ministers of other cities and towns, that was Jerusalem, where the Son of God preached, and from whence the gospel issued out into⁴ all places. And afterward that Jerusalem decayed and the church there, Antioch was a place where the notablest men were that ever have been since; which also deserved great honour, for that there
Acts xi. 26.⁵ the disciples were first called Christians; but neither was that called the first and chiefest church, neither the ministers of it called the arch or principal bishops.

The major false.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is a strange matter that you should so grossly err in making arguments, seeing you have taken upon you so great skill in that art. But I will not be occupied in examining the form of it. Your major is not true; for such offices may be appointed rather in the respect of the time, and of the persons that are to be governed, than of the worthiness of "the minister," or the dignity of "the place:" and therefore your major doth not contain a perfect and sufficient distribution. Again, the worthiness of "the person" and the dignity of "the place" be not at all the causes why such offices should be appointed in the church, but the suppression of sects, the peace of the church, and the good government of the same. The worthiness of the person may make him meet for such an office; and the place may be convenient for such officers to remain in; but neither of them both can be a sufficient cause why such offices should be appointed. I know the worthiest cities have had the pre-eminence in such matters, but it was because they were the most meetest places for that purpose; and the place doth only add one piece of title to the office, but it is not the cause of the office. Lastly, you have not yet

Why these offices are appointed.[⁴ Unto, Repl. 2.][⁵ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan, proved that there was no archbishops in those places, or that James had not that office.

Chapter ii. The Fifteenth Division.

T. C. Page 70, Lin. 9.

This is contrary to that which was immediately affirmed before.

And Eusebius, to declare that this order was firm and durable, sheweth in the third book, 23. chapter, that St John the apostle, which overlived the residue of the apostles, ordained bishops in every city². Eus. iii. 23.¹

JO. WHITGIFT.

The office of an arch-bishop in St John.

Euseb. Lib. iii. cap. 23.

This is no reason at all: "St John ordained bishops in every church;" therefore there was no one bishop superior unto them to govern and direct them in matters of discipline, order, and doctrine, if occasion served. I think that St John himself was director and governor of them all, and in effect their archbishop. And that doth manifestly appear in that third book and 23. chapter of Eusebius. For thus he saith: "In those days John, the apostle and evangelist, whom the Lord loved, lived as yet in Asia, which did govern the churches there, after he was returned out of the isle from banishment, after the death of Domitian³." And a little after he saith that "he went, being desired, *ad vicina gentium loca, ut partim constitueret episcopos, partim totas ecclesias componeret, partim clerum ex his quos Spiritus Sanctus judicasset sorte deligeret*⁴: unto the places of the gentiles adjoining, partly that he might appoint bishops, partly that he might establish whole churches, partly that he might by lot choose such into the clergy as the Holy Ghost should assign." So that, whether he had the name of archbishop, or no, certain it is that he had the government and direction of the rest, and that he appointed bishops and other ministers. Eusebius doth not say that "he ordained bishops in every church;" for his words be as I have reported them. But, if he had so

[¹ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2; which omits any notice in the text of the place, and reads sheweth that.]

[² Church, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ Ἐπὶ τούτοις κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν ἔτι τῷ βίῳ περιλειπόμενος, αὐτὸς ἐκεῖνος ὡν ἡγάπα ὁ Ἰησοῦς, ἀπόστολος ὁμοῦ καὶ εὐαγγελιστὴς Ἰωάννης, τὰς αὐτόθι διεῖπεν ἐκκλησίας, ἀπὸ τῆς κατὰ τὴν νῆσον μετὰ τὴν Δομετιανοῦ τελευτὴν ἐπ' ἀνελθὼν φυγῆς.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700, Lib. III. cap. xxiii. p. 73.]

[⁴ Id. ibid.]

said, it had not made anything to your purpose, but against you. The name of archbishop and metropolitan.
 For he appointed them; not all the apostles, nor the people; and he governed and directed them as their archbishop⁵.

Chapter ii. The Sixteenth Division.

T. C. Page 70, Sect. 1, 2.

These two, Anacletus and Anicetus, you say are "suspected": why do you say "suspected," when as they have been convinced and condemned, and stand upon the pillory with the cause of forgery written in great letters, that he which runneth may read? Some of the papists themselves have suspected them; but those which maintain the truth have condemned them as full of popery, full of blasphemy, and as those in whom was the very spirit of contradiction to the apostles and their doctrine.

And do you mark what you say when you say that these are but suspected? Thus much you say, that it is suspected or in doubt whether the whole body of popery and antichristianity were in the apostles' time, or soon after, or no. For Clement was in the apostles' time, and their scholar; and so you leave it in doubt whether the apostles appointed and were the authors of popery or no. I think, if ever you had read the epistles, you would never have cited their authorities, nor have spoken so favourably of them as you do.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I say that they "are not without just cause suspected;" which you have left out, and therefore it appeareth that you have laid aside sincerity. I have alleged them with as little credit unto them as either Master Calvin or any other doth. You yourself have sundry times in this Reply used (as I have said) as forged authors as these be, with less defacing of them: Turpe est doctori, &c. I can shew good proof that I "have read their epistles;" but I am not disposed either to boast of my own reading, or to deface other men's. I leave that to you.

Chapter ii. The Seventeenth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 66, Lin. 5, and Sect. 1, 2, 3.

But that notable and famous council of Nice must be, and is of all wise and learned men, next unto the

[⁵ "This archbishop, said to be the officer of order, confoundeth all order, and changeth all; an evangelist into a bishop, a bishop into an archbishop, an archbishop into an apostle, an apostle into an archbishop; which follies are before confuted."—Sec. Repl. p. 402.]

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan. Concil. Nice. scriptures themselves, revered, esteemed, and embraced. That council, celebrated anno Domini 330. (when as the bishops of Rome were as yet learned and godly men), doth not only allow of the name, but also of the office of metropolitan, archbishop, archdeacon, &c.

Metropolitan. In the sixth canon of that council it is thus written: "This council doth determine him to be no bishop, which is made without the consent *metropolitani episcopi*¹: "of the metropolitan."

Archdeacon. In the 13. canon mention is made of a patriarch and of an archdeacon, divers times, and his office there in divers points declared; as it is also in the seventh canon of the same council. In the 25. canon is named both Patriarch. patriarch and archbishop, and declared what authority they had in their provinces, and in admitting of bishops. So is it likewise in the 26. and 27. canons of the same council².

T. C. Page 70, Sect. 3.

You come after to the council of Nice; wherein I will not stick with you that you say it was holden the 330. year of the Lord, when it³ may appear by Eusebius his computation that it was holden anno Domini 320.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Variety concerning the time of the Nicene council.

I know that there is some variety among the writers for the time of this council. Musculus, in his Common Places, saith that it was celebrated anno Dom. 313:⁴ the writers of the Magd. History, Centu. iv. cap. 9, affirm (as they say) out of Eusebius, that it was anno Dom. 320.⁵ Master Fox, Tom.

[¹ Concil. Nic. can. 6. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 32. See below, page 144, note 1.]

[² The canons, to which Whitgift here referred, Cartwright afterwards (see below, pages 150, &c.) declared were not genuine, and were, some matters in them at least, not to be found according to the numbers here given. Whitgift rejoins that in different lists of the canons the numbers vary. For the things substantially which he meant see Concil. Nic. cans. Arab. 5, 6, 7, 33, 39, 71. Tom. II. cols. 293, 4, 301, 3, 14.]

[³ When as it, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ Contra hanc impietatem...pugnarunt aliquot concilia, utpote Nicenum, anno salutis 313, &c.—Wolfg. Muscul. Loc. Comm. Theolog. Basil. 1599. De Ministr. Verb. Dei, p. 211.]

[⁵ Convocata fuit synodus œcumenica...Christi vero anno, juxta Eusebii annotationem, trecentesimo et vigesimo, Constantini imperatoris decimo septimo.—Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. iv. cap. ix. col. 617.]

i. fol. 12, thinketh that it was anno Dom. 340;⁶ and so doth Illyricus himself, in his defence of the Magd. History,⁷ though he seem to be of a contrary judgment in the history itself. Pantaleon, in his Chronography, placeth it anno Dom. 330.⁸ Some there be that say it was 324, &c. So that to differ in the year is no such matter as deserveth any such nip. But, if all circumstances be well considered, it will fall out that Eusebius himself confirmeth that which I have set down touching the time of that council. For Constantine began his reign, according to Eusebius his Chronicle, anno 311;⁹ and this is noted also Cent. iv. fol. 62.¹⁰ But the Nicene council, according to the said Century, fol. 617, was holden anno 17. Constantini.¹¹ So that it must needs be, by their own collection, anno 328, or very near. But, if we admit Eusebius' Chronicle for the beginning of Constantine's reign, videlicet anno 311, it will fall out by Eusebius himself upon the time which I have appointed; for, Lib. iv. de Vita Constantini, he saith that the Nicene council was holden *anno vicesimo imperii Const.*¹² So that it must needs be anno 330, or in the beginning 331. at the uttermost; but under it cannot be.

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

Chapter ii. The Eighteenth Division.

T. C. Page 70, Sect. 3.

And here you take so great a leap that it is enough to break the archbishop's neck, to skip at once 300. years without any testimony of any either father or story of faith and credit which maketh once mention of an archbishop.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This "leap" shall not hurt him one whit. For, if there were no other testimony but that council, it were of sufficient Archbishops and metropolitans long before the Nicene council.

[⁶ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 11. See below, page 144, note 3.]

[⁷ ... usque ad Nicænum concilium, nempe usque ad annum Domini 340, &c.—Illyr. Flac. De Primat. Papæ Hist. ad calc. Refut. Invect. Bruni contr. Cent. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1566, p. 203.]

[⁸ H. Pant. Chronogr. Christ. Eccles. Basil. 1561, p. 23; where different dates are mentioned as assigned by different authors.]

[⁹ Euseb. Cæsar. Chronic. Hieron. Interp. in Chronic. Basil. 1536. fol. 82.]

[¹⁰ Centur. Eccles. Hist. Cent. iv. cap. iii. col. 62.]

[¹¹ Ibid. cap. ix. col. 617. See above, note 5.]

[¹² Ἄλλ' ἢ μὲν ἐπὶ τῷ κίριος [σύννοδος] ἦν, ἐν εἰκοσαετηρίδι τῆς βασιλείας, κ.τ.λ.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. De Vit. Constant. Lib. iv. cap. xlvii. p. 454.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan,
Concil. Niceni, can. 6.

credit and ability both to save his neck and his body from all kind of harm. For—seeing it is thus written in the sixth canon of that council: Antiqua consuetudo servetur per Ægyptum, Libyam, et Pentapolim, ut Alexandrinus episcopus horum omnium habeat potestatem; quia et urbis Romæ episcopo par illis mos est. &c.¹: “Let the ancient custom be kept throughout Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis, that the bishop of Alexandria have the government of all these; for the bishop of the city of Rome hath the same order. Likewise in Antioch and other provinces let every church retain her privileges. But this is generally plain that, if any be made bishop without the consent of his metropolitan, the great synod hath decreed that he ought to be no bishop;” and in the seventh canon: *Quia consuetudo obtinuit et antiqua traditio, ut Æliæ episcopus honoretur, habeat honoris consequentiam, salva metropolis dignitate*²: “Forasmuch as custom and ancient tradition hath been such that the bishop of Jerusalem be honoured, let him have honour accordingly, not impairing the dignity of the metropolitan city”—it is plain that arch-bishops and their office were long before the council of Nice; for else why should the canon say, “Let the old custom be observed, &c.?” And M. Fox, Tom. i. page 12, reporting these two canons, saith thus: “First in the council of Nice, which was the year of our Lord 340, and in the sixth canon of the said council, we find it is so decreed that, in every province, or precinct, some one church and bishop of the same was appointed and set up to have the inspection and regiment of other churches about him, secundum morem antiquum, that is, ‘after the ancient custom;’ as the words of the council do purport. So that the bishop of Alexandria should have power of Libya and Pentapolis in Egypt; forasmuch as the bishop of the city of Rome hath the like or same manner³.”

Can. 7.

M. Fox.

[¹ Τὰ ἀρχαῖα ἔθη κρατεῖτω, τὰ ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ καὶ Λιβύῃ καὶ Πενταπόλει, ὥστε τὸν Ἀλεξανδρείας ἐπίσκοπον πάντων τούτων ἔχειν τὴν ἐξουσίαν. ἐπειδὴν καὶ τῷ ἐν τῇ Ῥώμῃ ἐπισκόπῳ τοῦτο σύνηθές ἐστιν ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὴν Ἀντιόχειαν, καὶ ἐν ταῖς ἄλλαις ἐπαρχίαις, τὰ πρεσβεῖα σώζεσθαι ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις. καθόλου δὲ πρόδηλον ἐκείνο, ὅτι εἴτις χωρὶς γνώμης τοῦ μητροπολίτου γένοιτο ἐπίσκοπος, τὸν τοιοῦτον ἡ μεγάλη σύνοδος ὥρισε μὴ δεῖν εἶναι ἐπίσκοπον.—Concil. Nic. can. 6. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 32.]

[² Ἐπειδὴ συνήθεια κεκράτηκε καὶ παράδοσις ἀρχαία, ὥστε τὸν ἐν Αἰλίᾳ ἐπίσκοπον τιμᾶσθαι, ἔχέτω τὴν ἀκολουθίαν τῆς τιμῆς, τῇ μητροπόλει σωζομένου τοῦ οἰκείου ἀξιώματος.—Ibid. can. 7. ibid.]

[³ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 11; where find it so decreed.]

Now, if I might as safely allege the canons of the apostles as you do, then could I tell you that in the 33. canon (which canon is alleged as good authority against the supremacy of the bishop of Rome) you shall find archbishops. For that canon, setting an order among bishops, willett the bishops of every nation “to know their first or chief bishop, and him to be taken for the head of them.” The words of the canon be these: *Cujusque gentis episcopos oportet scire, quosnam inter ipsos primus sit, habereque ipsum quodammodo pro capite, neque sine illius voluntate quicquam agere insolitum*⁴: “The bishops of every country must know who is chief among them, and must take him as it were for their head; neither must they do any unaccustomed thing without his will; and every one must do those things alone by himself which belong to his parish and to the places that be under him; but neither must he do anything without the will of all them; for so shall concord be kept, and God shall be glorified through our Lord in the Holy Ghost.” Now, I pray you, tell me what difference there is betwixt “the first or chief bishop or head of the rest,” and “archbishop.” And, lest you should think this canon to be of small force (as suspected), you shall hear it almost verbatim repeated and confirmed by the council of Antioch: “In every country it is convenient that the bishops should know that their metropolitan bishop beareth the care of the whole province. Wherefore let all those that have any business repair to the metropolitan city. And for this cause it is thought good that he both should excel in honour, and that the other bishops do no unaccustomed thing without him, according to the ancient rule appointed of our fathers, saving those things only which belong to their own diocese and to the places that are under them. For every bishop hath power over his own parish to rule them according to reverence meet for every one, and to provide for all the country that are under his city, so that he ordain both priests and deacons, and contain all things with his judgment. But further let him attempt nothing without the metropolitan; neither

The name of archbishop and metropolitan.

Can. Apost. 33. alias 35.

Concil. Antioch. can. 9.

[⁴ Τοὺς ἐπισκόπους ἑκάστου ἔθνους εἰδέναι χρὴ τὸν ἐν αὐτοῖς πρῶτον, καὶ ἡγεῖσθαι αὐτὸν ὡς κεφαλὴν, καὶ μηδὲν τι πράττειν περιττὸν ἀνευ τῆς ἐκείνου γνώμης. ἐκεῖνα δὲ μόνᾳ πράττειν ἑκάστου, ὅσα τῇ αὐτοῦ παροικίᾳ ἐπιβάλλει, καὶ ταῖς ὑπ’ αὐτὴν χώραις. ἀλλὰ μηδὲ ἐκεῖνος ἀνευ τῆς πάντων γνώμης ποιέτω τί. οὕτως γὰρ ὁμόνοια ἔσται, καὶ δοξασθήσεται ὁ Θεὸς διὰ Κυρίου ἐν ἁγίῳ Πνεύματι. —Canon. Apost. 33. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Tom. 1. col. 32.]

The name of archbishop and metropolitan.

In the 7. Division before.

let the metropolitan do anything without the advice of the other¹." You have now the canon of the apostles confirming archbishops, and the council of Nice and Antioch alleging "old custom" for them, and confirming them also. And a little before I declared unto you out of M. Fox, that there were archbishops here in England anno 180²; so that their fall cannot be very great³.

Chapter ii. The Nineteenth Division.

T. C. Page 70, Sect. 3.

What! no mention of him in Theophilus, bishop of Antioch, none in Ignatius, none in Clemens Alexandrinus, none in Justin Martyr, in Irenæus, in Tertullian, in Origen, in Cyprian, none in all those old historians out of the which Eusebius gathereth his story? Was it for his baseness and smallness that he could not be seen among⁴ the bishops, elders, and deacons, being the chief and principal of them all? Can the cedar of Lebanon be hid among⁴ the box-trees? Aristotle, in his Rhetoric ad Theodecten, saith that it is a token of contempt to forget the name of another⁵. Belike therefore, if there were any archbishop, he had no chair in the church, but was as it seemeth digging at the metals; for otherwise they, that have filled their book⁶ with the often mentioning of bishops, would have no doubt remembered him.

JO. WHITGIFT.

And what then? is not the council of Nice and of Antioch of as good credit as all these? Shall not Athanasius,

[¹ Τοὺς καθ' ἐκάστην ἐπαρχίαν ἐπισκόπους εἰδέναι χρή τὸν ἐν τῇ μητροπόλει προεστῶτα ἐπίσκοπον, καὶ τὴν φροντίδα ἀναδέχεσθαι πάσης τῆς ἐπαρχίας, διὰ τὸ ἐν τῇ μητροπόλει πανταχόθεν συντρέχειν πάντας τοὺς πράγματα ἔχοντας. ὕθεν ἔδοξε καὶ τῇ τιμῇ προηγέσθαι αὐτὸν, μηδὲν τε πράττειν περιττὸν τοὺς λοιποὺς ἐπισκόπους ἀνευ αὐτοῦ, κατὰ τὸν ἀρχαῖον κρατήσαντα τῶν πατέρων ἡμῶν κανόνα, ἢ ταῦτα μόνα, ὅσα τῇ ἐκάστου ἐπιβάλλει παροικία, καὶ ταῖς ὑπ' αὐτὴν χώραις. ἕκαστον γὰρ ἐπίσκοπον ἐξουσίαν ἔχειν τῆς ἑαυτοῦ παροικίας, διοικεῖν τε κατὰ τὴν ἐκάστῳ ἐπιβάλλουσαν εὐλάβειαν, καὶ πρόνοιαν ποιεῖσθαι πάσης τῆς χώρας τῆς ὑπὸ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ πόλιν, ὡς καὶ χειροτονεῖν πρεσβυτέρους καὶ διακόνους, καὶ μετὰ κρίσεως ἕκαστα διαλαμβάνειν· περαιτέρω δὲ μηδὲν πράττειν ἐπιχειρεῖν δίχα τοῦ τῆς μητροπόλεως ἐπισκόπου, μηδὲ αὐτὸν ἀνευ τῆς τῶν λοιπῶν γνώμης.—Concil. Antioch. can. 9. in cod. Tom. II. col. 565.]

[² See before, page 128.]

[³ Cartwright replies that the ancient custom spoken of in the council of Nice did not necessarily imply any great space of time; and takes exception against the authority of that council, urging that some of the rules prescribed in it were "against the rule of St Paul."—Sec. Repl. pp. 483, &c.]

[⁴ Amongst, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ Ποιητικὸν δ' ὀργῆς καὶ ἡ λήθη, οἷον καὶ ἡ τῶν ὀνομάτων οὐσα παρὰ μικρόν· ὀλιγωρίας γὰρ δοκεῖ καὶ ἡ λήθη σημειῖον εἶναι.—Aristot. Op. Lut. Par. 1629. Rhetor. Lib. II. cap. ii. Tom. II. p. 550.]

[⁶ Books, Repl. 2.]

Epiphanius, Ambrose, Hierome, Chrysostom, Sozomen, &c., The name of archbishop and metropolitan. countervail them? and yet, if you had read these authors, you might have learned that in the most of them the office of an archbishop is expressed; as my Answer following declareth. But still you use negative reasons ab auctoritate, and that human. Your taunts and frumps I let pass: they are confutation sufficient to themselves⁷.

Chapter ii. The Twentieth Division.

T. C. Page 70, Sect. 3, 4.

But let us hear what the council of Nice hath for these titles.

In the sixth canon mention is made of a metropolitan bishop⁸. What is that to the metropolitan which now is⁹, either to the name or to the office? Of the office it shall appear afterwards. In the name I think there is a great difference between a metropolitan bishop, and metropolitan of England, or of all England. A metropolitan bishop was nothing else but a bishop of that place which it pleased the emperor or magistrate to make the chief city of the diocese or shire; and, as for this name, it maketh no more difference between bishop and bishop than when I say a minister of London, and a minister of Newington. There is no man that is well advised, which will gather of this saying that there is as great difference in preeminence between those two ministers as is between London and Newington. For his office and preeminence we shall see hereafter.

An untruth, contrary to the manifest words of the council of Nice.

JO. WHITGIFT.

For the full answering of this it shall be sufficient to set down the judgment of certain of the learned writers of our time, touching the true meaning of that canon of the council of Nice; as the practice of the church before that time, at that time, and since that time, hath expounded it.

The judgment of learned writers of the 6. canon Conc. Niceni.

M. Calvin, in his Institutions, Chap. viii. sect. 54, saith thus: "That every province had among their bishops an archbishop, and that the council of Nice did appoint patriarchs which should be in order and dignity above archbishops, it was for the preservation of discipline¹⁰." M. Calvin saith, the council of Nice did appoint patriarchs which should be in order and

Calvin.

[⁷ "... a few such frumps will break the archbishop's back, if they be not better looked unto."—Sec. Repl. p. 487.]

[⁸ See before, page 144, note 1.]

[⁹ Which is now, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[¹⁰ Quod autem singulæ provinciæ unum habebant inter episcopos archiepiscopum: quod item in Nicena synodo constituti sunt patriarchæ, qui essent ordine et dignitate archiepiscopis superiores: id ad disciplinæ conservationem pertinebat.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. iv. 4. Tom. IX. p. 286.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.
Illyricus.

dignity above archbishops. He saith also that every province had among their bishops an archbishop.

Illyricus in his Catalogue testium veritatis, speaking of this council, saith thus: *Constituit quoque hæc . . . synodus, ut singularum provinciarum metropolitani potestatem habeant in suos episcopos, sacerdotes, et ecclesias, Alexandrinus in Ægypto, Antiochenus in Syria. &c.*¹: "This synod also appointed that the metropolitans of every province should have authority over their bishops, priests, and churches; the bishop of Alexandria in Egypt, and the bishop of Antioch in Syria. &c." And in his book, that he intituleth "A Refutation of the Invective of Brunus against the Centuries," he doth interpret this canon on this manner: "Here we see plainly that the Nicene council first in this canon doth give a primacy to the metropolitan in every province, and doth make subject unto him all the bishops and priests of his province. Moreover, that it maketh all the metropolitan bishops, as of Alexandria, Rome, and Antioch, and of other provinces, altogether of equal authority amongst themselves. And last, that the subjects (if that I may so say) of another may not appeal to any other metropolitan. And after this manner the sixth council of Carthage doth understand, allege, and urge the foresaid canon in the former epistle²."

M. Fox.

M. Fox, who hath very diligently and faithfully laboured in this matter, and searched out the truth of it as learnedly as I know any man to have done, in his first Tom. page 11, writeth thus: "Then followed the council of Nice, wherein it was decreed that, throughout the university of Christ's church, which was now far spread over the world, certain provinces and precincts to the number of four were appointed, every one to have his head church and chief bishop, called then³ metropolitans or patriarchs, to have the oversight of such churches as did lie about him⁴;" and, page 12, he speaketh to the same effect, as it may appear in his words which I have before recited⁵. And in the same page he saith: "Wherefore, as we must needs grant the bishop of Rome to be called a metropolitan or an archbishop by the council of Nice; so we will not greatly stick in this also, to have him numbered with patriarchs or primates; &c."⁶

[¹ M. Flac. Illyr. Catalog. Test. Basil. 1556. p. 47.]

[² Hic clare videmus, Nicenam synodum primum in hoc canone primatum in singulis provinciis suo metropolitano dare, omnesque episcopos ac sacerdotes ei suæ provincie subdicere. Deinde, omnes metropolitanos episcopos, Alexandrinum, Romanum, Antiochenum, et aliarum provinciarum, inter sese plane exæquare, ita ut nullus alteri imperare in ulla plane re possit, aut debeat. Demum, ne ullius (ut ita dicam) subditi, ad alium metropolitanum appellare possint. Atque hoc modo etiam sexta Carthaginensis synodus prædictum canonem in præcedenti epistola intelligit, citat, et urget.—Illyr. Flac. De Primat. Papæ Hist. ad calc. Refut. Invect. Bruni contr. Cent. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1566. p. 230.]

[³ Them, Def. A.]

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

But the very words of the canon itself doth condemn you of a great oversight. For this is the canon: *Antiqua consuetudo servetur per Ægyptum, Libyam, et Pentapolim, ita ut Alexandrinus episcopus horum omnium habeat potestatem; &c.*⁷: "Let the ancient custom be kept throughout Egypt, Libya, and Pentapolis, that the bishop of Alexandria have the government of all these; &c.;" as is said before.

T. C. condemned of untruth by the words of the canon. Can. 6.

How say you now? is not this "for the name and for the office" also of our metropolitans and archbishops? had not they jurisdiction of whole provinces, as ours have? were not all other bishops and ministers of the church subject to them, as they be to ours? were not they metropolitans of provinces and countries, as ours be? And is this no more to differ, "than a minister of London and a minister of Newington?" Truly I marvel that you can be carried unto so manifest untruths, and palpable errors. But, for the further declaration of the authority of a metropolitan bishop, though this which I have said be sufficient, it may please you to take pains to peruse in the council of Antioch the 9 canon: *Per singulas provincias episcopos convenit nosse metropolitanum episcopum sollicitudinem totius provincie gerere*⁸: "In every province it is convenient that bishops should know, that the metropolitan bishop hath the caring for of the whole province. &c.;" as is mentioned before, in the first canon of the council of Ephesus. It is also evident that the "metropolitan of the province"⁹ (for so is he there called) had authority over

The authority of the metropolitan.

Cone. Antioch.

[⁴ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. pp. 9, 10; where wherein was decreed, the whole university, over all the world, provinces or precincts, and called them metropolitan or patriarch.]

[⁵ Id. ibid. p. 11. See before, page 144.]

[⁶ Id. ibid. See before, page 137.]

[⁷ Concil. Nic. can. 6. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 32. See before, page 144, note 1.]

[⁸ Concil. Antioch. can. 9. in eod. ibid. col. 565. See before, page 146, note 1.]

[⁹ ὁ ἀρχιεπίσκοπος τῆς ἐπαρχίας.—Concil. Ephes. Act. VII. can. 1. in eod. Tom. III. col. 803.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.
M. Fox.

all the bishops in the same province. But, to make short, because I shall have other occasion to speak of this matter, M. Fox, in the treatise before recited, concludeth thus: "Whereby it is to be concluded, that to be false that Clement and Anacletus and Anicetus be reported (but falsely) to put a difference between primates or patriarchs, metropolitans or archbishops; whereas by sufficient authority it is to be proved that in the old church both primates, first bishops, bishops of the first seat, patriarchs, metropolitans, bishops of the mother-city, and archbishops, were all one. First, that primates and metropolitans were both one is before declared in the canons of the apostles, and by the council of Antioch aforesaid¹." The same doth Vilierius affirm in his book De Statu Primitivæ Ecclesiæ, fol. 26, and proveth it out of Socrates, very manifestly; that is, that metropolitans and patriarchs were all one at the first². I am not ignorant but there is some controversy among both the civilians and canonists, whether a metropolitan or an archbishop be all one or no, but in the end this is the opinion of the most, so far as I can read or learn, that they be idem re, "the same in deed," but differ nomine, "in name." For he is called an archbishop in respect of the other bishops of whom he is the chief. But he is called metropolitan in respect of the cities that be within his province. But of archbishops and metropolitans more must be spoken hereafter³.

Vilierius.

Chapter ii. The Twenty-first Division.

T. C. Page 70, Sect. ult.

There are alleged, to prove the names of archbishops, patriarchs, archdeacons, the 13. 25. 26. and 27. canons of the council of Nice. For the 25. 26. and⁴ 27. there are no such canons of that council; and, although there be a thirteenth canon, there is no word of patriarch or archdeacon there contained. And I marvel with what shame you can thrust upon us these counterfeit canons, which come out of the pope's mint;

These canons differ only in number, and not in matter, from those that are not counterfeit.

[¹ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 12; where it is concluded, patriarchs and metropolitans, and declared by the canons.]

[² Aperte igitur Socrates omnes metropolitans, patriarchas appellat: et in his Alexandrinum, cujus patriarchiam reliquis comparat: ex quo intelligitur eam non multis partibus reliquis majorem fuisse.—Fr. Vilier. De Stat. Prim. Eccles. Hierap. 1553. p. 26. Conf. Socr. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. v. cap. viii. pp. 217, 18.]

[³ "The Answ. can never be holden in the rails of any lawful form of disputation. All men see that whatsoever he heapeth up toucheth not my reply. &c."—Sec. Repl. pp. 487, 8.]

[⁴ Repl. 1 and 2 omit and.]

yea, and which are not to be found. Theodorct saith that there are but The name of archbishop and metropolitan.
Lib. i. cap. 8. twenty canons of the council of Nice⁵; and those twenty are in the tome of the councils; and in those there is no mention of any Lib. i. c. p. 6. patriarch, archbishop, archdeacon⁶. Ruffine also remembereth
22. canons⁷, very little differing from those other twenty but in length; and in none of those are found any of these names of archbishop, archdeacon, or⁸ patriarch; and it is as lawful for M. Harding to allege the 44. Not so; for that is repugnant to the true canons, and therefore counterfeit.
canon of the council of Nice to prove the supremacy of the pope of Rome⁹, as it is for M. Doctor Whitgift to allege the 25. 26. 27. to prove the name of archbishop, archdeacon, patriarch; for they are all of one stamp, and have like authority.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I will not greatly stick in the defence of those canons: the sixth and the seventh canon do sufficiently verify all that I have alleged out of the other; as is declared not only by the words of the canons, but by the judgment of those whose learning and religion was never as yet stained. I know that there is no small controversy about the number of the canons of that synod. In the book of the councils there are only twenty, in Ruffine 22. Athanasius, in an epistle that he (as some think) with the other bishops of Egypt, writ to Marcus bishop of Rome (if any credit is to be given unto that epistle), writeth that there were first 80. and afterwards the same brought into 70. canons¹⁰. Isidorus, in his preface to the council, saith that in the decrees of pope Julius there is mention made of 70. canons¹¹; so that for the number of the canons there is great difference in the writers.

Controversy about the number of the canons Concil. Niceni.

Canons ascribed to the Nicene council not found in the number extant.

[⁵ Αὐθις δὲ συνελθόντες εἰς τὸ συνέδριον, περὶ τῆς ἐκκλησιαστικῆς πολιτείας νόμους ἔγραψαν εἰκοσι.—Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. i. cap. viii. p. 29.]

[⁶ Patriarch, archdeacon, archbishop, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ Hist. Eccles. Par. Lib. x. cap. vi. foll. 107, 8. There are only 20 canons here recited. But see in Autor. Hist. Eccles. Basil. 1535. pp. 221-3; where the number is 22.]

[⁸ Or is not in Repl. 1 or 2.]

[⁹ See Bp. Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. I. pp. 351, &c.]

[¹⁰ Sane præsentibus nobis, octoginta capitula in memorata tractata sunt synodo semel,...Sed visum est trecentis decem et octo patribus,...ut decem capitula adunarentur aliis,...et ad formam septuaginta discipulorum...fierent capitula, &c.—Athanas. Op. Par. 1693. Ad Marc. Pap. Epist. Tom. II. p. 665. This epistle is spurious.]

[¹¹ Scire autem vos...oportet, quod plura quam illa viginti capitula, quæ apud nos habentur, Nicænæ synodi reperimus, et in decretis Julii papæ septuaginta capitula ejusdem synodi esse debere legimus.—Isid. Mercat. Præfat. Concil. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. cols. 6, 7. Conf. Jul. Papæ I. Ad Episc. Orient. Epist. ii. ibid. Tom. II. cols. 484, &c. The epistle of Julius is not genuine.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

Conc. Arelat.
Hieronymus.

Concilium Arelatense the second, canon the 24, doth recite a canon of the council of Nice, touching infamous libels¹; which is not to be found among the 20.

Hierome, in his preface upon the book of Judith, saith that the council of Nice did reckon that book in the number of the holy scriptures²; and yet there is no such thing to be found among those 20. canons.

Ambrose.

Ambrose, Lib. x., the epistle 82, attributeth another canon to the council of Nice concerning second marriages in clerks³.
I could recite more canons alleged by good writers out of that council, which are not to be found in those 20. or 22; but it shall not need.

The 25. 26. 27.
canons differ only in number, not in substance, from the true
canons.

Wherefore, though I have alleged more canons than are to be found in the volume of councils, yet I have done nothing which is strange, neither have I alleged any canon that is not agreeable to the sixth and seventh, whereof there is no doubt, and according to the true meaning of those two canons as they be interpreted by the best-learned. And, in very deed, the 25. 26. 27. canons by me alleged are the very same with the 6. and 7, differing only in number; wherein I followed the author that so placed them. And in the 13.
canon the name of archbishop is added; whereof more shall be spoken hereafter (God willing).

M. Harding's 44. canon is plain repugnant to the sixth canon, and therefore without all doubt a counterfeit. But the canons that I have alleged agree both with the sixth and seventh, and therefore not unlike to be truly attributed to that council, in these points wherein I have alleged them⁴.

[¹ Eos qui falso fratribus suis capitalia objecisse convicti fuerint, placuit usque ad exitum non communicare, sicut magna synodus ante constituit, nisi digna satisfactione pœnituerint.—Concil. Arelat. II. can. 24. ibid. Tom. IV. cols. 1013, 4.
Conf. Concil. Arelat. I. can. 14. ibid. Tom. I. col. 1428; and Concil. Arelat. II.
can. 24. in Crabb. Concil. Col. Agrip. 1551. Tom. I. p. 294, and not. in loc.]

[² Sed quia hunc librum synodus Nicæna in numero sanctarum scripturarum legitur computasse, acquievi postulationi vestræ, &c.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Præf. in Lib. Judith, Tom. I. Pars II. cols. 1169, 70. Conf. not. in loc.]

[³ Sed prius cognoscamus non solum hoc apostolum de episcopo et presbytero statuisse, sed etiam patres in concilio Nicæni tractatus addidisse, neque clericum quemquam debere esse, qui secunda conjugia sortitus sit.—Ambros. Op. Par.
1686-90. Ad Vercell. Eccles. Epist. lxiii. 64. Tom. II. col. 1037. Conf. not. in loc.]

[⁴ Cartwright accuses Whitgift, in reply, of taking the same course with α Pighius, Hosius, Harding, and their likes."—Sec. Repl. pp. 488, &c.]

Chapter ii. The Twenty-second Division.

T. C. Page 71, Sect. 1.

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

I fear greatly some crafty dissembling papist had his hand in this book, who, having a great deal of rotten stuff which he could not utter under his own name, being already lost, brought it unto the author hereof, which hath upon his credit, without further examination, set it to sale. Peradventure you will think scorn to be censured and reprehended of a poor minister of the country; and therefore I will turn you over for your lesson in this behalf unto the bishop of Salisbury in his Reply against M. Harding, touching the article of the supremacy.

You muse
as you use.

JO. WHITGIFT.

“Fear” not; I warrant you I have alleged nothing which I am not able by sufficient testimony to prove that I have read myself. And therefore your surmise is but grounded upon your own practice.

Whatsoever the bishop of Salisbury saith, “in his Reply against Harding,” touching the canon alleged by him is most true; and I do most willingly acknowledge it so to be⁵, neither do I take any canon of that council as undoubtedly true, but these 20, specified in the first Tome of Councils; the other I have only mentioned as probable, because they agree with them; and yet all the canons that I have alleged be extant in print, and the book is commonly to be sold, and therefore I have not received them of any other.

Chapter ii. The Twenty-third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 66, Sect. 3.

Ambrose also, that old and learned father, both alloweth the name and office of an archbishop, *Lib. de Dignitate Sacerdotum, cap. 5.*⁷ Ambrose⁶.

[⁵ “The truth is, that you have done the best you can, to overthrow the whole defence of the bishop in that behalf.”—Ibid. p. 490.]

[⁶ This note is not in Ans..]

[⁷ Quos si percunctari fideliter velis, quis eos præfecerit sacerdotes, respondent mox et dicunt : Ab archiepiscopo sum nuper episcopus ordinatus, centumque ei solidos dedi, ut episcopalem gratiam consequi meruissem, quos si minime dedissem, hodie episcopus non essem....Nempe hoc est, quod doleo, quia archiepiscopus carnaliter episcopum fecit. Nam propter pecunias spiritaliter leprosum ordinavit.—Ambros. Op. De Dign. Sacerdot. cap. v. Tom. II. Append. cols. 362, 3. This treatise is not by Ambrose. It is attributed with considerable probability to pope Sylvester II.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

Ambrose is little beholding to you, that cannot be accepted for a witness.

In those words Ambrose doth not disallow
the office,
but the abuse of it by the person.

T. C. Page 71, Sect. 2.

If all should be allowed of that St Ambrose allowed¹ of, then, besides other things which he holdeth corruptly, the marriage of the ministers² should go very hard; but it is worthy to be observed with ⁱ Lib. Offic. cap. 50. what words Ambrose doth allow of the archbishop, that all men may understand how low it goeth with M. Doctor for his defence of the archbishop; and how the archbishop is so out of credit that there cannot be gotten any to be surety for his honesty. Ambrose, complaining of the ministers or bishops in those days, saith, "If a man ask them who preferred them to be priests, answer is made, by and by, that the archbishop for an hundred shillings ordained me bishop, to whom I gave an³ hundred shillings that I might get the favour to be bishop, which if I had not given I had not been bishop;" and afterward he saith that this "grieved him, that the archbishop ordained bishops carnally or for some carnal respect." And this is all the allowance that Ambrose sheweth of an archbishop. Your archbishop taketh all things in good part; so that his very dispraise he expoundeth to his commendation.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I know no man whose writings and works are so perfect (the writers of the canonical scriptures excepted), that all things in their books are to be allowed. But God forbid that we should therefore reject that which they have well and truly spoken. You will do little for Ambrose, if you will not allow him for an historical witness of that which was in his time. This is therefore a shifting answer, but nothing commendable. It evidently appeareth by that place that in his time there were "archbishops;" for what though he reprove the abuse of some archbishops in ordaining bishops and ministers for money, doth he therefore disallow either the name or the office? Nay, this is rather to be concluded, that there were archbishops in Ambrose's time, which had authority to ordain bishops, because Ambrose doth reprove such archbishops "as for carnal respects ordained bishops⁴."

Your undutiful and arrogant frumps and scoffs I pass

[¹ Alloweth, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[² Inoffensum autem exhibendum et immaculatum ministerium, nec ullo conjugali coitu violandum cognoscitis, &c.—Id. De Offic. Ministr. Lib. 1. cap. 1. 258. Tom. II. col. 66.]

[³ A, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ Cartwright replies, that he did not refuse Ambrose "for an historical witness," he only questioned the genuineness of the treatise cited, assuring himself "that it is a false Ambrose, and therefore that testimony to be of no force."—Sec. Repl. p. 491.]

over. It seemeth, by your so oft using them, that you are afraid lest you should be taken for a modest Christian.

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

Chapter ii. The Twenty-fourth Division.

T. C. Page 71, Sect. 3.

And there is great likelihood that the archbishop, which Ambrose maketh mention of, was no other than he which for the time ruled the action wherein bishops were ordained, and after the action ended had no more authority than the rest.

An unlikely likelihood, void of truth.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you had read any ancient story or father, yea, if you had but perused M. Calvin's Institutions, the viii. chap.⁵, or any writer intreating of this matter, you would never have uttered this vain conjecture, nor shewed so manifest a token of great ignorance and no reading. For it shall appear, by sufficient testimony, that neither the name nor office of an archbishop was anything at all strange in this time. And the authors of the Centuries, Cent. iv., can tell you that Ambrose himself was *metropolitanus... plurium conjunctarum ecclesiarum administratione fungens*⁶: "a metropolitan governing many churches adjoining together"⁷.

Ambrose, a metropolitan. Cent. iv. cap. 10.

Your conjecture, that "this archbishop" should be "no other than he which for the time ruled the action wherein bishops were ordained, and after the action ended had no more authority than the rest," is a mere fancy of your own, contrary to all authority, and without any ground or similitude of reason; and yet you often repeat it, and make it the foundation of this your building. But let us hear your conjectures.

Chapter ii. The Twenty-fifth Division.

T. C. Page 71, Sect. 4.

And I am moved so to think, first, because it is not like that one only ordained bishops, being contrary to the old canons of the best councils;

[⁵ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. iv. 4. Tom. IX. p. 286. See before, page 147, note 10.]

[⁶ Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. iv. cap. x. col. 1150.]

[⁷ Cartwright opposes to the opinion from the Centuries that of Coster (editor of Ambrose's works), who says that he "was a bishop not of a whole province, or of many cities, but of one only city."—Sec. Repl. p. 492. Conf. Ambros. Op. Basil. 1555. Ambros. Vit. per Joan. Coster. Tom. I. fol. C. 1. 2.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

but that there were other, and that this whom Ambrose calleth archbishop did gather the voices, &c.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Ambrose.

I have shewed before that it was not so strange at this time for the bishop alone to ordain ministers. And yet Ambrose in this place signifieth that the people had somewhat to do in this matter; for he calleth them *populum nugacem et indoctum, qui talem sibi asciverunt sacerdotem*¹: “a people that triflETH and is unlearned, that hath gotten unto them such a priest.” But, I pray you, where is now your distinction betwixt “election” and “ordination”? For Ambrose speaketh in this place of ordaining, and not of electing. If you will needs so distinguish them that they may not be at any time nor in any place confounded, then have you answered yourself here, and with one conjecture overthrown another². But, howsoever it is, conjectures cannot prevail against so manifest a truth, being so silly conjectures. For tell me where you ever read that he was called an “archbishop that did” only “gather the voices,” or that this name was attributed to any during the “action only,” and no longer. This is very new divinity, unheard of in any good author that I have read, or can hear of.

Chapter ii. The Twenty-sixth Division.

T. C. Page 71, Sect. 5.

Secondly, because it was very unlike that there was any absolutely above St Ambrose in those parts where he complaineth of evil bishops or ministers made.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Why, to whom or for whom did Ambrose write this book? for his own province or diocese only? Therein are you deceived that you think Ambrose to have written this book for his own province only, when he writ it to profit the whole church; as it may appear in the first chapter of that book³.

[¹ Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. De Dign. Sacerdot. cap. v. Tom. II. Append. col. 363; where nugacem populum. See before, page 153, note 7.]

[² “... having nothing to answer, he speaketh in the clouds: where he is so far from being understood of others, that I think he understood not himself.”—Sec. Repl. p. 493.]

[³ ... non jam ad subditum loquor vulgus, quod jugiter monere consuevi, sed

Neither doth he complain of such evil bishops or ministers as were under him (for then should he have complained of himself, being their metropolitan), but of such he complaineth as were in other places and provinces; as may be seen by these words of his: *Ita ut videas in ecclesia passim, quos non merita sed pecuniæ ad episcopatus ordinem provexerunt*⁴: “So that a man may see everywhere in the church such as are promoted to the order of a bishop, not by deserts but by money;” and therefore this conjecture is soon answered.

The name of archbishop and metropolitan.

De Dig. Sacer. cap. 5.

Chapter ii. The Twenty-seventh Division.

T. C. Page 71, Sect. 6.

Thirdly, for that Ambrose in another place (which you after cite) dividing all the church into the clergy and laity, doth subdivide the clergy into bishops, elders, and deacons⁵; and therefore it is not like that there was any which had any continual function of archbishop; but, as he was called χορῆγος, or “leader of the dance,” which cometh first, and after coming in again in the second or third place is no more so called, so that bishop was called archbishop, which for the time present did gather the voices of the rest of the bishops, which he, by and by, laid down with the dissolving of the meeting. And that this is not my conjecture only, that there was no ordinary or absolute archbishop, let the Centuries be seen which allege that place of Ambrose to prove that the office of an archbishop was not then come into the church, which was four hundred years after Christ, and more also.

Where, or which Century? Untruth.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is a “dancing” device indeed, without any shadow of truth; as it may appear by that which already is alleged, and shall do more and more by that which followeth. You are marvellous circumspect in your quotations, lest you should be tripped, and therefore you say, “let the Centuries be seen,” but you tell not where. Surely you do very untruly report the Centuries; for I have read them where they do allege that place of Ambrose; and there is not to be found any ad ipsos jam prædicatores vulgi mea verba converto: et meis conservis velut obediens servus, id est, episcopos sacerdotibus, antistes pontificibus, audacter prædicare salutis commonitoria non retardabo.—Ambros. Op. De Dign. Sacerdot. cap. i. Tom. II. Append. col. 358.]

[⁴ Id. ibid. cap. v. col. 362.]

[⁵ Aliud est enim quod ab episcopo requirit Deus, et aliud quod a presbytero, et aliud quod a diacono, et aliud quod a clerico, et aliud quod a laico, vel a singulis quibusque hominibus.—Id. ibid. cap. iii. col. 360.]

The name of archbishop and metropolitan. Cent. iv. cap. 7.

such matter, but the clean contrary; as is to be seen in that place by you alleged of the fourth Cent. The words be these: *Episcopi et metropolitani dicebantur a præcipuis seu primariis civitatibus, sicut Basilium metropolitanum Cappadocum Zozomenus vocat, Lib. iii. cap. 16; et archiepiscopi, qualem Seleucia fuisse Simeonem idem retulit, Lib. ii. cap. 8. Patriarcha totius alicujus provinciae dicebatur episcopus, ut Socrates indicat, Lib. v. cap. 8*¹: "Bishops and metropolitans were named of the chief and principal cities; as Zozomenus calleth Basil the metropolitan of Cappadocia, Lib. iii. cap. 16; and archbishops, such as he reporteth that Simeon was of Seleucia, Lib. ii. cap. 8. Patriarch of some whole province was called a bishop; as Socrates sheweth, Lib. v. cap. 8." Wherefore it is too much boldness in you to avouch so manifest untruths. Neither is it any marvel though² you quote not the places; for forgery seeketh corners³.

Forgery seeketh corners.

And, although that which hath been hitherto alleged out of the councils of Nice and Antioch, with the judgment of so many learned men interpreting the same, might serve to persuade any reasonable man that the office and name of archbishop and metropolitan is both of great antiquity and not for one action only, or a "dancing" office (as you would have it), but fixed and permanent; yet, because I have to do with quarrellers, before I go any further in confuting, I will set down the judgment of other ancient and famous writers also, who allow both of these names and offices; and first I will recite such as have the names expressed with the offices, then such as speak of the very thing itself without the names. I will begin with councils.

Councils, of the name and office of metropolitan and archbishop, &c. Conc. Nicen. can. 4. 6. 7.

The council of Nice, as you have heard, hath the name of metropolitan, and doth limit unto him certain provinces, to govern and take the care of⁴. It hath been declared that

[¹ Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. iv. cap. vii. col. 489. Conf. Soz. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. xvi., Lib. II. cap. ix.; Socr. Lib. v. cap. viii. pp. 427, 8, 371, 217, 8.]

[² Through, Def. B.]

[³ "My quotation of the Centuries was easy to find...it is in the beginning of the chapter which you alleged."—Sec. Repl. p. 493.]

[⁴ Ἐπίσκοπον προσήκει μάλιστα μὲν ὑπὸ πάντων τῶν ἐν τῇ ἐπαρχίᾳ καθίστασθαι. εἰ δὲ δυσχερὲς εἴη τὸ τοιοῦτο, ...τρέψῃ ἐπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ συναγομένους, ...τότε τὴν χειροτονίαν ποιεῖσθαι. τὸ δὲ κύρος τῶν γινομένων δίδοσθαι καθ' ἑκάστην ἐπαρχίαν τῇ μητροπολίτῃ.—Concil. Nic. can. 4. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Int. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 29. Conf. cans. 6, 7. ibid. col. 32. See before, page 144, notes 1, 2.]

both M. Calvin, Illyricus, M. Fox, and others, do acknowledge the names and office of patriarchs and archbishops, &c., in the same canon to be contained⁵. Neither do they, nor any other learned writer, deny these names and offices to have been in the primitive church, and that fixed to certain places and persons, not moveable by actions, nor practised by course.

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

Likewise you have heard how that council, by this clause Secundum morem antiquum: “according to the ancient custom,” doth signify that these names and offices have⁶ been in the church of long time; or else it would not have been said to be “an old custom.”

Moreover, the ninth canon of the council of Antioch, before alleged, is most plain and evident, both for the name and the thing, together with the long continuance of them in the church⁷.

Conc. Antioch. can. 9.

The 20. canon of the same council of Antioch saith directly that no bishops may call a several council without the consent of their metropolitans⁸.

Can. 20.

In the sixth and 37. canons Concilii Arelatensis, mention is made of the metropolitan, of his authority in ordering of bishops, and of the authority of his synod¹⁰.

Conc. Arelat. can. 6. & 37.⁹

The like both for the name and the matter also touching ordaining of bishops is in the twelfth canon of the council of Laodicea¹¹.

Conc. Laod. can. 12.

In the second council of Carthage, in the twelfth canon, it is evident that there was a “primate” in every province, and that without his commandment it was not lawful for any to be ordained bishop¹².

Conc. Carth. ii. can. 12.

In the 13. and 17, and divers other canons of the general

Conc. Carth. can. 13. 17. &c.

[⁵ See before, pages 147, &c.]

[⁶ Hath, Def. B.]

[⁷ Concil. Antioch. can. 9. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Tom. II. col. 565. See before, page 146, note 1.]

[⁸ Μη ἐξεῖναι δὲ τινὰς καθ' ἑαυτοὺς ποιεῖσθαι ἄνευ τῶν πεπιστευμένων τὰς μητροπόλεις.—Can. 20. ibid. col. 572.]

[⁹ 17, Def. B.]

[¹⁰ Illud autem ante omnia clareat, eum qui sine conscientia metropolitani constitutus fuerit episcopus, juxta magnam synodum esse episcopum non debere.—Concil. Arelat. II. can. 6. ibid. Tom. IV. col. 1012. Hoc etiam placuit custodiri, ut nihil contra magnam synodum metropolitani sibi æstiment vindicandum.—Ibid. can. 56 (al. 37). col. 1017.]

[¹¹ Περὶ τοῦ τοὺς ἐπισκόπους, κρίσει τῶν μητροπολιτῶν καὶ τῶν περίξ ἐπισκόπων, καθίστασθαι εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησιαστικὴν ἀρχήν, ὄντας ἐκ πολλοῦ δεδοκιμασμένους, ἐν τε τῷ λόγῳ τῆς πίστεως, καὶ τῇ τοῦ εὐθέος λόγου πολιτείᾳ.—Concil. Laod. can. 12. ibid. Tom. I. col. 1497.]

[¹² Concil. Carthag. II. can. 12. ibid. Tom. II. cols. 1162, 3. This canon is the same with that which follows.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.
Cone. Chalcedo.

council of Carthage, as it is in the Greek copy, the authority of the "primate" is also expressed¹.

In the council of Chalcedon the name of "archbishop" is sundry times used : Flavianus is there called "archbishop of Constantinople," Dioscorus "archbishop of Alexandria," and one Atticus, bishop of Nicopolis, doth call the said Dioscorus archiepiscopum nostrum : "our archbishop." Leo is called "archbishop of Rome," &c.²

Of the councils that followed there is no doubt; and it were but superfluous for me to stand in reciting of them; and therefore this shall suffice for the councils, to shew that both the name of "metropolitan or archbishop," and also the authority, is not unheard of in the church of Christ, or a fitting or sliding office.

Fathers and stories, of the name and office of archbishop.
Epiphanius.

Now to the fathers and stories. Epiphanius, Lib. ii. Tom. ii. Hær. 68, calleth one Peter "archbishop of Alexandria." And, that it may fully appear that it was both a continual office and of great authority and jurisdiction, I will set down his words :

*Et Meletius quidem in carcere detentus erat una cum prædictis martyribus, ac Petro Alexandriae archiepiscopo, &c.*³ : "And Meletius truly was kept in prison together with the fore-named martyrs, and Peter the archbishop of Alexandria; and Meletius seemed to excel the other bishops of Egypt, for he had the second place after Peter in his archbishopric, as being under him to help him, and looking to ecclesiastical matters under him. For this is the custom, that the bishop of Alexandria hath the ecclesiastical government of all Egypt, Thebais, and Marcota, and Libya, and Ammonica, and Marcotitis, and Pentapolis.”

[¹ ... ὁφείλει παρ' ἡμῶν τὰ ὀρισθέντα ἐκ τῶν πρὸ ἡμῶν, φυλαχθῆναι· ὧν τινων ὡς ἔτυχεν ἀβούλως οἱ πρωτεύοντες τῆς οἰασθήποτε ἐπαρχίας οὐ κατατολμῶσι. πολλοὶ οὖν ἐπίσκοποι συναχθέντες, ἐπίσκοπον χειροτονήσουσιν· εἰ δὲ ἀνάγκη γένηται, τρεῖς ἐπίσκοποι ἐν οἰσθήποτε αὐτόν τῶν ὡσιν, τῷ τοῦ πρωτεύοντος παραγγέλματι χειροτονήσουσιν τὸν ἐπίσκοπον.—Cod. Canon. Eccles. Afric. can. 13. ibid. col. 1055; see also can. 17. ibid. col. 1058. Conf. Synod. Carthag. cans. 13, 17. in Canon. Apost. Concil. &c. cum Comm. Theod. Balsam. Lut. Par. 1620. pp. 611, 27.]

[² Concil. Calched. Act. 1. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. IV. cols. 148, 9, 52.]

[³ ... καὶ ὁ μὲν Μελήτιος ἐν τῷ δεσμοτηρίῳ καθευγμένος ἦν, αὐτὸς τε καὶ οἱ προεირημένοι μάρτυρες, ἅμα τῷ προεირημένῳ Πέτρῳ τῷ τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας ἀρχιεπισκόπῳ. ἐδόκει δὲ καὶ ὁ Μελήτιος τῶν [τῶν] κατὰ τὴν Αἴγυπτον προήκων, καὶ δευτερέων τῷ Πέτρῳ κατὰ τὴν ἀρχιεπισκοπὴν, ὡς δι' ἀντιλήψεως αὐτοῦ χάριν, ὑπ' αὐτὸν δὲ ὢν, καὶ ὑπ' αὐτὸν τὰ ἐκκλησιαστικά ἀναφέρων, τοῦτο γὰρ ἔθος ἐστὶ, τὸν ἐν τῇ Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ ἀρχιεπίσκοπον πάσης τε Αἰγύπτου καὶ Θηβαΐδος, Μαριαῶτον τε, καὶ Λιβύης, Ἀμμωνιακῆς, Μαραιώτιδος τε καὶ Πενταπόλεως, ἔχων τὴν ἐκκλησιαστικὴν διοίκησιν.—Epiph. Op. Par. 1622. Adv. Hær. Lib. 11. Tom. 11. Hær. lxxviii. 1. Tom. I. p. 717.]

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

In the same leaf he calleth this Peter archbishop three times. This Peter lived in the year of our Lord three hundred and four, twenty years at the least before the council of Nice.

Peter arch-bishop of Alexandria above twenty years before the council of Nice.

The same Epiphanius, in the same book and tome, Hær. 69, writeth thus: Quotquot enim ecclesiæ in Alexandria catholicae ecclesiæ sunt, sub uno archiepiscopo sunt: “All the churches that are catholic churches in Alexandria are under one archbishop.” And a little after he calleth Meletius “archbishop of Egypt,” but yet subject to Alexander the archbishop of Alexandria⁵; and all this was before the council of Nice.

Idem.

What can be spoken more aptly and more plainly to my purpose? And, if T. C. will cavil at the authority of the author (which is the poorest shift that can be, especially when the author is so generally allowed), then for brevity’s sake I do refer him to the epistle of Janus Cornarius prefixed before this book⁶, and to that which afterward I have alleged in his defence out of the Centuries.

Athanasius was called archbishop of Alexandria; and, that it may appear that it was not a bare title, but an office of government, you shall find these words in his second Apology:

*Ischaras quidam, ut nequaquam clericus, ita moribus improbissimus conatus est sui pagi insulas decipere, jactans sese clericum esse. Id ubi rescivisset ejus loci presbyter, mihi tum ecclesias perlustranti renunciavit: ego igitur, &c.*⁷ “A certain man named Ischaras, as he was no clerk, so was he Athanas. Apol. 2.

[⁴ Id. ibid. Hær. lxi. 1. p. 727.]

[⁵ Ἀνήνεγκε τοῖνυν εἰς τὰ ὅτα τοῦ ἀρχιεπισκόπου Ἀλεξάνδρου ὁ ἀρχιεπίσκοπος Μελήτιος ὁ κατὰ τὴν Αἴγυπτον, ὑπὸ δὲ χεῖρα Ἀλεξάνδρου ἐδόκει εἶναι.—Id. ibid. 3. p. 729.]

[⁶ Id. Contr. Octoag. Hær. Op. Panar. Iano Cornar. Interp. Basil. 1543. Pæf. foll. a. 2, &c.]

[⁷ ... Ἰσχάρας τις οὕτω λεγόμενος, οὐ κληρικός, ἀλλὰ καὶ τὸν τρόπον πονηρὸς, ἐπεχείρει τοὺς ἐν τῇ ἰδίᾳ κώμῃ πλανᾶν, λέγων εἶναί τινα ἐαυτὸν κληρικόν. τοῦτο μαθὼν ὁ τῶν τόπων πρεσβύτερος, περιερχομένην μοι τὰς ἐκκλησίας ἀναγγέλλει, καὶ ἀποστέλλω σὺν αὐτῷ Μακάριον πρεσβύτερον καλέσαι τὸν Ἰσχύραν. εὐρόντες δὲ αὐτὸν νοσοῦντα καὶ κατακείμενον ἐν κελλίῳ, ἐντέλλονται τῷ πατρὶ αὐτοῦ παραγγεῖλαι τῷ νήφ, μηδὲν τι τοιοῦτον ἐπιχειρεῖν, οἷον εἴρηται κατ’ αὐτοῦ.—Athanas. Op. Par. 1698. Apolog. contr. Arian. 63. Tom. I. p. 181.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

most wicked in manners, who went about to deceive the isles of his precinct, boasting that he was a clerk; when the priest of that place understood thereof, he told it unto me when I was visiting my churches; so I sent the same man together with Macharius the priest to fetch unto me Ischaras, whom when they found sick in his chamber, they commanded his father to warn his son, that he attempted no such thing as was reported of him." And after in the same place followeth Ischaras'¹ letters of submission to Athanasius. In the same Apology there are letters of submission written by Arsennius bishop of Hipsell, and the ministers and deacons of the same diocese, to Athanasius: the beginning of the letters is this: Et nos quoque diligentes pacem et unanimi- tatem cum ecclesia catholica, cui tu per Dei gratiam prefectus es, volens- que ecclesiastico canoni pro veteri instituto sub- jici, scribimus tibi, papa dilecte, promittimusque in nomine Domini nos deinceps non communicaturos cum schismaticis. &c.² "And we also, loving peace and concord with the catholic church, over which thou art by the grace of God appointed, and willing according to the old custom to be subject to the ecclesiastical canon, write to thee, loving father, and in the name of the Lord promise that we henceforth will not communicate with the schismatics."

By this it is plain that Athanasius had great jurisdiction over many bishops, and other ministers, and ecclesiastical persons. Again in the same Apology mention is made of an archbishop³.

In the same book the priests and deacons of the churches of Mareota, in an epistle that they writ to the synod, besides that they call Athanasius *episcopum nostrum*⁴: "our bishop," they shew that he used to visit the church solemnly accompanied. Their words are worth the noting, and be these following: *Utpote qui non longis finibus ab episcopo distemus, et comites in lustranda Mariote ei cohæsimus; nunquam enim ille solus visitandi causa itinera obire solet, sed comites secum trahere, presbyteros et diaconos et non paucos ex plebe*⁵: "Because we dwell not far from the bishop, and we accompanied him whilst he visited Mariotes; for he is never

[¹ Ischara, Def. B.]

[² Ibid. 69. p. 185.]

[³ Ibid. p. 191.]

[² Ibid. 64. pp. 181, 2.]

[⁴ Ibid. 74. p. 190.]

wont alone to take journeys in visitations, but to take companions with him, priests and deacons, and many of the people.” And his own words a little before that epistle speaking of these priests and deacons be these: *Et mecum provincias lustrabant*⁶: “And they visited the provinces with me.” Whereby also it is evident that he had a large jurisdiction, and that he did visit his provinces. The same Athanasius, in that Apology, declaring what this place called Mariotes is, saith: *Mariotes ager est in Alexandria, quo in loco nunquam fuit episcopus, imo ne chorepiscopus quidem; sed universæ ejus loci ecclesiæ episcopo Alexandrino subjacent; tamen ut singuli pagi suos presbyteros habeant*⁷: “Mariotes is a territory of Alexandria, where there was never bishop, no, not so much as a bishop’s deputy; but all the churches of that place are under the bishop of Alexandria; yet so that every village have their priests.”

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

In his epistle Ad solitariam vitam degentes, he calleth “Lucius metropolitan of Sardinia,” and “Dionysius metropolitan of Mediolane⁸.”

Socrates, Lib. v. cap. 8, saith that in the council of Constantinople “they confirmed the faith of the Nicene council, and appointed patriarchs, assigning their provinces, that the bishops of one diocese should not intermeddle in other churches (for this before was indifferently used by reason of persecution). And to Nectarius was allotted Megalopolis and Thracia. &c.”⁹

Socrates.

The same is to be seen in the canons of that council of Constantinople¹⁰.

Justinian.

I omit Justinian the emperor, who so often mentioneth these names and offices in his Constitutions¹¹. I also omit that Illyricus calleth Cyprian “metropolitan of Carthage;” and the Illyricus, Cent. iv.

[⁶ ... καὶ ἐν τῇ περιοδείᾳ σὺν ἐμοὶ ὄντες, &c.—Ibid. p. 190.]

[⁷ Ibid. 85. p. 200.]

[⁸ ... Παῦλινος ὁ ἀπὸ Τριβέρων τῆς μητροπόλεως τῶν Γαλλίων ἐπίσκοπος, καὶ Λουκίφερ ὁ ἀπὸ μητροπόλεως τῆς Σαρδινίας ἐπίσκοπος, Εὐσέβιος τε ὁ ἀπὸ Βερκέλλων τῆς Ἰταλίας, καὶ Διονύσιος ὁ ἀπὸ Μεδιολάνων, ἔστι δὲ καὶ αὕτη μητρόπολις τῆς Ἰταλίας.—Id. Hist. Arian. ad Monach. 33. Tom. I. p. 363.]

[⁹ ... ἐβεβαίωσάν τε αὐθις τὴν ἐν Νικαίᾳ πίστιν καὶ πατριάρχας κατέστησαν, διανεμῆμενοι τὰς ἐπαρχίας, ὥστε τοὺς ὑπὲρ διοίκησιν ἐπισκόπους ταῖς ὑπερορίοις ἐκκλησιαίαις μὴ ὑπερβαίνειν· τοῦτο γὰρ πρότερον διὰ τοὺς διωγμοὺς ἐγένετο ἀδιαφόρως· καὶ κληροῦται Νεκτάριος μὲν τὴν Μεγαλόπολιν καὶ τὴν Θράκην· κ. τ. λ.—Socr. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. v. cap. viii. pp. 217, 8.]

[¹⁰ Concil. Constant. cans. 1, 2. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. cols. 946, 7.]

[¹¹ See below, page 166, note 5.]

The name of archbishop and metropolitan.

fourth Century, where Ambrose is called metropolitan, having government of many churches¹. Neither shall I need to repeat the places of Calvin², M. Fox³, M. Beza, Lib. Conf. cap. 5,⁴ or other late writers' judgments, who directly confess that these names were usual in the primitive church, and that the office was permanent; for this that is spoken may suffice.

The office of metropolitan and archbishop without the name.

I will come to those authors and places, where the office and jurisdiction is spoken of, though the name be not expressed.

Cyprian.

Cyprian, Lib. iv. Epist. 8, saith that he had a large province: *Habet enim Numidiam et Mauritaniam sibi cohærentes*⁵: "For it hath Numidia and Mauritania annexed unto it." And Gregory Nazianzene, in the oration that he made in the commendation of Cyprian, saith that "he did rule and govern not only the churches of Carthage or Afric, *sed et Hespericæ universæ; imo orienti fere ipsi ad finem usque meridiei et septentrionis*⁶: but of all Spain, and almost of the whole east, unto the end of the south and the north." And what was this else but to be an archbishop?

Eusebius.

Eusebius, Lib. vi. cap. 1, saith that Demetrius was bishop of the parishes of Alexandria, and of Egypt; and this Demetrius lived anno Domini 191. Eusebius testifieth there likewise that one Julianus was before him in the same room⁷.

Athanasius.

Athanasius, in an epistle that he writ de sententia Dionysii episcopi Alexand. contra Arianos, affirmeth ad Dionysium

[¹ Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. iv. cap. x. col. 1150. See before, page 155.]

[² Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. iv. 4. Tom. IX. p. 286. See before, page 147, note 10.]

[³ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1634. Vol. I. p. 11. See before, page 144.]

[⁴ Neque vero nos ignoramus quam multa sint a veteribus constituta de episcoporum, metropolitatum, et patriarcharum sedibus, idque optimo zelo, et definitis cujusque limitibus, certaque attributa auctoritate.—Th. Beza Confess. Christ. Fid. Genev. 1587. cap. v. 29. p. 142.]

[⁵ ... habet etiam Numidiam et Mauritanias duas sibi cohærentes.—Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. xlviii. p. 91.]

[⁶ ... οὐ γὰρ τῆς Καρχηδονίων προκαθέζεται μόνον ἐκκλησίας, οὐδὲ τῆς ἐξ ἐκείνου καὶ δι' ἐκείνου περιβοήτου μέχρι νῦν Ἀφρικῆς, ἀλλὰ καὶ πάσης τῆς ἐσπερίου, σχεδὸν δὲ καὶ τῆς ἐώας αὐτῆς, νοτίου τε καὶ βορείου λήξεως, ἐφ' ὅσα ἐκείνος ἦλθε τῷ θάύματι.—Gregor. Naz. Op. Par. 1778-1840. Orat. xxiv. 12. Tom. I. p. 445. It appears that there was a Cyprian of Antioch; and Gregory seems to have confused the two.]

[⁷ Δέκατον μὲν γὰρ ἐπέιχε Σεβήρως τῆς βασιλείας ἔτος ἡγήετο δὲ Ἀλεξανδρείας καὶ τῆς λοιπῆς Αἰγύπτου Λαῖτος τῶν δὲ αὐτόθι παροικιῶν τὴν ἐπισκοπὴν νεωστὶ τότε μετὰ Ἰουλιανὸν Δημήτριος ὑπειλήφει.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. vi. cap. ii. p. 164.]

*Alexandriæ episcopum curam etiam ecclesiarum in Pentapoli superioris Libyæ pertinuisse*⁸: “that unto Dionysius bishop of Alexandria the care of the churches in Pentapolis of the higher Libya pertained.” And it is manifest in the same epistle, that these churches had their bishop besides. For Eusebius, Lib. vii. cap. 26, writeth that Basilides was bishop of the parishes of Pentapolis while Dionysius lived⁹; so that it is evident that Dionysius was an archbishop. And this is that Dionysius that is called Alexandrinus, whose works be extant, and is one of the most ancient writers. The same Eusebius saith that Gregory did govern the churches throughout Pontus¹⁰.

The name of archbishop and metropolitan.

Euseb.

Sozomen, Lib. vii. cap. 19, saith that, “though there be many cities in Scythia, yet they have but one bishop¹¹.”

Sozom.

Theodoret, Lib. iv. cap. 11, testifieth that “Amphilochius, to whom the metropolitan city of Lycaonia was committed to be governed, did also govern that whole country, and did drive from thence the heresy of the Messalians.” And in the same chapter we read that Letoius, governor of the churches of Militia, burned monasteries infected with that heresy¹²; which declareth that bishops had then great authority in government.

Theodoret.

Aurelius, bishop of Carthage, in the council of Afric, said that he had the oversight and care of many churches¹³.

Cone. Afric. in can. 55, Græco.

[⁸ Ἐν Πενταπόλει τῆς ἄνω Λιβύης τηνικαυτά τινες τῶν ἐπισκόπων ἐφρόνησαν τὰ Σαβελλίου... τοῦτο μαθὼν Διονύσιος, αὐτὸς γὰρ εἶχε τὴν μέριμναν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν ἐκείνων, πέμπει κ. τ. λ.—Athanas. Op. Par. 1698. Epist. de Sentent. Dionys. 5. Tom. I. p. 246.]

[⁹ Ἐπὶ τούτοις καὶ Βασιλείδῃ τῶν κατὰ Πεντάπολιν παροικίων ἐπισκόπων γράφων [Διονύσιος], φησὶν αὐτὸν εἰς τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐξήγησιν πεποιῆσθαι τοῦ Ἐκκλησιαστοῦ.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. vii. cap. xxvi. p. 226.]

[¹⁰ ... ὧν ἐπισήμους μάλιστα ἐγνωμεν Θεόδωρον, ὃς ἦν αὐτὸς οὗτος ὁ καθ' ἡμᾶς ἐπισκόπων διαβόητος Γρηγόριος· τὸν τε αὐτοῦ ἀδελφὸν Ἀθηνόδωρον... τοσαύτην ἀπηνέγκαντο περὶ τὰ θεῖα λόγια βελτίωσιν, ὥς ἔτι νέους ἄμφω ἐπισκοπῆς τῶν κατὰ Πόντον ἐκκλησιῶν ἀξιοθῆναι.—Id. ibid. Lib. vi. cap. xxx. p. 187.]

[¹¹ ... ἀμέλει Σκύθαι πολλὰ πόλεις ὄντες, ἕνα πάντες ἐπίσκοπον ἔχουσιν.—Soz. in eod. Lib. vii. cap. xix. p. 595.]

[¹² Λητούσιος μὲν οὖν, ὁ τῶν Μελετινῶν ἐκκλησίαν ἰθύνας, ἀνὴρ ζήλῳ θεῷ κοσμοῦμενος, πολλὰ τῆς νόσου ταύτης σπᾶσαντα θεασάμενος μοναστήρια, μᾶλλον δὲ σπήλαια ληστρικὰ, ἐνέπρησε ταῦτα, καὶ τοὺς λύκους ἐκ τῆς ποιμνῆς ἐξήλασεν. ὡσαύτως δὲ καὶ ὁ πανεύφημος Ἀμφιλόχιος, τὴν Λυκαόνων μητρόπολιν νέμειν πεπιστευμένος, καὶ ἅπαν ἰθύνων τὸ ἔθνος, ἐπισκίψασαν αὐτόσε τὴν λύμην ταύτην μαθὼν, ἐξυνέστησε πάλιν, καὶ τὰ ὑπ' αὐτοῦ νεμόμενα τῆς λώβης ἐκείνης ἡλευθέρωσε ποίμνιον.—Theod. in eod. Lib. iv. cap. xi. pp. 163, 4.]

[¹³ Ἀὐρηλίος ἐπίσκοπος εἶπεν... ἐπειδὴ οἶδατε πολλῶν ἐκκλησιῶν καὶ χειροτονιῶν φροστίδα με βαστάζειν.—Cod. Canon. Eccles. Afric. can. 55. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. 1078, 9.]

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

But what need I labour so much in a matter that cannot be unknown to any that is of any reading? This therefore shall suffice both for the name and office of an archbishop and metropolitan, &c., against the unlearned distinction that you have used in answering St Ambrose¹.

Chapter ii. The Twenty-eighth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 66, Sect. 5.

Sozomenus, likewise, Lib. ii. of his ecclesiastical history, cap. 8, calleth Simeon archbishop of Seleucia², and Basil the great metropolitan of Cappadocia, Lib. iii. cap. 16.³

T. C. Page 71, Sect. ult.

"Basil," you say, "the great metropolitan of Cappadocia." I have shewed what the word metropolitan signifieth, and how there was not then such a metropolitan as we have now, and as the Admonition speaketh against. You play as he which is noted as none of the wisest among⁴ the merchants, which thought that every ship that approached the haven was his ship. For so you think that, wheresoever you read metropolitan or archbishop, forthwith you think there is your metropolitan, or your archbishop, where as it shall appear that, besides the name, they are no more like than a bishop with us is like a minister.

JO. WHITGIFT.

What this word "metropolitan" signifieth, what office and jurisdiction he had, is before sufficiently declared, and may more at large appear in the Constitutions of Justinian⁵; likewise, whether our metropolitans in office anything at all

[¹ Cartwright considers that, "for this great shew the A. bringeth into the stage, they are scarce worth the looking on." He will not allow any earlier authority than that of Epiphanius, "the first of ancient writers that gave this name place in his writings." He maintains, therefore, that it was not "from the times of the apostles;" and concludes: "So we see that, of all the testimonies the Answ. hath mustered, there is not one that hath stricken one stroke, in the quarrel of that antiquity of the name of archbishop."—Sec. Repl. pp. 494, 5.]

[² ... και διαβάλλουσι... Συμεώνην τὸν τότε ἀρχιεπίσκοπον Σελευκείας καὶ Κτησιφώντος, κ.τ.λ.—Soz. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. II. cap. ix. p. 371.]

[³ ... ἀμέλει τοι καὶ Βασίλειος, ὁ τὴν Καππαδοκῶν μητρόπολιν μετὰ ταῦτα ἐπισκοπήσας, κ.τ.λ.—Id. ibid. Lib. III. cap. xvi. pp. 427, 8.]

[⁴ Amongst, Repl. I and 2.]

[⁵ Corp. Jur. Civil. Amst. 1663. Auth. Coll. I. Tit. vi. Novell. vi. capp. 2, 3, 8, Epil.; Auth. Coll. IX. Tit. vi. Novell. cxxiii. capp. 3, 10, 22, Tom. II. pp. 13, &c., 169, 70, 73.]

differ from them. Surely, he that shall well consider your unapt answers and your utopical jests, may think that you wear the livery of those “merchants” you talk of, and may very well sail in their ships.

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

Chapter ii. The Twenty-ninth Division.

T. C. Page 72, Sect. 1.

I cannot tell whether you would abuse your reader here with the fallation of the accent, because this word “great” is so placed between Basil and metropolitan that it may be as well referred to the metropolitan as to Basil, and so, you having put no comma, it seemeth you had as lief have your reader read, “great metropolitan” as “great Basil.” But, that the simpler sort be not deceived thereby, it is not out of the way to let the reader Soz. vi. Lib. c. 16. understand what a great metropolitan this was; which appeared, for that, when he was threatened by the magistrate confiscation of his goods, answered that he was not afraid of the threatenings, and that all his goods were “a very few books and an old gown⁶.” Such were then those metropolitans, under whose shadows M. Doctor goeth about to shroud all this pomp and princely magnificence of archbishops⁷.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You search very narrowly when you miss not a “comma,” but you know what nugator signifieth⁸. All men of learning can tell that Basil is in common speech called “Basil the great.” And yet, if he were called “great metropolitan,” the title might very well agree unto him; for he had large and ample jurisdiction, being bishop of Cappadocia; as Athanasius doth also witness in his epistle written to Palladius⁹.

The contention is for the name and the office, not for the riches; although I think that there both are and have¹⁰ been bishops in England as poor as Basil, if they had been taken so soon after they were placed in their bishoprics as Basil was now at this time.

[⁶ ... εἶγε οὐσίαν μὲν οὐκ ἔχω, ῥάκως τε καὶ βιβλία ὀλίγα.—Soz. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. vi. cap. xvi. p. 535.]

[⁷ Of our archbishops, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ “... he might know that, although a comma be but a little prick, yet it oft maketh a great matter.”—Sec. Repl. p. 496.]

[⁹ ... δοξαζέτωσαν τὸν Κύριον τὸν δεδωκότα τῇ Καππαδοκίᾳ τοιοῦτον ἐπίσκοπον, κ.τ.λ.—Athanas. Op. Par. 1698. Ad Pallad. Presb. Epist. Tom. I. Pars II. p. 957.]

[¹⁰ Hath, Def. B.]

Chapter ii. The Thirtieth Division.

T. C. Page 72, Sect. 2, 3, 4.

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

An unadvised
answer.

As for Simeon, archbishop of Seleucia, I will not deny but at that time was the name of archbishops. For then Satan had made, through the titles of archbishops, primates, and patriarchs¹, as it were three stairs, whereby antichrist might climb up into his cursed seat, notwithstanding there wanted not good decrees of godly councils which did strike at these proud names, and went about to keep them down. But the swelling waters of the ambition of divers could not by any banks be kept in, which, having once broken out in certain places, afterwards covered almost the face of the whole earth.

This endeavour of godly men may appear in the council of Carthage, which decreed that the bishop of the first seat should not be called ^{Conc. Carth. cap. 39.} ἐξαρχον τῶν ἱερέων ἢ ἄκρον ἱερέα ἢ τοιοῦτόν τι πότε², that is, "either the chief of the priests, or the high priest, or any such thing;" by which words "any such thing" he shutteth out the name of archbishop, and all such haughty titles.

The same decree also was made in the African council³; ^{Conc. Tom. i. cap. 6.} and, if you say that it was made against the pope of Rome, or to forbid that any man should be called archbishop, shew me where there was either bishop of Rome, or any other that ever made any such title or challenge to be the general bishop of all at that time, when this council of Carthage was holden, when as the first of those which did make any such challenge was the bishop of Constantinople, which, notwithstanding, challenged not the preeminence first over all, but that he might ordain bishops of Asia, Pontus, Thracia, which were before appointed by their synods; and this was in the council of Chalcedon⁴, which was long after that council of Carthage before remembered.

An untruth.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is⁵ before sufficiently declared that these names and offices were allowed and confirmed by the council of Nice⁶, and therefore not brought in by Satan. Moreover this Simeon, archbishop of Seleucia, lived, as it may appear by most chronicles, about the time of the council of Nice, and was martyred by Sapoires the king of Persia.

[¹ Of archbishop, primate, patriarch, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² "Ὡστε τὸν τῆς πρώτης καθέδρας ἐπίσκοπον μὴ λέγεσθαι ἐξαρχον κ. τ. λ. τοιούτοτρόπον τίποτε.—Cod. Canon. Eccles. Afric. can. 39. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 1070.]

[³ Concil. Afric. cap. 6. in Crabb. Concil. Col. Agrip. 1551. Tom. I. p. 503.]

[⁴ "... καὶ ὥστε τοὺς τῆς Ποντικῆς, καὶ τῆς Ἀσιανῆς, καὶ τῆς Θρακικῆς διοικήσεως μητροπολίτας μόνους, ἔτι δὲ καὶ τοὺς ἐν τοῖς βαρβαρικοῖς ἐπισκόπους τῶν προεξημεμένων διοικήσεων χειροτονεῖσθαι ὑπὸ τοῦ προεξημεμένου ἀγιοτάτου θρόνου τῆς κατὰ Κωνσταντινουπόλιν ἀγιοτάτης ἐκκλησίας.—Concil. Calched. Act. xvi. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Tom. IV. col. 798. Conf. col. 818.]

[⁵ If this, Def. B.]

[⁶ See before, pages 137, 44, &c.]

Which peradventure if you had understood, you would not have burst out into this heat of words; for then might you have made the same answer to Ambrose his authority which was long after him, and so kept secret your own fond device.

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

The council of Carthage and also of Afric was at that time, wherein the bishop of Rome, by his legates, did claim the right of hearing of appeals, from whomsoever they were made, and for his purpose alleged a counterfeited canon of the council of Nice. Wherefore it is most certain, that then the bishop of Rome began at the least to claim the superiority over all churches, and to take upon him as it were the name of universal bishop; and therefore this canon is made against him.

And that this is true, the epistle of the council of Afric written to Celestinus, then bishop of Rome, declareth. For, after that they have desired him that he would admit no such appeals, nor absolve such as they should excommunicate, because that was to do against the decrees of the council of Nice, and to abridge them of their jurisdiction and liberty; they add and say :

“Both because this privilege hath been taken from the church of Afric by no constitution of the fathers, and also the decrees of the council of Nice hath committed both the inferior clerks and the bishops themselves unto their metropolitans; for it was discreetly and rightly considered that all matters are to be determined in the places where they began, and that no province can lack the grace of the Holy Ghost, whereby the priest of Christ may be able both wisely to see, and also constantly to maintain the right; especially for that it is lawful for every man that shall mislike the discretion of the judges to appeal either to particular councils within the same province, or else to an universal council; unless perchance some man will think that God is able to inspire the trial of justice into one man alone, and will not inspire the same into a great number of priests meeting together in council. And how may such beyond-sea judgment be thought good, whereunto the persons of the witnesses which in trial of truth are thought necessary, either for that they be women, or for the infirmity of their age, or for many other incident lets, cannot be brought? Now that any should be sent abroad as it were from your holiness’ side, we find it not decreed in any council.”

The name of arch-bishop and metropolitan.

And a little after : “ And send you not any your clerks hither to execute justice at any man’s request; lest we seem to bring the smoky puff of the world into the church of Christ. &c.”

Whereby it is plain that they only prohibit that title of universality and of general jurisdiction that the bishop of Rome now claimed, and at that time began to claim, over all churches, and not the names of superiority due unto any in their own province. For that prerogative of jurisdiction over bishops and other ministers they acknowledge to be due to the metropolitan; as it is evident in the words of that same epistle which I have recited.

The name of arch-primate allowed in the council of Carthage.

Moreover, it is manifest that this name “archbishop” was then used, and after that time continued and not disallowed by any; as it may appear by that which hath been hitherto written. And this name “primate” (which is as haughty as the name of archbishop) is allowed even in that council of Carthage, as may appear in the 13. 17. and 23. canons, as it is in the Greek copy². Wherefore, in my opinion, M. Fox doth aptly decide this controversy, in that learned treatise of his first tome, where he, speaking of this same council and of this canon which you have recited (for I suppose you did borrow it there), signifieth in effect that neither the name of “primate, archbishop, or metropolitan,” is by that canon prohibited, but rather these ambitious titles of “universal bishop, prince of all priests, head of all priests,” and such like³. Which names seem to derogate authority both of jurisdiction and office from all other priests; and therefore a little after he saith: “Thus then these titles above recited, as bishop, metropolitan, bishop of the first seat, primate, patriarch, archbishop, that is to mean, chief bishop or head bishop to other bishops of his province, we deny not but were then in old time applied, and might be applied to the bishop of Rome; like as the same also were applied to other patriarchs in other chief cities and provinces⁴.” And in the same place, after he hath declared this title (summus orbis pontifex), as it is now used in Rome, to be unheard of in the primitive time of the church, that is five hundred years after Christ, he saith: “The like is to be affirmed also of other presumptuous titles of like ambition, as, ‘the head of the universal church,’ ‘the vicar of Christ in earth,’ ‘prince of priests,’ with such like, which be all new-found terms, &c.⁵;” so that it is plain that these general titles of universal jurisdiction over all, and not the particular names of superiority over several churches, is by this council forbidden.

M. Fox.

[¹ Μη οὖν οἱ ἐν τῇ ἰδίᾳ ἐπαρχίᾳ ἀπὸ τῆς κοινωνίας ἀναρτηθέντες, παρὰ τῆς σῆς ἀγιοσύνης σπουδαίως καὶ καθὼς μὴ χρῆ φανῶσιν ἀποκαθιστάμενοι τῇ κοινωνίᾳ. καὶ τῶν πρεσβυτέρων δὲ ὁμοίως, καὶ τῶν ἐπομένων κληρικῶν τὰς ἀναιδεῖς ἀποφυγὰς, ὡς ἔστι σου ἄξιον, ἀποδιώξει ἡ ἀγιοσύνη ἢ σὴ' ἐπειδὴ καὶ οὐ διὰ τινος ὕρου τῶν πατέρων τοῦτο ἀπηγόρευται τῇ ἐν Ἀφρικῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, καὶ τὰ ψηφίσματα τῆς ἐν Νικαίᾳ συνόδου, εἴτε κληρικοὺς τοῦ κατωτέρου βαθμοῦ, εἴτε αὐτοὺς τοὺς ἐπισκόπους τοῖς ἰδίοις μητροπολίταις φανερώτατα κατέπεμψαν. συνετὼς γὰρ καὶ δικαίως συνείδεν, ἅτινα δὴποτε πράγματα ἀναφύωσι, ταῦτα ἐν τοῖς ἰδίοις ὀφείλειν περατοῦσθαι τόποις· οὔτε γὰρ μιᾶ καὶ ἐκάστη προνοία ἐλογίσαντο ἐλλείπειν τὴν χάριν τοῦ ἁγίου Πνεύματος, δι' ἧς ἡ δικαιοσύνη ἀπὸ τῶν τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἱερέων καὶ ὁράται φρονίμως, καὶ κατέχεται σταθερώς· μάλιστα, ὅτι ἐνὶ καὶ ἐκάστῳ συγκεχώρηται, ἐὰν περὶ τῆς δίκης τῶν διαγνωστῶν προίσταται αὐτῷ πρὸς τὰς συνόδους τῆς ἰδίας ἐπαρχίας, ἢ ἔτι μὴν εἰς οἰκουμένην συνόδον ἐκκαλέσασθαι· εἰ μὴ ἄρα τίς ἐστιν, ὅστις πιστεύσει, ἐνὶ ὧτινιδὴποτε δύνασθαι τὸν Θεὸν ἡμῶν ἐμπνεῦσαι τὴν δικαιοσύνην, τοῖς δὲ ἀναριθμήτοις εἰς σύνοδον συνηθροισμένοις ἱερεῦσιν ἀρνεῖσθαι. πῶς δὲ αὕτη ἡ περαματικὴ κρίσις βεβαία ἐσται, πρὸς ἣν τῶν μαρτύρων τὰ ἀναγκαῖα πρόσωπα, ἢ διὰ τὴν τῆς φύσεως, ἢ διὰ τὴν τοῦ γήρως ἀσθένειαν, ἢ πολλοῖς ἄλλοις ἐμποδισμοῖς ἐνεχθῆναι οὐ δύναται; περὶ γὰρ τοῦ τινὰς ὥσανεῖ ἐκ τοῦ πλευροῦ τῆς σῆς ἀγιοσύνης πέμπεσθαι, οὐδεμιᾶ τῶν πατέρων συνόδῳ ὀρισθὲν εὐρίσκομεν...ἐκβιβαστὰς τοίνυν κληρικοὺς ἡμῶν [αἱ. ὑμῶν], τινῶν αἰτούντων, μὴ θέλετε ἀποστέλλειν, μήτε παραχωρεῖν, ἵνα τὸν καπνώδη τύφον τοῦ κόσμου δόξωμεν εἰσάγειν τῇ τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἐκκλησίᾳ, κ. τ. λ.—Cod. Canon. Eccles. Afric. Epist. ad Pap. Cælest. 138. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Pap. 1671-2. Tom. II. cols. 1147, 60.]

[² Ibid. cans. 13, 17, 23. cols. 1055, 8, 62.]

This farther appeareth in the fifth council of Constantinople, where John, not being content with the name of patriarch of Constantinople, would needs have it ratified by the council that he should be called œcumenicus patriarcha, that is, “universal patriarch⁶.” Against which title, not of “patriarch,” but of “universal patriarch,” both Pelagius and Gregory, at that time bishops of Rome, the one succeeding the other, did earnestly write. And this is the meaning of that canon.

Ignatius, immediately after the apostles’ time, calleth a bishop *principem sacerdotum*⁷: “the prince of priests,” or chief priest; and so doth Ambrose in the fourth *ad Ephesios*⁸.

Conc. Constantin. 5, alias the 2.

Ignatius epist. ad Smyrn. Ambrose in 4. Eph.

[³ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 12.]

[⁴ Id. ibid. p. 13; where the bishop of the first see, that is to say chief bishop, and were in the old.]

[⁵ Id. ibid.; where which all be.]

[⁶ John had frequently this title given him in the council. See Constant. Concil. sub Menna, in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Act. v. Tom. V. col. 161. Conf. col. 185.]

[⁷ ... τίμα μὲν τὸν Θεόν, ... ἐπίσκοπον δὲ ὡς ἀρχιερέα.—Ignat. Interp. Epist. ad Smyrn. 9. in Coteler. Patr. Apostol. Amst. 1724. Vol. II. p. 87.]

[⁸ Nam in episcopo omnes ordines sunt; quia primus sacerdos est, hoc est,

The name
of archbishop and metropolitan.

But this they do not attribute to any one as having universal authority over all, but to every bishop in respect of such as be under him.

Distinct. 99.

Touching "the bishop of Constantinople," you are deceived very much, and declare in him the same unskilfulness that you have done in the other. For it is evident that he required this name and title of "universal patriarch" ambitiously, as being desirous to be superior to all the patriarchs in the world. This to be true is manifest by the decree of Pelagius, *Distinct. 99, Canon Nullus*¹; and by the epistles of Gregory², written purposely of that matter. Neither do I read in any approved author to the contrary.

Conc. Tom. II.

Again, you are deceived greatly in the council. For, though the bishop of Constantinople did challenge in the council of Chalcedon the right of ordering metropolitans in those places, yet doth he not in that council challenge the title of universal patriarch, which notwithstanding was offered to the bishop of Rome in that council of Chalcedon, but first given to the patriarch of Constantinople in the second council of Constantinople, or, as it is termed in the book of councils, the fifth, because it was the fifth general council, as it may appear in the same council. Moreover, whereas you say that "the bishop of Constantinople required that he might ordain bishops in Asia, &c.," if you mark the words diligently, you shall perceive that he required therein nothing but according to the sixth canon of the council of Nice, which is also there alleged for that purpose; but I have shewed before how the bishop of Rome made this challenge of universality in effect, and in deed, even in that council of Carthage, where this canon by you alleged is, and therefore I need not stand any longer upon this point³.

princeps est sacerdotum, &c.—Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Ephes. cap. iv. vv. 11, 12. Tom. II. Append. col. 241.]

[¹ Nullus patriarcharum universalitatis vocabulo unquam utatur: quia si unus patriarcha universalis dicitur, patriarcharum nomen cæteris derogatur.—Pelag. II. in Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Prim. Pars, Dist. xcix. can. 4. col. 479.]

[² Gregor. ibid. can. 5. cols. 479, 80. Conf. Op. Par. 1705. Epist. Lib. viii. Indict. I. Ad Eulog. Episc. Epist. xxx., Lib. v. Indict. xiii. Ad Johan. Episc. Epist. xviii. Tom. II. cols. 919, 742, 3.]

[³ Cartwright makes a long rejoinder to this division, accusing Whitgift of having borrowed from Pighius, and of adducing arguments "partly vain and partly false."—Sec. Repl. pp. 496, &c.]

Chapter ii. The Thirty-first Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 66, Sect. 6, 7, 8; and Page 67, Sect. 1, 2.

Damasus calleth Stephen an archdeacon⁵.

Hierome in his epistle ad Evagrium hath this name archdeacon⁶.

Arch-deacons⁷.

Sextus in his decrees saith that Laurence the martyr was an archdeacon⁷.

Sozomenus, Lib. vii. cap. 19, maketh mention of an archdeacon reading the scriptures⁸.

Socrates in the seventh book of his ecclesiastical history speaketh of one Timothy an archdeacon⁹.

T. C. Page 72, Sect. 5, 6, 7.

For to prove the lawfulness of the name of an archdeacon, the antiquity, the necessity of it, the testimonies of four are brought, which neither speak of their lawfulness nor of their necessity, and they say not indeed so much as, God give them; and two of these witnesses are popes, whereof the first and best ordained that, if the metropolitan did not fetch his pall at the apostolic see of Rome within three months after he be¹⁰ consecrated, that then he should lose his dignity; as Gratian witnesseth in the decrees that he ascribeth unto Damasus¹¹.

T. C. faileth in his account, and telleth but four, for five.

In what part of Gratian?

I doubt not therefore that this is but a forger upon whom you would father the archdeacon. For that Damasus, in whose place you put this forger, lived anno 387; at what time the see of Rome had no such tyranny as this and other things which are fathered of him do pretend. And, if

[⁴ This word is not in Answ.]

[⁵ Hic omnem potestatem ecclesiæ dedit archidiacono suo Stephano, dum ad passionem pergeret.—Ex Libr. Pont. Damas. in Vit. Lucii, in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 719.]

[⁶ ... diaconi eligant de se, quem industrium noverint, et archidiaconum vocent.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 303.]

[⁷ Et post passionem beati Sixti die tertio, passi sunt Laurentius ejus archidiaconus, &c.—Ex Libr. Pont. Damas. in Vit. Sixti Papæ II. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Tom. I. col. 817. This, however, is merely an extract from the Liber Pontificalis, untruly ascribed to Damasus.]

[⁸ Soz. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. VII. cap. xix. p. 596. See below, page 176, note 2.]

[⁹ ... ἐπιμάχων δὲ γενομένων καὶ ἐνταῦθα τῆς ἐπισκοπῆς, οἱ μὲν ἐξήτουν ἐνθρονισθῆναι Τιμόθεον ἀρχιδιάκονον κ.τ.λ.—Socr. in cod. Lib. VII. cap. vii. p. 280.]

[¹⁰ Were, Repl. 2.]

[¹¹ ... placuit, ut quisquis metropolitanus ultra tres menses consecrationis suæ ad fidem suam exponendam, palliumque suscipiendum ad apostolicam sedem non miserit, commissa sibi careat dignitate, &c.—Pelag. in Corp. Jur. Canon. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Prim. Pars, Dist. c. can. I. col. 481. See not, in loc., where we are told that some authors ascribe this decree to Damasus.]

Arch-
deacons.

This is untrue; for Sixtus is more ancient.

this be enough to prove archdeacons, I can with better witness prove subdeacons, acoluthes, exorcists, lectores¹, ostiarios; these doth Eusebius make mention of², an ancienter writer than any you bring; and, out of Ruffine³, Theodoret⁴, Sozomene⁵, Socrates⁶, &c., monks almost in every page; and hereupon it is more lawful for me to conclude that monks, subdeacons, exorcists, acoluthes, ostiarii, lectores, are necessary ecclesiastical orders in the church, as you conclude the necessity of the archdeacon.

What have you else but conjectures?

I perceive you care not whether the archdeacon fall or no, that you bestow so little cost of him, and leave him so nakedly. And, if I would be but half so bold in conjectures and divinations as you are, I could say that this slight⁷ handling of the archdeacon, and sweating so much about the archbishop, is thereupon that you would be loth to come from being dean to be an archdeacon, and you live in some hope of being archbishop; but I will not enter so far. And surely, for anything that I see, you might have trussed up the archbishop as short as you do the archdeacon; for they stand upon one pin, and those reasons which establish the one establish the other. Whereupon also cometh to pass that all those reasons which were before alleged against the archbishop may be drawn against the archdeacon.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The untoward dealing of the Replier, and his un-sufficient
answer.

My purpose in that place is (as you might have seen if you would) to prove that the “names of archbishops, archdeacon, &c.” be not “antichristian names, that is, names invented by antichrist, but most ancient;” for those be my very words; and, as I have proved that to be most true in metropolitans and archbishops, by shewing that they were in the church before the pope was antichrist, so I do the like of archdeacons. And, where I have brought in five witnesses, you say I have brought in “four.” Damasus, Hierome, Sixtus, Sozomen, and Socrates, be in number five; and of these five you have answered only two, and that after your usual manner, by rejecting the authors⁸. What is falsely attributed to Damasus in other matters is no answer to this, that he reporteth of archdeacons; which also the third Century allegeth as true⁹. And, though he were bishop of Rome, yet was he a virtuous, learned, and godly bishop. So was Sixtus in like manner, who lived bishop of Rome anno 265. So that Damasus was neither the first

[¹ Lectors, Def. A. and B.]

[² Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. vi. cap. xliii. p. 198.]

[³ Hist. Eccles. Par. Lib. xi. capp. vi. viii. foll. 121. 2, 2.]

[⁴ Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. iv. capp. xxvi. xxvii. xxviii. pp. 189, &c.]

[⁵ Soz. in cod. Lib. i. cap. xii. pp. 340, &c.]

[⁶ Socr. in cod. Lib. iv. cap. xxiii. pp. 190, &c.] [⁷ Sleight, Edit. t.]

[⁸ “Affording you ‘four witnesses,’ I allowed you one too many, two of them being counterfeit.”—Sec. Repl. p. 501.]

[⁹ Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. iii. cap. vii. col. 150.]

nor the best. For Sixtus was martyred for the gospel; so was not Damasus. They speak as much for archdeacons as I require, that is, that "their names were not invented by anti-christ;" and, if there were then no such "tyranny in the church of Rome," as you here mislike, and yet this name in that church, it is not like to be a tyrannical name.

Arch-
deacons.

But I marvel you will deal so barely in this matter, knowing that Hierome, who lived in Damasus his time, hath this name archdeacon oftener than twice or thrice. Without doubt you do not well consider what you write.

This answer of yours was never as yet approved of any learned man. For what if "Eusebius make mention of sub-deacons, acoluthes, &c." which were peradventure profitable offices in the church at that time, doth it therefore follow that it is unlawful to have archdeacons? I conclude no necessity of the archdeacon, but I conclude his antiquity; and, because you cannot answer that, you fall to scoffing and unseemly jesting, as your manner is, and so do you shift off three of my witnesses¹⁰.

Chapter ii. The Thirty-second Division.

T. C. Page 72, line 2, and Sect. 1.

Having therefore before proved the unlawfulness of them, I will here set down the difference between those archdeacons that were in times past and those which are now, whereby it may appear they are nothing like but in name.

Soz. vii. 19.¹¹ They were no ministers; as appeareth in Sozomen: ours are.

Untruth:
no such thing ap-peareth.

JO. WHITGIFT.

What one reason have you used to prove the unlawfulness of them? If you mean such reasons as you have against archbishops, they be fully answered.

Not one word is there in the seventh book and nineteenth chapter of Sozomen, to prove that archdeacons either then "were not," or now may not be "ministers." For all that he speaketh in that chapter is this: "And this also is a strange thing in the church of Alexandria; whiles the gospels are a reading, the bishop doth not rise up; which I have

[¹⁰ "As for the ancienty of the name archdeacon, it is not shewed before almost 400. years after Christ: which times how corrupt they were, hath in part, and will after more appear."—Sec. Repl. p. 502.]

[¹¹ This marginal reference is introduced from Repl. 1 and 2.]

Arch-
deacons.

heard¹ of others. This holy book a monk that is an arch-deacon readeth there; in other places deacons; in many churches the priests only; but in principal feasts bishops²." How you can conclude that archdeacons were not then ministers by anything here spoken surely I know not. For, if you mean, because he saith that in some churches only priests did read; you can no more thereof conclude that archdeacons were then no priests, than you may that they were no deacons, or that bishops be no priests. Neither is it necessary that they should be now ministers; it is sufficient if they be deacons: yet may they be ministers, and meet it is that they should so be; and you cannot prove the contrary³.

Chapter ii. The Thirty-third Division.

T. C. Page 73, Sect. 2.

*They were tied to a certain church, and were called arch-deacon of such a congregation or church*⁴: ours are tied to none, but are called archdeacons of such a shire.

Conc. Urban. Soz. vii. Lib. cap. 19.

JO. WHITGIFT.

There is no other words in that book and chap. of Sozomen touching archdeacons, than these which I have before recited: what they make for your purpose let the reader judge. Your Urbanum Concilium is very obscure; for there is none such to be found in all the volumes of councils. But, to put you out of doubt, we have no archdeacons but such as be "tied to one church," though they have the names sometimes of the shire wherein their jurisdiction lieth⁵.

[¹ Hard, Def. A. and B.]

[² ... ξένον δὲ κἀκεῖνο παρὰ Ἀλεξανδρεῦσι τούτοις· ἀναγινωσκομένων γὰρ τῶν εὐαγγελίων, οὐκ ἐπανίσταται ὁ ἐπίσκοπος· ὃ παρ' ἄλλοις οὐτ' ἔγνω οὔτε ἀκήκοα. ταύτην δὲ τὴν ἱερὰν βίβλον ἀναγινώσκει ἐνθάδε μόνος ὁ ἀρχιδιάκονος. παρὰ δὲ ἄλλοις, διάκονοι. ἐν πολλαῖς δὲ ἐκκλησίαις, οἱ ἱερεῖς μόνοι. ἐν δὲ ἐπισήμοις ἡμέραις, ἐπίσκοποι, κ.τ.λ.—Soz. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700, Lib. vii. cap. xix. p. 596.]

[³ Cartwright asks: "Can there be plainer words to prove that the archdeacon was no minister, than those whereby Sozomen putteth difference between an arch-deacon, and an elder, making them several members?" He afterwards cites other authorities to shew "that the archdeacon was not a priest, but a deacon."—Sec. Repl. pp. 502, 3.]

[⁴ Ex Concil. Urban. II. hab. Placent. in Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Prim. Pars, Dist. lxx. can. 2. col. 348. See Vol. I. page 480, note 1. See also above, note 2.]

[⁵ "It is a simple exception against the council of Urban, that 'it is not to be found in the tome of councils', especially when I cite it but for a story witness;

Chapter ii. The Thirty-fourth Division.

Arch-
deacons.

T. C. Page 73, Sect. 3.

Jerom. to Evagr. They were chosen by all the deacons of the church where they be archdeacons⁶: ours are appointed by one man, and which is no deacon.

JO. WHITGIFT.

There can be no such custom gathered of Hierome's words in that place: only he, using an example to declare what the manner of choosing their bishop was in the church of Alexandria, saith that "they elected one from among themselves, whom they placing in an higher room called him a bishop; as if the soldiers should choose their captain, or deacons should choose one of them whom they know to be painful, and name him archdeacon." You can no more hereof conclude that it was then usual for deacons to choose their archdeacon, than you may that it was also usual for soldiers to choose their captain; neither can you hereby prove that our archdeacons are not like unto theirs (if this were true), no more than you can, that our captains are not like unto theirs, because the soldiers do not choose them. But what great matter is it if they were then chosen by deacons, and be not so now? and doth not the bishop appoint them? and is not the bishop more than a deacon?

Chapter ii. The Thirty-fifth Division.

T. C. Page 73, Sect. 4.

Conc. Nicen. can. 14. and after Ruf. 20. They were subject to the minister of the word⁷: ours are above them, and rule over them.

JO. WHITGIFT.

There is not one word of archdeacons in the fourteenth canon of the council of Nice, nor in the 20. after Ruffine; and therefore you do but abuse the reader. That which is seeing there are some councils of more weight out of that book, than some in it."— Ibid. p. 503.]

[⁶ ... presbyteri semper unum ex se electum, in excelsiori gradu collocatum, episcopum nominabant: quomodo si exercitus imperatorem faciat: aut diaconi, &c.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 803. See before, page 173, note 6.]

[⁷ Concil. Nic. can. 18 [al. 14] in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. cols. 37, 49. This is the canon meant; but, as Whitgift says, it makes no mention of archdeacons.]

in that place is spoken of deacons only, and is at this day observed in this church.

Chapter ii. The Thirty-sixth Division.

T. C. Page 73, Sect. 5.

Untruths;
for neither of them speaketh of archdeacons in those places alleged to this purpose.

It was counted to them great arrogancy, if they preferred themselves to any minister or elder of the church¹: ours will not take the best ministers of the church as their equals. If therefore archdeacons will have any benefit by the archdeacons of old time, it is meet they should content themselves with that place which they were in.

*Jerom. ad Eugr.
Aug. Quæst.
Novi et Vet.
Test. q. 101.*

JO. WHITGIFT.

No such thing is in that epistle of Hierome: only he speaketh of deacons, touching that matter, whom he also sheweth in the church of Rome to have been in certain points preferred before ministers; neither is there one word of “archdeacons” in that book of Augustine’s, but only of deacons. You must learn to make a distinction betwixt an “archdeacon” and a “deacon,” and not to make the reader believe that the authors you quote in the margent speak of “archdeacons,” when they only speak of “deacons.” My witnesses, how few soever they be, are sufficient to withstand this cowardly assault of yours, wherein there is neither strength nor truth.

Chapter ii. The Thirty-seventh Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 67, Sect. 3.

Deans.

Augustine, in his first book de Moribus Ecclesiæ Catholicæ, maketh mention of deans and their offices².

T. C. Page 73, Sect. 6.

Untruths.

As for the office of a dean, as it is used with us, it is therefore unlawful, for that he being minister hath no several charge or congregation appointed, wherein he may exercise his ministry; and for that he is ruler and as it were master of divers other ministers in his college, which likewise have no several charges of congregations; and for that (which is most intolerable) both he himself, oftentimes having a several church or benefice (as they call it), is under the colour of his deanship absent from his church, and suffereth also those that are underneath him to be likewise absent from their churches. And, whereas M. Doctor allegeth St Augustine to prove this office to be ancient, indeed the name is there found, but besides the name not one property of that dean which we have. For Augustine, speaking of the monks of those days, saith that the money which they gat with the labour of their hands they gave to their dean, which did provide them meat, and drink, and cloth³, and all things necessary for them; so that their⁴ monks should not be drawn away from their studies and meditations through the care of worldly things: so that this dean which he speaketh of was servant and steward and cater to the monks, and therefore only called dean because he was steward and cater to ten monks. Now let it be seen what Augustine's dean maketh for the dean which is theirs⁵, and what faith and trust M. Doctor useth in reciting of the old fathers.

[¹ Cæterum etiam in ecclesia Romæ, presbyteri sedent, et stant diaconi: licet paulatim increbrescentibus vitiis, inter presbyteros absente episcopo sedere diaconum viderim, et in domesticis conviviis, benedictiones presbyteris dare.—Hieron. Op. 1693-1706. Ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 803. Conf. August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Quæst. ex utroq. (Vet. Test. et Nov.) mixt. Quæst. ci. Tom. III. Append. cols. 92, 3. These Quæstiones are not reputed genuine.]

[² See below, page 180, note 1.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

All this is but your own fancies taken for principles and grounds. For, first, it is untrue that every minister must of necessity have some "several charge;" as I have declared before⁶. Secondly, it is as untrue that a dean "hath no several charge or congregation wherein to exercise his ministry." For there is no cathedral church without "a congregation and charge." The third that followeth is builded of the same grounds that these two first be, and may as well be spoken against the masterships of such colleges in the universities wherein any preachers or ministers be maintained. Which argueth that you mean the same to colleges that you do to cathedral churches, and that you would have ministers free from subjection. Last of all, that which you say is "most intolerable," you speak without any tolerable reason; for Master dean and his prebendaries do more good both in the church of England generally, and in their several churches particularly, and take more pains in one month than you and your companions (whereof some notwithstanding are content, without doing any duty at all, to enjoy prebends more than one) in one whole year. And, if either Master dean or the prebendaries neglect their duties, there be superiors and laws to reform them.

The place of Augustine proveth the name of a dean: it proveth a college and society, whereof he is dean: it argueth a superiority and government; for he saith they be called

[³ Clothe, Repl. 1.]

[⁴ The, Repl. 2.]

[⁵ Now, Repl. 2.]

[⁶ See Vol. I. pages 469, &c.]

Deans.

Aug. de Moribus Ecclesiæ.

*Decani, ideo quod sint denis præpositi*¹: “Deans, because they are set over ten:” it sheweth an office to care and provide for them, and see that they have all things necessary: it declareth daily exercise of praying and teaching; for he addeth thus: *Conveniunt autem diei tempore extremo de suis quisque habitaculis, dum adhuc jejuni sunt, ad audiendum illum patrem, et conveniunt ad singulos patres terna ad minimum hominum millia: Nam*² *etiam multo numerosiores sub uno agunt*³: “They come together at night every man from his lodging, whilst yet they are fasting, to hear that father; and they come together to every father, three thousand men at the least; for a great many more live under one. &c.”

Now, sir, if God of his singular goodness hath, to the great and unspeakable benefit of his church, moved the hearts of princes and men of wealth so to endue such places with possessions and revenues, that they, having things necessary provided for them, may bestow that time in studying, praying, preaching, and other godly exercises, which these that St Augustine speaketh of did in labouring with their hands, is Master dean’s name or office ever the worse? Howsoever it pleaseth you to term these companies that St Augustine here speaketh of, yet were they godly societies, and do very aptly set forth the utility and the antiquity of churches and colleges; the deans and masters whereof have indeed the chief and special care of all external things pertaining to them, whether it be lands, provisions, or any thing else that is necessary; and therefore the liker to “St Augustine’s dean;” and the place more aptly alleged to prove the antiquity of this name and office. If “Master Doctor” should use no more “faith in reciting the doctors,” than you do, I would he were whipped at the cross in Cheap⁴.

[¹ Opus autem suum tradunt eis quos decanos vocant, eo quod sint denis præpositi, ut neminem illorum cura sui corporis tangat, neque in cibo, neque in vestimento, &c.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. De Mor. Eccles. Cathol. Lib. I. cap. xxxi. 67. Tom. I. col. 710.]

[² Non, Def. B.]

[³ Id. ibid.; where ut minimum.]

[⁴ Cartwright rejoins that there was great difference between the deans of St Augustine’s time, and those then in the church, the former being monks, and so not clergymen, nor established in any great town, nor appointed except in order to provision for meat. He goes on: “Wherefore I will refer myself to the treatises of divers learned men, which have handled that matter; that I be not compelled here to set upon this vermin, which the Ans. raiseth again from hell, to help the office of the dean. &c.” He afterwards attacks Whitgift for a citation that he makes in another place from Beza.—Sec. Repl. pp. 504, &c.]

Chapter ii. The Thirty-eighth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 67, Sect. 4.

Hitherto antichrist had not invaded the church of Rome. But what should I trouble you with any more authorities? those that be learned may easily understand that these names, metropolitan, archbishop, archdeacon, primate, patriarch, and such like, be most ancient and approved of the eldest, best, and worthiest councils, fathers, and writers.

T. C. Page 73, Sect. 7.

And, unto the end that these testimonies might be more authentical and have some weight in them, Master Doctor addeth that hitherto antichrist⁵ had not invaded the seat of Rome. You shall have much ado to prove that antichrist had not invaded the see of Rome when your Clement, Anacleto, Anicete, and Damasus wrote; nay, it is most certain that then he had possessed it. But what is that to the purpose, although there was no one singular head appeared or lifted up, yet corruption of doctrine and of the sacraments, hurtful ceremonies, dominion and pomp of the clergy, new orders and functions of the ministry, which were the hands that pulled him, the feet which brought him, the shoulders that lifted and heaved him up into that seat, were in the church. Neither, while you do thus speak, do you seem to remember that this monster needed not nine months, but almost nine hundred years, to be framed and fashioned, or ever he could with all his parts be brought to light. And, although the lover⁶ of this antichristian building were not set up, yet, the foundations thereof being secretly and under the ground laid in the apostles' time⁷, you might easily know that in those times that you spake⁸ of the building was wonderfully advanced and grown very high. And, being a very dangerous thing to ground any order or policy of the church upon men at all, which indeed ought to have their standing upon the doctrine and orders of the apostles, I will shew what great injury M. Doctor doth to send us for our examples and patterns of government to these times which he doth direct us unto.

JO. WHITGIFT.

These be but words: the same might be also spoken of the apostles' times. For even then Paul speaking of antichrist said, Nam mysterium nunc agit iniquitatis: "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work." And St John said that there Antichrist began in the apostles' times.

2 Thess. ii.

[⁵ Christ, Def. B.]

[⁶ Lover, loover, or louver: an open place at the top of the house to let out the smoke.]

[⁷ Times, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ Speak, Repl. 1 and 2.]

1 John ii.

then began to be “many antichrists;” but doth this detract anything from the truth taught in that time? or shall we therefore refuse to take such examples of it as is convenient for our time? There is no man of learning and modesty, which will without manifest proof condemn any order, especially touching the government of the church, that was used and allowed during the time of the primitive church, which was the next 500. years after Christ; within the which time most of my authorities are contained. Neither was there any function or office brought into the church during all that time, allowed by any general council or credible writer, which was not most meet for that time, and allowable by the word of God.

I grant that antichrist was working all this time, and grew more and more; for else could there never have been so many sects and heresies from time to time spread in the church, which was the cause of so many singular and notable councils, so many profitable and necessary books, written by such learned and godly doctors, as did with might and main strive against them. Out of the which councils and fathers, as best witnesses what was done in those times, I have fetched my proofs—even out of them, I say, that did with might and main labour to keep out antichrist from the possession of the church, and therefore not to be suspected to consent to antichrist.

Antichrist worketh in England by contentious persons.

I know that those sects and heresies gave strength unto antichrist, and at the length were one special means of placing him in his throne; even as I am also persuaded that he worketh as effectually at this day by your stirs and contentions, whereby he hath and will more prevail against this church of England than by any other means whatsoever. Therefore it behoveth you to take heed how you divide the army of Christ, which should unanimiter fight against that antichrist. As for us, we must follow the examples of those good fathers, and labour accordingly, to restore unity, and to preserve it¹.

[¹ Cartwright replies that he appealed “not unto the apostles’ times only, but unto the doctrine and order established;” asks “what charter the Answ. can shew, that the first ‘500. years’ (within compass whereof he hath brought his testimonies) be just the time of the primitive church, neither more nor less;” and says that within that time several unmeet functions were brought into the church.—Sec. Repl. pp. 507, &c.]

Chapter ii. The Thirty-ninth Division.

T. C. Page 73, Sect. ult.

Eusebius out of Egesippus writeth that, “as long as the apostles lived, the church remained a pure virgin; for that, if there were any that went about to corrupt the holy rule that was preached, they did it in the dark, and as it were digging underneath the earth. But, after the death of the apostles, and that generation was past which God vouchsafed to hear the divine wisdom with their own ears, then the placing of wicked error began to come into the church³.”

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is evident in divers places of the scripture, namely, in the first epistle to the Corinthians, and the epistle to the Galatians, that there were many gross and great corruptions openly professed in the church, by divers, not only in matters, but also in doctrine, even in the apostles' time; and Eusebius himself declareth that there was one Simon mentioned Acts viii., whom he calleth “the author of all heresy,” *Lib. ii. cap. xiii.*⁴ Likewise he sheweth, Lib. iii., that Ebion, Cerinthus, and the Nicholaites, all horrible heretics, were in the apostles' time⁵. Wherefore, if this be a good reason, then is it not safe for us to follow, no, not the apostles' time.

Corruptions in the church in the apostles' time.

Euseb. Lib. ii.
cap. 13.
Idem, Lib. iii

Chapter ii. The Fortieth Division.

T. C. Page 74, Sect. 1.

Lib. Stromat. somewhat after the beginning. Clement also in a certain place, to confirm that there was corruption of doctrine immediately after the apostles' time⁶, allegeth the proverb that there are “few sons like their fathers⁷.”

[³ This marginal reference is not printed in Repl. 1.]

[³ 'Επὶ τούτοις ὁ αὐτὸς ἀνὴρ [Ἡγήσιππος] διηγούμενος τὰ κατὰ τοὺς δηλουμένους, ἐπιλέγει ὡς ἄρα μέχρι τῶν τότε χρόνων παρθένος καθαρὰ καὶ ἀδιάφθορος ἔμεινεν ἡ ἐκκλησία, ἐν ἀδίλῳ που σκότει φωλευόντων εἰσέτι τότε, τῶν, εἰ καὶ τινες ὑπῆρχον, παραφθείρειν ἐπιχειρούντων τὸν ὑγιῆ κανόνα τοῦ σωτηρίου κηρύγματος. ὡς δ' ὁ ἱερὸς τῶν ἀποστόλων χορὸς διάφορον εἰλήφει τοῦ βίου τέλος, παρεληλύθει τε ἡ γενεὰ ἐκείνη τῶν αὐταῖς ἀκοαῖς τῆς ἐνθέου σοφίας ἐπακοῦσαι κατηξιωμένων, τηνικαῦτα τῆς ἀθέου πλάνης τὴν ἀρχὴν ἐλάβανεν ἡ σύστασις, διὰ τῆς τῶν ἑτεροδιδασκάλων ἀπάτης.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. xxxii. p. 84.]

[⁴ Πάσης μὲν οὖν ἀρχηγὸν αἵρέσεως, πρῶτον γενέσθαι τὸν Σίμωνα παρειλήφαμεν.—Id. ibid. Lib. II. cap. xiii. p. 40.]

[⁵ Id. ibid. Lib. III. capp. xxvii. xxviii. xxix. pp. 79, &c.]

[⁶ Times, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ Ἄλλ' οἱ μὲν τὴν ἀληθῆ τῆς μακαρίας σώζοντες διδασκαλίας παράδοσιν, εὐθὺς

JO. WHITGIFT.

I can find no such thing in Clement¹; but the matter is not great whether he say so or no. The argument is stark naught; for, if this follow, that we may take no "example," "pattern," or testimony "of government," out of that time, because it was corrupt, then by the same reason must we not take examples of any time, no, not out of the apostles' time, because that was also corrupt, as I have said. Your arguments be passing strong: surely I marvel with what boldness you write them.

Chapter ii. The Forty-first Division.

T. C. Page 74, Sect. 2.

Socrates falsified.

And Socrates saith of the church of Rome and Alexandria, which were the most famous churches in the apostles' times, that about the year 430. the Roman and Alexandrian bishops, leaving the sacred function, were degenerate to a secular rule or dominion; whereupon we see that² it is safe for us to go to the scriptures and to the apostles' times for to fetch our government and order; and that it is very dangerous to draw from those rivers the fountains whereof are troubled and corrupted, especially when as the ways whereby they run are muddier and more fenny than is the head itself.

Lib. vii.
cap. 11.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Socr. Lib. vii.
cap. 11.

You falsify the words of Socrates; for thus he saith: "For even till that time the Novatians flourished marvellously at Rome, and had many churches, and had gathered much people. But envy took hold of them, when as the bishopric of Rome and of Alexandria now a good while was passed beyond the limits of priesthood to an outward dominion³."

ἀπὸ Πέτρου τε καὶ Ἰακώβου, Ἰωάννου τε καὶ Παύλου, τῶν ἀγίων ἀποστόλων, πᾶς παρὰ πατρὸς ἐκδεχόμενος· ὀλίγοι δὲ οἱ πατράσιν ὅμοιοι· ἦκου δὴ σὺν Θεῷ καὶ εἰς ἡμᾶς τὰ προγονικὰ ἐκεῖνα καὶ ἀποστολικά καταθησόμενοι σπέρματα.—Clement. Alex. Op. Oxon. 1715. Stromat. Lib. i. 1. Tom. I. pp. 322, 3.]

[¹ Cartwright replies that Clement's place may easily be found.—Sec. Repl. p. 511.]

[² See how that, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ ... ἄχρι γὰρ τούτου, Ναυατιανοὶ μεγάλως ἐπὶ τῆς Ῥώμης ἠνθησαν, ἐκκλησίας πλείστας ἔχοντες, καὶ λαὸν πολὺν συναθροίζοντες· ἀλλ' ὁ φθόνος καὶ τούτων ἦν· αὐτοὶ τῆς Ῥωμαίων ἐπισκοπῆς ὁμοίως τῇ Ἀλεξανδρείᾳ πέρα τῆς ἱερωσύνης ἐπὶ δυναστείαν ἤδη πάλαι προελθούσης. καὶ διατοῦτο, οὐδὲ τοὺς ὁμοφρονοῦντας οἱ ἐπίσκοποι ἐπ' ἀδείας συνάγεσθαι συνεχώρησαν· ἀλλὰ πάντα λαβόντες αὐτῶν, μόνον διὰ τὴν ὁμοφροσύνην ἐπαινοῦσιν αὐτούς. οὐ μὴν οἱ ἐν

He saith not, "leaving the sacred function, were degenerate to a secular rule and dominion;" as you translate it.

But why doth Socrates burst out into this reprehension of them? even because they expelled the Novatian heretics, of whom Socrates was a fautor¹; as it may appear in Nicephorus⁵; wherefore he doth in that place affectionately⁶ and unjustly reprove both the bishop of Rome, and Alexandria, for stoutly resisting those heretics and expelling them from their churches, especially they now increasing to so great a multitude, as it may seem by Socrates' words they did. And, although the words of Socrates which I have already recited justify this to be true, yet doth his words following declare the same more evidently. For he commendeth the bishop of Constantinople because he friendly entertained the Novatians, and suffered them quietly to remain within the city; and yet it is certain that the bishop of Constantinople had as large authority as the bishop of Alexandria; wherefore Socrates in this point is no more to be believed against those bishops, than you are against the bishops in this church, whose authority you malign upon the like occasion.

Socrates a favourer of the Novatians.

Niceph. Lib. vi. cap. 37, & Lib. ix. 13.

Socrates' doings agreeable to our time.

Chapter ii. The Forty-second Division.

T. C. Page 74, Sect. 3, 4.

And, although M. Doctor hath brought neither scripture, nor reason, nor council wherein there is either name of archbishop or archdeacon, or proved that there may be; and although he shew not so much as the name of them four hundred years after our Saviour Christ; and although where he sheweth them they be either by counterfeit authors, or without any word of approbation of good authors; yet, as though he had shewed all and proved all, having shewed nothing nor proved nothing, he clappeth the hands to himself, and putteth the crown upon his own head, saying that "those that be learned may easily understand that the names, archbishop, archdeacon, primate, patriarch, be most ancient, and approved of

Where is truth become?

Would you have better approbation than decrees for their authority, and continual practice?

Κωνσταντίνου πόλει τούτο πεπόνθασιν· ἀλλὰ μετὰ τοῦ στέργειν αὐτοὺς, καὶ ἔνδον πόλεως συνάγειν εἶσαν.—Socr. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. vii. cap. xi. pp. 283, 4.]

[⁴ "... a proof of the light esteem of authors which make against him."—Sec. Repl. p. 511.]

[⁵ ... Σωκράτης ὁ ἐκ Ναυάτου τὰ ἐκκλησιαστικά καὶ αὐτὸς συντάττων, κ. τ. λ.—Niceph. Call. Eccles. Hist. Lut. Par. 1630. Lib. vi. cap. xxxvii. Tom. I. p. 436. Conf. Lib. ix. cap. xiii. p. 700.]

[⁶ Affectionately: warmly, or partially.]

the eldest, best, worthiest councils, fathers, writers ;” and, a little afterward, that they are “unlearned and ignorant” which say otherwise.

Vanity.

Here is a victory blown with a great and sounding trumpet, that might have been piped with an oaten straw ; and, if it should be replied again, that M. Doctor hath declared in this little learning, little reading, and less judgment, there might grow controversies without all fruit.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If I were not acquainted with this spirit, it would make me muse at such evident and manifest untruths, joined with so profane jests and taunts. If I had alleged no more authorities but only the council of Nice, it had been sufficient to have disproved this so bold assertion of yours. But, seeing I have alleged other testimonies also, which evidently prove my purpose, I must needs think you not to be a man that greatly careth for your own credit ; but, if you think they are few, and therefore account them for none, I have now, I trust, in this chapter, 25. division, supplied their want, and made up the number¹.

What “scriptures” I have appeareth afterwards. It is sufficient if I find there the office of an archbishop, as I doubt not but I shall ; and therefore I say again, that to doubt of the antiquity of these names and offices argueth great penury of reading the ancient writers.

Chapter ii. The Forty-third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 67, Sect. 4.

And, forasmuch as the original and beginning of these names, metropolitan, archbishop, archdeacon, primate, patriarch, and such like² (such is their antiquity), cannot be found (so far as I have read), it is to be supposed they³ have their original from the apostles themselves. For, as I remember, St Augustine hath this rule in his 118. Epist. ad Januar. : “Those things that be not expressed in the scriptures⁴, and yet by tradition observed of the whole church, come either from the apostles, or from general councils ; as the observing of August.

[¹ See before, pages 157, &c.]

[² The clause from names is not in Answ.]

[³ Supposed that they, Answ.]

[⁴ Scripture, Answ.]

Easter, the celebrating of the day of the Ascension, and of the coming of the Holy Ghost, and such like⁵.”

[ And in his book *De Baptis. contra Donatistas, Lib. iv. : Quod universa tenet ecclesia, nec conciliis institutum, sed semper retentum est, non nisi auctoritate apostolica traditum rectissime creditur*⁶: “That which the whole church doth hold, not being appointed by councils, and yet is always observed, it is truly to be believed that it is no otherwise appointed than by the authority of the apostles.” But these names and offices have been always generally observed of the whole church; neither is it to be found where they were first appointed in any council; therefore no doubt the apostles appointed them: &c. ]]⁷ Very unlearned therefore and ignorant be those which so boldly affirm that these names used in the purest time of the church be antichristian.

T. C. Page 74, Sect. 4, 5.

And, by and by, in saying that the archbishop's beginning is unknown, instead of a bastard which some brought into the church that hid themselves Modesty. because they were ashamed of the child, he will make us believe that we have a new Melchisedec, without father, without mother, and whose generation is not known, and so concludeth with the place of St Augustine, as far as he remembereth, in the 118. epistle to Januarie, that the original of them is from the apostles themselves.

Here M. Doctor seemeth to seek after some glory of a good memory, as though he had not Augustine by him when he wrote this sentence; and yet he marvellously forgetteth himself, for he used this place before in his 23. page, and citeth it there precisely and absolutely; where also I have shewed how unadvisedly that sentence of Augustine is approved, and how that thereby a window is open to bring in all popery and whatsoever other corrupt opinions. That the names of lords and honour as they are used in this realm are not meet to be given to the ministers of the gospel, there hath been spoken before. This is from the matter.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This place of Augustine is of greater force and credit with those that be learned, than that it can be shifted off. I have answered whatsoever you say against it in that place, and shewed of what credit it is with some famous writers of our time, namely, with Master Zuinglius, Master Calvin, and Master Gualter¹. And surely I think no learned man doth dissent from them.

[⁵ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Inq. Januar. Lib. i. seu Epist. liv. cap. i. l. Tom. II. col. 124. See Vol. I. page 230, note 4.]

[⁶ Id. de Bapt. contr. Donatist. Lib. iv. cap. xxiv. 31. Tom. IX. col. 140.]

[⁷ The sentences between brackets are inserted from Answ. 2.]

Your jests are too usual and unseemly for a divine, especially when you abuse the scripture to make sport withal. I might have said also of you, that you "sought after some glory of a good memory," when as you used the like kind of speech in alleging of Gildas and Lombard, page 68,² but that I am not delighted with such kind of eloquence.

Pag. 68,
Sect. 4.

Chapter ii. The Forty-fourth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 65, Sect. 5.

Whether that the name of prelate of the garter, earl, county palatine, honour, high commissioner, justice of peace and quorum, being necessary offices in this commonweal, partly for the honour of the prince and realm, but especially for good⁴ government of all estates⁵ and degrees of persons, be antichristian, let those consider to whom God hath committed the sword of government: such insolent audacity against states and lawful regiment is rather to be corrected with due punishment than confuted by argument.

Civil offices given to ecclesiastical persons³.

T. C. Page 74, Sect. 6, 7, 8.

As for prelate of the garter, if it be a needful office, there are enow to execute it besides the ministers, which forasmuch as they be appointed to watch over the souls of men purchased with the blood of Christ, all men understand that it is not meet that they should attend upon the body, much less upon the leg, and least of all upon the garter. It is not unlawful for princes to have ministers of their honour, but also it is not lawful to take those that God hath appointed for another end to use to such purposes.

Untruth.

Thou seest here, good reader, that M. Doctor keepeth his old wont, of manifest perverting of the words and meaning of the authors of the Admonition. For, whereas they say that the name of earl, county palatine, justice of peace and quorum, commissioner, are antichristian, when they are given to the ministers⁶ of the church, whose calling will not agree with such titles, he concludeth simply, that they say they⁷ be altogether unlawful and simply antichristian; as if I should reason that it is not meet that

[¹ See Vol. I. pages 230, &c., 286, 7.]

[² See before, page 127.]

[³ Civil offices given to prelates, Answ. 2.]

[⁴ For the good, Answ.]

[⁵ States, Answ.]

[⁶ To ministers, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ Say that they, Repl. 1 and 2.]

the queen's majesty should preach or minister the sacraments ; therefore it is not meet that there should be any preaching or ministering of the sacraments.

Now, letting pass all your hard words and unbrotherly speeches, with your uncharitable prognostications and cold prophecies, I will come to examine whether you have any better hap in proving the office than you have had^s in proving the name.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I see no cause why he that is "prelate of the garter" may not also sufficiently discharge his duty in watching over the soul ; for I think the garter doth not require such continual or great attendance. "Those that are appointed to watch over the soul" are not exempted from bodily service to their prince ; except you will take from the prince not only authority in ecclesiastical matters, as you have done, but over ecclesiastical persons also, as by this and such other like assertions you seem to do. But hereof more in place. I "pervert" not "the words of the Admonition," as appeareth by their manifest words ; what their meaning is God knoweth. But how little authority these offices should have, if your platform were framed, shall be declared when I come to your seigniory ; neither the names nor offices that come from a christian prince, that detesteth antichrist, can be called antichristian, upon whomsoever they be bestowed. Whereunto this your example tendeth of the queen's majesty, wise men may easily conjecture. It smelleth of that papistical cavillation, scilicet, that we give to her majesty authority to preach and to administer the sacraments, because we acknowledge her lawful authority in ecclesiastical causes.

I pray God my "prognostications" be not too true ; the more I consider of your book, the more I am driven to suspect it. My "hard speeches" be within the bonds of modesty ; but yours may better bescem the order you talk of than a man of your profession.

Chapter ii. The Forty-fifth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 68, Sect. 1, 2.

Lord's grace, lord bishop, honour, &c., be names of reverence, teaching us to acknowledge our duty towards our superiors, and their authority over us. And it is much more to be reprehended not to give honour to whom honour is due, than to receive honour when it is due. You may, and¹ you please, in very ancient histories and in great learned fathers, see as honourable and reverent titles given unto bishops as these be. And surely it is not antichristian to be called by names and titles not ambitiously sought for, but orderly and lawfully given, according to the condition and state of the place wherein a man is. But it is antichristian, that is, proud, presumptuous, disdainful, arrogant, and contemptuous, to refuse to give to every one that name and title that by law, civility, and duty of us is required, and expresseth our reverence, duty, and obedience.

[^s You had, Repl. 2.]

You would speak as much of names of honour and reverence in other persons, if you durst be so bold with them as you think you may be with some.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Nothing is said to this³.

The offices of Archbishops, &c., are not strange or unheard of in Christ's Church: and of superiority among the clergy⁴.

Chapter iii. The First Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 68, Sect. 3, 4;
and Page 69, Sect. 1.

Now it followeth to prove, that the offices signified by these names are not strange and unheard of in

[¹ And, or an: if.]

[² Dignities, Answ. 2.]

[³ "Thus, after large promises of shewing the great antiquity of these names... after high words against those which deny the pretended antiquity, after rifling and ruffling up every dark corner where these great and glorious names might be hidden, after hell itself hath been moved, and summoned to witness of this antiquity; it is manifest that these names, nor no one of them, hath hitherto been shewed in any one council, writer, or story before the council of Nice: &c."—Sec. Repl. p. 513.]

[⁴ Before entering on the consideration of this chapter Cartwright says there are "two questions" which seem "necessary to be decided:" "the one, whether the word of God hath ordained that in every several congregation there should be a bishop:" "the other...whether there were allowed in one city 2. or more bishops." The affirmative of each of these he sets himself to prove at great length.—Ibid. pp. 514-30.]

Christ's church; neither yet plainly in God's word forbidden; that they are not to be removed, but, as most necessary, to be retained.

It is without all doubt that both these names and offices have been in Christ's church long before Nicene council, and that they have had, in the same, continuance even to this day; as partly it may be gathered by that which I have spoken before, and most manifestly by all histories and learned writers from before that council of Nice to this instant hour; and therefore they little considered what they writ, when they set it down that these names and offices were strange and unheard of in the church of Christ.

Antiquity of the offices⁵.

Offices of archbishops ancient⁶.

These men, contemning ancient writers, never read them; and that is the cause of such unlearned assertions.

T. C. Page 75, Sect. 1.

And, whereas in the former treatise of the name of the archbishop, he blew the trumpet before the victory, here in this of the office he bloweth it before he cometh into the field or striketh one stroke, saying that "they little consider what they write," that they are "contemners of ancient writers," and that they "never read them," and that they are "unlearned" which deny these things which he affirmeth. Well, what we read, and how unlearned we are, is not the matter which we strive for: the judgment thereof is first with God, then⁷ with the churches; and in their judgments we are content to rest. But, if you be so greatly learned, and we so unlearned and smally read, then the truth of our cause shall more appear that is maintained with so small learning and reading, against men of such profound knowledge and great reading. And yet I know not why, if we be not too idle, we should not be able to read as much as you, which may have leisure to read a good long writer, or ever you can ride only to see and salute your houses and livings, being so many and so far distant one from another. And, if we be so unlearned and hold such dangerous opinions of papistry and anabaptism⁸, as you bear men in hand we do, why do you not, by the example of the ministers in Germany, procure a public disputation, where you may both win your spurs, and such detestable opinions with the ignorance of the authors may be displayed unto the whole world? But let us hear what is said.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I have said nothing of the authors of the Admonition,

[⁵ Antiquity of offices, Answ. 2.]

[⁶ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[⁷ God and then, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ Anabaptistry, Repl. 1 and 2.]

which their own doings proveth not to be true; and, if you will also take it unto yourself, who can let you. If, notwithstanding all my journeys "to see and salute my houses and livings," I be found to discharge my duty there, and also to have read as much as you that have such leisure, it is at the least an argument that I am not idle. I love not to boast of myself. Your too too arrogant and contemptuous speeches provoke me further than modesty requireth. I am not ashamed of my reading, and yet I will make no comparisons.

Conference offered hath been refused.

I have sundry times, both privately and publicly, as I am able to prove by sufficient testimonies, and you cannot deny, offered you conference by writing of these matters; I have earnestly moved you unto it; and you have always refused it. This had been a quiet and the best and most assured way; for litera scripta manet: "That which is set down in writing remaineth." Howbeit I refuse no way that shall be thought convenient to the magistrate, neither am I afraid of your stout brags, for I know what substance is in you; but yet by the way this may be noted, what you hunt after and seek for, when you refuse private conference by writing offered unto you, and cry out for public disputation, scilicet popularem laudem: "popular praise." But therein do you follow the vain brags of other sectaries. &c.

Chapter iii. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 69, Sect. 2, 3;
and Page 70, Sect. 1.

Of the office of an archbishop.¹

Cyprianus, Lib. i. Epist. 3. ad Cornelium, speaking of the office of an archbishop, saith on this sort: *Neque enim aliunde hæreses obortæ sunt, aut nata...schismata, quam inde quod sacerdoti Dei non obtemperatur, nec unus in ecclesia ad tempus sacerdos, et ad tempus iudex vice Christi cogitatur; cui si secundum magisteria divina obtemperaret fraternitas universa, nemo adversus sacerdotum collegium quicquam moveret*²: "Neither have heresies nor³ schisms risen of any other occasion, than of that, that the priest of God is not obeyed, neither one priest Cyprian. for the time in the church, and one judge for the time in the stead⁴ of Christ thought upon; to whom if the whole brotherhood would be obedient according to God's teaching, no man would move anything against the college of priests.

[¹ Instead of this marginal note Answ. 2 has Cyprian.]

[² Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1632. Ad Cornel. Epist. lix. p. 129; where adversum sacerdotum collegium quicquam moveret.]

[³ Or, Answ.]

Cornelius, being bishop of Rome, and having ex-communicated certain notorious wicked men, and after-ward being threatened and ill used at their hands, began to faint and to be weary of his office: Cyprian, hearing thereof, wrote comfortably unto him, and willed him in any wise to proceed, shewing further what sects and schisms ensueth in any province or diocese where as the bishop's authority is despised. For in these words he speaketh not of the usurped authority of the bishop of Rome over all churches, but against the insolency of some, which, despising their metropolitan or archbishop, did with their factiousness trouble the church. For he would have an archbishop in every province, which should bear the chief rule over the rest of the clergy; and so do the godliest and best-learned expound Cyprian.

The same Cyprian, writing to one Florentius Pupianus, speaking in his own behalf being bishop of Carthage, saith on this sort: *Unde schismata et hæreses abortæ sunt et oriuntur, [nisi] dum episcopus qui unus est, et ecclesiæ præest, superba quorundam præsumptione contemnitur, et homo dignatione Dei honoratus ab hominibus indignis judicatur*⁵? "From whence have heresies and schisms sprung heretofore, and whereof spring they now, but that the bishop, which is one and governeth the church, by the presumptuous disdain of certain is despised, and a man preferred by God's allowance is examined and judged by unworthy men." For it is the chief and principal office of an archbishop to keep unity in the church, to compound contentions, to redress heresies, schisms, factions, to see that bishops, and all other of the clergy which be under him do their duty, &c.

[⁴ Instead, Answ.]

[⁵ Inde enim schismata &c. indignus ab hominibus judicatur.—Id. ad Florent. Pup. Epist. lxvi. p. 167.]

Cyprian.

T. C. Page 75, Sect. 2, 3.

This is rather to make sport than to confute.

"Cyprian," saith he, "speaking of the office of an archbishop, &c." Unless, good reader, thou wilt first believe that Cyprian speaketh of an archbishop, and hast before conceived a strong imagination of it, M. Doctor can prove nothing. Aristotle saith that un cunning painters write the names of the beasts which they paint in their tables, for because otherwise it could not be known what they paint¹: so M. Doctor, mistrusting that the archbishop will not be known by his description, writeth first the name of that he will paint out.

This is it which we strive about, whereof the controversy is; and this M. Doctor taketh for granted. He accuseth the authors of the Admonition for faulting in the petition of the principle, or desiring to have that granted which is denied; and yet I am sure that in the whole Admonition there is not such a gross petition as this is. Where or in what words doth St Cyprian speak of the office of an archbishop?

JO. WHITGIFT.

The principal office of an archbishop.

It is the chief and principal office of the archbishop, to provide that peace and unity be kept in the church, to suppress schisms and heresies, &c. This doth Cyprian in this place signify in plain words.

Cyprian a metropolitan.

That he meaneth of an archbishop and metropolitan, though he express not the name, it is evident by his words; for, in the first place, he speaketh of Cornelius, then bishop of Rome, who had government over that whole province. And, in the second place, he speaketh of himself, who had a very ample and large jurisdiction. For, being bishop of Carthage, he had the charge and oversight in² the churches in Afric, in Numidia, and in both the Mauritanies; as he himself doth testify, *Lib. iv. Epist. 8.*³ And, as I have before shewed out of Gregory Nazianzene⁴, he did not only rule the church of Carthage, but also of Afric, of Spain, and almost of the whole east parts; for the which cause Illyricus, as I also said before, doth call him metropolitan⁵. And therefore I have truly affirmed that in those places he speaketh of the office of a metropolitan or archbishop; neither is this a "petition of

Cap. ii. Div.
25.

[¹ ...ἀλλὰ καθάπερ τὰ τῶν ἀρχαίων γραφέων, εἰ μὴ τις ἐπέγραψεν, οὐκ ἂν ἐγνωρίζετο τί ἐστὶν ἕκαστον.—Aristot. Op. Lut. Par. 1629. Topic. Lib. vi. cap. ii. Tom. I. p. 243.] [² Of, Def. A.]

[³ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. xlviii. p. 91. See before, page 164, note 5.]

[⁴ Gregor. Naz. Op. Par. 1778-1840. Orat. xxiv. 12. Tom. I. p. 445. See before, page 164, note 6.]

[⁵ Fuit metropolitanus Carthaginensis.—Catalog. Test. Genev. 1608. col. 118. Conf. Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. iii. cap. vii. col. 159.]

the principle," but a true principle; but it is strange to see how Cyprian. you forget yourself; for afterwards, in the 95. page of your Pag. 95, sect. 2. book, you acknowledge that Cyprian was a metropolitan bishop, which sufficiently justifieth my second place out of Cyprian⁶.

Chapter iii. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 75, Sect. 3.

And here by the way it is to be observed of the reader, how near akin the pope and the archbishop be. For this office is confirmed by the same Truly. places that the pope's is. The places and arguments which are brought Falsely. against him are soluted with the same solutions that they use which maintain the papacy. For these places of Cyprian be alleged for the pope's supremacy; and indeed they make as much for the pope as the⁷ archbishop. For, although they be two heads, yet they stand upon one neck; and therefore the reformed churches which cut right did strike them both⁸ off at one blow. Indeed you know this is untrue.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This argueth either wilful ignorance, or professed malice; for you cannot but know that Cyprian meaneth of the subjection that ought to be given to Cornelius in his own province, and that the papists wrest the same to prove his universal jurisdiction over all Christendom. Now, if a man may not allege that truly, according to the true sense and meaning of the author, which the papists abuse to serve their turn, then must we abstain from alleging divers places of the scripture.

It is true that the papists use this place "for the pope's supremacy," but falsely; for Cyprian only meaneth of the superiority of metropolitan or bishop in his province or diocese. And the papists themselves have given over their hold, that they took of those places of Cyprian, confessing that he meant of every several bishop in his own diocese or province; as appeareth in Dorman's and Harding's latter books, and others. And is this kind of reason so "near akin" to the papists, which utterly overthroweth one of their strongest arguments? Surely I marvel that your desire is so much to write against the person, that in the mean time you neglect

[⁶ Cartwright denies that the authorities which Whitgift cites bear out his assertions, and says that "the jurisdiction bishops had in times past, out of their certain congregations, was nothing but a reverent estimation, purchased by opinion of singular learning, and godliness, whereby others willingly would both ask and follow their advice, in government of their churches."—Sec. Repl. pp. 530, &c.]

[⁷ As for the, Repl. 2.]

[⁸ Both is not in Def. B.]

Cyprian. the common cause, and give strength as much as lieth in you to the reason of the adversary, whilst you say that this place "maketh as much for the pope as it doth for the archbishop." But the truth of this your reply shall appear when I have answered your other cavils.

Chapter iii. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 75, Sect. 3.

In neither of the sentences here alleged out of Cyprian, nor in all his works, as hath been before noted, is there one word of an archbishop; and yet M. Doctor saith that he speaketh of an archbishop. Before he sheweth¹ the name without the office, and now he goeth about to shew the office without the name; so that he can never make both the name and the office² meet together. To shape out an archbishop here, you must needs interpret the words "bishop" and "priest" archbishop and high priest; for Cyprian maketh mention of no other name of ministry in those places. And, if you may have this scope of interpreting, it will not be hard for you to prove that stones be bread, and that chalk is cheese.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Epiphanius.

Conc. Chalced.

Epiphanius, Lib. ii. Tom. 2. hæc. 69., doth call the bishop of Alexandria sometime bishop, and sometime archbishop³. The council of Chalcedon in like manner calleth the same men, as Flavianus, Dioscorus, Leo, and other, sometimes bishops, and sometimes archbishops⁴: the like is to be seen in other authors and writers. So that the omitting of the title is no reason at all to disprove the thing. It is certain that in Cyprian's time the name papa was a common name to many bishops, those especially that were of fame; as M. Fox at large declareth, *Tom. i. fol. 11.*⁵ And yet doth not Cyprian use that title commonly when he writeth to Cornelius, or to any other bishop. This therefore is but a feeble argument.

Chapter iii. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 75, Sect. 3.

Let us see what is a bishop or priest; I use the name of priest against my will; but, because it is sacerdos, and you so translate it, that it may

[¹ Shewed, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[² And office, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ Epiph. Op. Par. 1622. Adv. Hær. Lib. II. Tom. II. Hær. lxxix. 3, &c. Tom. I. pp. 729, &c.]

[⁴ Concil. Chalced. Act. i. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. IV. cols. 148, 9, 52, &c.]

[⁵ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 9.]

better be⁶ understood what I answer to you, I am content to follow you Cyprian. so far. I say, let us consider what is a bishop or priest by St Cyprian, and thereby we shall know what an archbishop he setteth forth unto us, which thing may appear manifestly, by that which he saith in the same epistle, that "the bishop that is appointed into the place of him that is dead is chosen peaceably, by the voice of all the people⁷." I think you will not ^{A cavil.} say that all the people throughout the whole province, or throughout a whole diocese (as we count a diocese) met together; for that had been both a great disorder and confusion, a great charge to the church, and, in the time of persecution as that was, to have offered the whole church in all the province into the mouth of the wolf.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you had read ecclesiastical histories, then should you understand that the metropolitans and bishops of every province and diocese were chosen in the presence of the people of that place and city whereof they had their names, and that the consent of no other of the people in that province or diocese was required⁸. So Cyprian himself, though he had so ample a charge as I have shewed before, yet was he chosen only by the people of Carthage. The same is to be seen also in other such elections; and especially of the bishop of Rome, after that he was in his greatest glory. And therefore this is a poor argument: the bishop of Rome, or of Carthage, were chosen by the consent of the citizens only, and not of the people in other places of the province; ergo, their authority and jurisdiction extended no farther than these cities. And yet the whole diocese, that is, the Christians in the diocese (such I mean as were appointed for that purpose), might have met in that time without peril, or any other such inconvenience as you speak of, for such a purpose, as well as they did in the same time to synods, which were frequent both in Cyprian's time and before.

Chapter iii. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 75, Sect. ult.

And, lest peradventure you should have this hole to hide yourself in,

[⁶ Be better, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ Ceterum...quando episcopus in locum defuncti substituitur, quando populi universi suffragio in pace deligitur, &c.—Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. lix. p. 130.]

[⁸ "Which is a gross answer. For, although the stories of later times (wherein it is not denied but these offices were) make such mention, yet what is that to our cause? whose controversy is whether it were so in Cyprian's times, as in times that followed."—Sec. Repl. p. 534.]

Cyprian.

saying that it might be procured that in every church or parish throughout either the province or diocese, the consent of the people might be asked, and they tarry in their places where they dwell, Cyprian in the next epistle doth put the matter out of all question, saying that "the priest" (whom he after calleth bishop) "is chosen in the presence of the people, and in the eyes of all." So that Cyprian's bishop, whom you will needs have an archbishop, had neither province nor diocese as we call a diocese, but only a church or congregation, such as the ministers and pastors with us, which are appointed unto several towns; which may further appear in that Cyprian saith that out of one province there were ninety bishops which condemned Privatus¹. Now, if there were ninety bishops in one province met², and yet not all that were in that province (as may appear out of the same epistle), all men do understand that the scope, that Cyprian's bishop or archbishop, as you will have him, had, was no such thing as a diocese or a province. I could bring infinite testimonies out of Cyprian to prove that the bishop in his time was nothing else but St Paul's bishop, that is, one that had cure and charge of one flock, which was so placed as it might be taught of him, and overseen by him, and governed by him, and of whom in matters pertaining to God it might depend.

JO. WHITGIFT.

i. Lib. Ep. 4.

Your proofs go very low when you use such slender ones: the words of Cyprian in that epistle be these: *Quod et ipsum videmus de divina auctoritate descendere, ut sacerdos, plebe præsente, sub omnium oculis deligatur, &c.*³: "The which thing we see to descend from the authority of God, that the priest be chosen, the people being present, before them all, &c." What can you else gather of this, but that a priest must be chosen in presence of the people, and that then he is said to be chosen sub omnium oculis: "before all their eyes," when he is chosen publicly and openly in the sight of many. But what is this to the straitening of his charge? A man might as well reason thus: All the citizens of Rome were not at Cornelius' election; therefore he is not bishop of all the city of Rome⁴. But, to the end that you may understand the vanity of this your assertion, and that it may appear that Cyprian maketh the bishop in degree to be above a priest, and also that at the election of the bishop of Rome more were

[¹ See below, pages 200, 1, note 1.]

[² Province which met, Repl. 2.]

[³ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad. Cler. Hisp. Epist. lxvii. pp. 171, 2.]

[⁴ "I have no where 'reasoned that one should not be rightly chosen bishop, if any be absent that have interest in the election:' my reason is that, forso much as all the people of Cyprian's bishop was by the ecclesiastical discipline appointed to be present at his choice, and by no good order of discipline the whole diocese or province could be so appointed, therefore the whole people of Cyprian's bishop was neither the people of a diocese nor province."—Sec. Repl. p. 537.]

Untruth;
for Cyprian named not a province.

present than those of the city, I will set down his words as Cyprian. they be, Lib. iv. Epist. 2: "I come now unto the person of our fellow Cornelius, that you may more truly know him, as well as we, not by the lies of malicious men and backbiters, but by the judgment of God, which made him bishop, and by the testimony of his fellow-bishops, the whole number whereof through all the world did jointly agree. For (which thing did greatly commend our well-beloved Cornelius unto God, and to Christ, and his church, and also to all his fellow-ministers) he did not suddenly come to the bishopric, but, being promoted by all the ecclesiastical offices, he ascended to the high dignity of priesthood by all degrees of religion. Then afterward he neither desired nor would have the bishopric itself, neither, as others use which are puffed up with pride and arrogancy, did he invade the see by force; but, being quiet and modest, and such a one as they use to be which are chosen unto this place by God, for the moderation of his chaste conscience, and the humbleness of his natural and preserved shamefacedness, he did not (as some men do) use violence, that he might be made bishop, but suffered violence, that he might by compulsion be driven to receive the bishopric. And he was made bishop of many of our fellow-bishops which were then at Rome, and which sent very honourable and commendable letters unto us of his ordination. But Cornelius was made bishop by the judgment of God and his Christ, by the testimony almost of all clerks, by the suffrages of the people which was then present, and by the college of the ancient priests and of good men⁵."

All the bishops agreed to Cornelius his election.

A bishop above a priest in Cyprian's time.

Cornelius chosen by others than the Romans.

[⁵ Venio jam nunc, frater carissime, ad personam Cornelii collegæ nostri; ut Cornelium nobiscum verius noveris, non de malignorum et detrahentium mendacio, sed de Domini Dei judicio, qui episcopum fecit; et cœpiscoporum testimonio, quorum numerus universus per totum mundum concordi unanimitate consensit. Nam, quod Cornelium carissimum nostrum Deo, et Christo et ecclesiæ ejus, item consacerdotibus cunctis laudabili prædicatione commendat; non iste ad episcopatum subito pervenit, sed per omnia ecclesiastica officia promotus, et in divinis administrationibus Dominum sæpe promeritus, ad sacerdotii sublime fastigium cunctis religionis gradibus ascendit. Tum deinde episcopatum nec ipse postulavit, nec voluit, nec ut ceteri, quos arrogantia et superbiæ suæ tumor inflat, invasit; sed quietus et modestus, et quales esse consueverunt, qui ad hunc locum divinitus eliguntur, pro pudore virginalis conscientia suæ, et pro humilitate ingenitæ sibi et custoditæ verecundiæ, non ut quidam, vim facit ut episcopus fieret; sed ipse vim passus est, ut episcopatum coactus exciperet. Et factus est episcopus a plurimis collegis nostris, qui tunc in urbe Roma aderant, qui ad nos literas honorificas, et laudabiles, et testimonio suæ prædicationis illustres de ejus

Cyprian.
Collections out of Cyprian.

In these words first it is to be noted that he saith Cornelius was made bishop "by the testimony of his fellow-bishops; quorum numerus universus per totum mundum concordī unanimitate consensit: the whole number whereof through all the world did jointly agree." Secondly, that he was promoted "to the high dignity of priesthood, per omnia ecclesiastica officia et cunctis religionis gradibus: through all ecclesiastical offices, and by all degrees of religion;" and then afterward was "made bishop." Thirdly, that Cornelius was made bishop "by the judgment of God and Christ, by the testimony almost of all clerks, and by the suffrages of the people which was then present, and by the college of ancient priests and good men." How far these things differ from your collections, and how far from Cyprian's meaning you gather your conjectures, let the reader judge. I have before sufficiently proved by ancient testimonies, that the bishop of Rome, Carthage, and other, had not one city only to govern, or one parish, but divers places, whole provinces and countries; as Cyprian's own words before rehearsed maketh manifest. Wherefore all this you do but speak of pleasure.

If you had told me in what place "Cyprian saith that out of one province there was 90. bishops that condemned Privatus," I would have said something to it; but, seeing you have kept the place secret to yourself, you give your reader occasion to suspect, either that it is forged, or else not faithfully alleged. If it be that which is Lib. i. Epist. 3. then, truly, antiquum obtines. For these be Cyprian's words: *Per Felicianum autem significavi tibi, frater, venisse Carthaginem Privatum veterem hæreticum, in Pambesitana colonia, ante multos fere annos, ob multa et gravia delicta, 90. episcoporum sententia condemnatum, antecessorum etiam nostrorum (quod et vestram conscientiam non latet) Fabiani et Donati literis severissime notatum, &c.*¹: "I have signified unto you by Felicianus, that Privatus, an old heretic, is come to Carthage, being condemned in the city Pambesia many years since, for many and grievous trespasses, by the sentence of 90. bishops, and being also most sharply reprehended by the Cypr. Lib. i.

Epist. 3.

ordinatione miserunt. Factus est autem Cornelius episcopus de Dei et Christi ejus judicio, de clericorum pene omnium testimonio, de plebis quæ tunc affuit suffragio, et de sacerdotum antiquorum et bonorum virorum collegio.—Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Anton. Epist. lv. pp. 103, 4.]

[¹ Id. ad Cornel. Epist. lix. p. 132; where Lambesitana colonia.]

letters of my predecessors, Fabianus and Donatus (as your Cyprian. conscience knoweth)."

Here is not one word of so many bishops being in one province, neither yet any province or diocese mentioned wherein they should be. Surely this is too much, so often to offend in falsifying². But, be it there were so many bishops in one province, what conclude you thereof, that bishops then had but one town or parish limited unto them? As though there be not provinces of that largeness that they may contain so many bishops, and yet the several parishes furnished with peculiar pastors. Massæus, Lib. xvi., saith that there are 160. bishoprics subject to the patriarch of Antioch³.

But there can no such thing as you affirm be gathered of Cyprian's words; neither shall you ever be able to prove out of Cyprian, or any other ancient writer, that such bishops as Cyprian and Cornelius were had only government of one town, or, as we call it, parish; but the contrary is most evident, as I have before declared.

Chapter iii. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 76, Sect. 1.

Furthermore, to shape the archbishop by these places of Cyprian, you must be driven to expound this word "church" province. The papists which cite this place for the pope as you do for the archbishop, they expound the word "church" here to be the whole church universal and catholic. And indeed, although it be falsely expounded so in this place, yet may they do it with more probability and likelihood, than to expound it a province; forso-much as these words, "the church," is oftener read both in the scripture and old writers to signify the whole church than any province of one realm. But let Cyprian expound himself what he meaneth by a church here; although that may easily appear by that which is spoken of St Cyprian his bishop. Where as Cyprian declareth that Cornelius the bishop of the church which was in Rome would not let Felicissimum, a Novatian heretic, being cast out by the bishops of Afric, to enter into

[² "... the truth is, Cyprian saith not they were of one province. But, forso-much as Privatus was of the same province with Cyprian, and controversies rising in every province were for the most part voided by bishops of the same; unless a general council can be shewed, a provincial is presumed. Beside that, it is unlike that Cyprian, to the intent he might draw Privatus into greater hatred, would have omitted that circumstance of general council, if it had been."—Sec. Repl. pp. 538, 9.]

[³ ...liberaverunt...Antiochiam, quæ sub se habuit olim centum sexaginta episcopatus, in se vero 360. ecclesias,—Massæ. Chronic. Libr. Antv. 1540. Lib. xvi. p. 225.]

Cyprian. the church, he declareth sufficiently that he meaneth that company of the faithful which were gathered together at Rome, to hear the word, and to communicate at the sacraments. For it was not Cornelius' part to shut him out of the province; neither indeed could he himself, being not able without hazard, by reason of the persecution that then was, to tarry in any part of the province. Again, speaking against the Novatian heretic, he sheweth that, through his wicked opinion of denying of repentance to those that were fallen, the confession of faults in the church was hindered. Now it is manifest that confession was not made throughout the province, but in that particular church where the party dwelt that committed the fault. Therefore Cyprian understandeth by the name of "the church" neither diocese, as we call diocese, and much less a whole province. And in the same epistle, speaking of those which had fallen, he saith that they durst not come so much as to the threshold or entry of the church; where he also opposeth the church to the province, saying that they rove about the province, and run about to deceive the brethren¹.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I expound "this word church" in this place no otherwise than all learned writers expound it, that is, for that province and diocese whereof Cornelius was bishop; and it is no unaccustomed thing to call the church which is extended through a province by the name of the chief city or metropolitan seat of the province; as the church of Rome, all that that is subject to the bishop of Rome; the church of Carthage, all that that is belonging to the bishop of Carthage. And this is truly to expound the places of Cyprian, and may be justified both by examples and authorities; as I have proved before; whereas your interpretation hath no shadow or shew of truth. But you had rather justify the papists' interpretation, than seem to relent to the authority of an archbishop. Such is your zeal.

The zeal of
the Replier.

Cyprian's words touching Cornelius' dealing with Felicissimus the Novatian be these: "Likewise that thou mightest know of Felicissimus, the author of the sedition; who also is contained in the letters of our fellow-bishops, written of late unto thee; which Felicissimus is not only driven from hence by them, sed abs te illic nuper de ecclesia pulsus est: but is there of late expelled by thee out of the church²." Of Lib. i.

Epist. 3.

[¹ Denique quia conscientiam suam norunt, nec nos audent adire, aut ad ecclesie limen accedere; sed foris per provinciam circumveniendis fratribus, et spoliandis pererrant: &c.—Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. lix. p. 138. Felicissimus and his companions are here meant.]

[² ... item Felicissimum signiferum seditionis recognosceres, qui et ipse in these words you gather this argument: Cyprian signifieth Cyprian. that Cornelius had banished Felicissimus from the church of Rome; ergo, Cornelius was bishop but of one parish or city; or, therefore a church in that place signifieth one only particular congregation to gather³ together in one town. What kind of conjectures call you these? And what though "Cornelius could not shut him out of the province?" might he not therefore by excommunication seclude him from the congregation of the faithful throughout the province? do you think that he forcibly shut him out of the local church of Rome, or rather dealt with him according to the ecclesiastical censures? You may delude simple readers that believe whatsoever you say; but such as be able to examine your doings cannot (if they will search) but find passing forgery.

Again, you say, "speaking against the Novatian heretics, &c." Cyprian's words touching that matter be these: *Quibus etiam non satis fuit ab evangelio recessisse, spem lapsis satisfactionis et pœnitentiæ sustulisse, fraudibus involutos vel adulteriis commaculatos, et sacrificiorum funesta contagione pollutos, ne Deum rogarent, ne in ecclesia exomologesin criminum facerent, ab omni sensu et fructu removisse*⁴: Ibidem. The Novatian heresy. "To whom it was not enough to have departed from the gospel, to have taken away hope and satisfaction and repentance from those that have fallen, to have removed from all feeling and fruit of repentance those that are taken in snares, or defiled with adulteries, or polluted with deadly contagion of sacrifices, that they should not pray to God, nor make confession of their sins in the congregation." What doth Cyprian else mean by these words, but that Novatus denied repentance to such as were fallen, and would not receive them again into the church, that is, not this or that parish, but the church of Christ, the congregation of the faithful? For that was Novatus' heresy, negare veniam lapsis: "to deny forgiveness to those that fell." And therefore also he denied unto them the fruits of repentance, as confession of their offences in the congregation of the faithful, &c. For Novatus' opinion was not that such should only be secluded from this or that congregation, but generally from the church iisdem cœpiscoporum nostrorum factis ad te pridem literis continetur: qui non tantum ab iis istic abstentus, sed abs te &c.—Id. ibid. Epist. lix. pp. 131, 2.]

[³ Congregation gathered, Def. A.]

[⁴ Id. ibid. p. 135; where satis non fuit, vel sacrificiorum, and omni et sensu et fructu pœnitentiæ removisse.]

Cyprian. of Christ and hope of salvation. And therefore in that place of Cyprian is meant that church, extra quam non est salus: "without the which there is no salvation."

And to what purpose do you proceed and go on forward, saying that "the same epistle, speaking of those that had fallen, &c.?" What proveth it, but that those heretics had cast them into such a despair of forgiveness, that they durst not offer themselves to be received into the church, that is to repentance; and that the same heretics, being themselves excommunicated, wandered up and down, sowing the pestilent seed of their doctrine? This is to oppose heretics and schismatics (which run up and down in corners) to the true members of the church. But it is not "to oppose the church to the province." For the province (if it be christened) is the church, although it contain in it several congregations, which be also churches, and yet, being members of it, are subject to one bishop; and so doth the whole epistle of Cyprian declare; neither can there anything be gathered out of it to the contrary: for a testimony whereof I call to witness these your weak collections; which you would not have used, if you could have found any better¹.

Chapter iii. The Eighth Division.

T. C. Page 76, Sect. 2.

A weak conclusion of false principles

Seeing therefore the bishop which Cyprian speaketh of is nothing else but such as we call pastor, or as the common name with us is parson; and his church whereof he is bishop is neither diocese nor province, but a congregation which meet together in one place, and to be taught of one man; what should M. Doctor mean to put on this great name of archbishop upon so small a bishopric? as it were Saul's great harness upon David's² little body, or as if a man should set a wide huge porch before a little house.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Where the premises be naught, how should the conclusion be good? I would to God your argument were in his right form, that we might see upon what substantial posts your conclusion doth stand. But let the reader consider your grounds which I have opened before.

I might here tell you again, that Cyprian in plain and manifest words, Lib. iv. Epist. 2, doth make a bishop superior in Cyprian. degree to him that you call pastor: his words I have repeated before³. I might also put you in mind of Cyprian's jurisdiction over the churches of Carthage, Numidia, and Mauritania, according to his testimony, Lib. iv. Epist. 8⁴; in which respect Illyricus doth call him metropolitan⁵. Likewise I might tell you that the most writers of that age, as Tertullian, *De Coro. Militis, et De Fuga in Pers.*⁶, Origen, *Hom. 2. in Numer. et 11. in Hierem*⁷, do make three degrees of ministers, deacons, priests, and bishops. To be short, I could bid you look Eusebius, Lib. vi. cap. 1; and you should find that Demetrius who lived anno 191. was bishop *paræciarum Alexandria et Ægypti*⁸: "of the parishes of Alexandria and Egypt," and refer you to many such examples used before, which utterly overthrow this conclusion, and even hiss it out of the doors⁹.

[¹ Cartwright complains that Whitgift boasts in this division of authorities which he does not produce, and goes on to argue at length that the word church could not be applied to a province.—Sec. Repl. pp. 540, &c.]

[² David his, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

Chapter iii. The Ninth Division.

T. C. Page 76, Sect. 3.

And, lest that M. Doctor should say that, notwithstanding the bishops had but several churches, yet one of them might have either a title more excellent than the rest, or authority and government over the rest; that shall likewise be considered¹⁰ out of Cyprian. And first for the title and honour of archbishop, it appeareth how Cyprian held that as a proud name, for he objecteth to Florentius¹¹ as a presumptuous thing, Lib. iv. Epist. 9. for that, in believing certain evil reports of him, and misjudging of him, he did appoint himself "bishop of a bishop, and judge over him which was for the time appointed of God to be judge."

[³ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Anton. Epist. lv. pp. 103, 4. See before pages 199, 200, note 5.]

[⁴ Id. ad Cornel. Epist. xlviii. p. 91. See before, page 164, note 5.]

[⁵ See before, page 194, note 5.]

[⁶ Sed quum ipsi auctores, id est ipsi diaconi, presbyteri, et episcopi fugiunt, &c.—Tertull. Op. Franek. 1597. De Fug. in Pers. 11. p. 586. Conf. De Cor. Mil. 9. p. 182.]

[⁷ Et unde est quod sæpe audimus blasphemare homines, et dicere, ecce qualis episcopus, aut qualis presbyter, vel qualis diaconus?—Orig. Op. 1733-59. In Numer. Hom. ii. 1. Tom. II. p. 278. Conf. in Jerem. Hom. xiv. (al. xi.) 4. Tom. III. p. 210.]

[⁸ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. vi. cap. ii. p. 164. See before, page 164, note 7.]

[⁹ Cartwright rejoins: "I would you would 'omit' nothing which might make for your purpose; but I would wish you would not repeat one thing so often." He goes on to charge Whitgift with having "unfaithfully reported Eusebius."—Sec. Repl. pp. 542, &c.]

[¹⁰ Shall be likewise considered, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[¹¹ The preceding nine words are not printed in Repl. 1: Repl. 2 has for that he objecteth.]

Cyprian.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Pupianus, to whom Cyprian wrote that epistle, had greatly misused Cyprian, in believing certain false rumours and reports of him, and upon the same giving sentence against him: for this cause Cyprian reproveth Pupianus, saying: *Quis autem nostrum longe est ab humilitate, utrumne ego, qui quotidie fratribus servio, et venientes ad ecclesiam singulos benigne, et cum voto et gaudio suscipio; an tu, qui te episcopum episcopi, et judicem judicis ad tempus a Deo dati constituis? &c.*¹: “Whether of us is further from humility, I, which serve my brethren daily, and receive every one that cometh unto the church gently, and with desire and joy, or thou, which makest thyself the bishop of the bishop, and the judge of the judge given of God for the time?” It appeareth rather in these words that Florentius is reproved for taking upon him to judge Cyprian, to whom he ought obedience; so that this place doth not derogate any thing from any lawful authority that one bishop hath over another, but it condemneth the rash and presumptuous judgment of those that will take upon them rashly to give sentence of their superiors and betters; as Pupianus did. For, in that he findeth fault with him, for making himself (as it were) “bishop of the bishop, and judge of the judge,” he plainly declareth that he himself was both bishop and judge of Pupianus; neither doth “he object this to Pupianus as a proud name,” but as a proud deed.

Chapter iii. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 76, Sect. 4.

And herein also I may use the same reasons, which the godly writers of our time² use against the pope, to prove that he had no superiority in those days over other bishops, for that the other bishops called him brother, and he them, called him fellow-bishop, and he them. For so doth Cyprian call the bishops of that province in his epistle his fellow-bishops, and in divers places his brethren³. And, in the sentence which he spake in the council of Carthage, he saith: “None of us doth⁴ take himself to be bishop of bishops.”

[¹ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Florent. Pup. Epist. lxvi. p. 166.]

[² Times, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ Id. ad Januar. et cet. Episc. Num. Epistt. lxii. lxx. ad Nemes. et cet. coepisc. Epist. lxxvi.; ad Cypr. Nemes. et cet. Epist. lxxvii. pp. 146, 89, 230, 4, 5.]

[⁴ Both, Def. B.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Cyprian.

Every bishop was chief in his own province, and not subject to any. The bishop of Rome had no jurisdiction over the bishop of Carthage, but they were of equal power and authority; as others were also of the like seats. In that Cyprian called the bishops of his province "fellow-bishops" and "brethren," he declared that the function and ministry was all one; he likewise uttered his humble mind and spirit. But this proveth not that he had no superiority over them. St Peter, in his first epist. chap. v., calleth himself "fellow-minister" with those whom he then exhorted, which were all pastors, and such as were ministers of the word; and yet you acknowledge an apostle to be the highest in the church, and above all the other degrees mentioned, ad Eph. iv. 1 Pet. cap. 5.

Cyprian's words in the council of Carthage I have spoken of in another place: he meaneth the title of universal bishop, and such as seek tyrannically and unlawfully to rule, and especially such as will of necessity bind all other men to their opinions in all things; for his words be: *Tyrannico terrore ad obsequendi necessitatem collegas suos adigit*⁵: "None of us enforceth his fellows by tyrannical fear to the necessity of obeying."

Chapter iii. The Eleventh Division.

T. C. Page 77, Sect. 1.

Now, that there was no authority of one bishop over another, and that there was none such as, when controversies rose, took upon him the compounding of them, or any one to whom it appertained to see the unity of the church kept, and to see that all other bishops and the clergy did their duty, as M. Doctor beareth us in hand, it may clearly be seen in divers places of Cyprian; and first of all in that sentence which he spake in the council of Carthage, where he proceedeth further after this sort, that "none of them did by any tyrannical fear bind his fellows in office, or any fellow-bishops, to any necessity of obedience; seeing that every bishop hath for his free liberty and power his own judgment and⁶ discretion, as one which cannot be judged of another, as he also himself cannot judge another; but," saith he, "we ought to tarry and wait for the judgment of our Lord Jesus Christ, which only and alone hath power to set us over his church, and to judge of our doing." And in the same epistle, wherout the first place is taken by M. Doctor, he saith that "unto every one a portion of the flock is appointed, which every one must rule and govern, as he that shall render

⁵ Adigat, Editt. See next page, note 3.]⁶ Or, Repl. 1 and 2.]

Cyprian. an account of his deed unto the Lord¹." And in another place Lib. ii. Epist. 1. he saith: "We do not use any compulsion or violence over any, nor appoint no law to any; seeing that every one that is set over the church hath in the government the free disposition of his own will, whereof he shall give an account unto the Lord²." And yet Cyprian was the bishop of the metropolitan or chief seat, and one whom for his learning and godliness the rest no doubt had in great reverence, and gave great honour unto.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The words of Cyprian discussed.

Tom. i. Conc.
Carth.

Because so much ado is made of the words of Cyprian in that erroneous council of Carthage, wherein Cyprian himself also was the chief author of the error, I will recite the words as I do there find them: Neque enim quisquam nostrum episcopum se [esse] episcoporum constituit, aut tyrannico terrore ad obsequendi necessitatem collegas suos adigit, cum habeat omnis episcopus licentiam libertatis, et potestatis suæ arbitrium proprium, tanquam judicari ab alio non possit, cum nec ipse possit alterum judicare; sed expectemus universi judicium Domini nostri Jesu Christi, qui unus et solus habet potestatem, et præponendi nos in ecclesiæ suæ gubernatione, et de actu nostro judicandi³: "Neither doth any of us make himself bishop of bishops, or enforceth his fellows to the necessity of obeying by tyrannical fear; because every bishop hath freedom of liberty and free judgment of his own power, as he who can be judged of no other, neither can himself judge another bishop; but let us all wait for the judgment of our Lord Jesus Christ, who alone hath power both to place us in the government of the church, and to judge of our doing." It were very absurd to think that Cyprian's words are generally to be understood of all kind of judgment, or that a bishop in all things should be left to his own free liberty and discretion, or that he is free from all controlment. For what if he be an heretic? what if he be otherwise criminous? shall he not be judged by man, but left only to the judgment of Christ? The words of Cyprian, Cyprian.

[¹ Nam cum statutum sit omnibus nobis, et æquum sit pariter ac justum, ut uniuscujusque causa illic audiatur, ubi est crimen admissum, et singulis pastoribus portio gregis sit adscripta, quam regat unusquisque et gubernet, rationem sui actus Domino redditurus; oportet utique eos quibus præsumus non circumcur-sare...sed agere illic causam suam, ubi et accusatores habere et testes sui criminis possint; &c.—Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. lix. p. 136.]

[² See below, page 210, note 1.]

[³ Neque &c. adigit; quando habeat omnis episcopus pro licentia libertatis et potestatis suæ, arbitrium proprium; tamque judicari ab alio non possit, quam nec ipse potest judicare. Sed &c.—Ibid. Concil. Carthag. pp. 229, 30.]

 if they be as you understand them, take authority of judg- The meaning ment as well from synods as from archbishops. Cyprian therefore meaneth, as the words themselves do teach, that one bishop should not tyrannically rule over another, and at his pleasure abridge the liberty of another in uttering his judgment, especially in a synod, or rashly condemn another.
 For Cyprian in that council, propounding the controversy of re-baptization, requireth every man's judgment thereof, protesting (as it were) not to condemn, or to excommunicate any that should dissent from him in that matter, and thereupon saith, Neque enim quisquam nostrum &c.; so that he meaneth that to be tyrannicum, to compel other bishops necessarily to agree to his opinion in all things; and these words licentia libertatis et potestatis suæ arbitrium proprium, are not meant of jurisdiction, but of judgment and opinion. For one man is not of necessity bound to frame himself to the judgment and opinion of another, but therein hath freedom and liberty; neither will any man allow this authority in any archbishop.

Touching jurisdiction, every bishop in this church hath free government over his flock in all things that belongeth unto him: if anything happen that he cannot end, then the archbishop intermeddleth: if that will not serve, it is referred to a synod. The words of Cyprian can in no respect dero-gate anything from the jurisdiction of archbishops. For concerning jurisdiction they be bound to laws themselves, and do but execute laws made, not of their own private authority, but by parliament and by the prince. Neither can they control the worst minister in their diocese, if he observe the laws and rules prescribed. Therefore, except your meaning be to have bishops and ministers free from all laws, and from all subjection to any superior, prince or other (which is most like), I do not know why you should take this saying of Cyprian in that sense you do. Sure I am that the words do not favour your anarchy; and that may the reader easily perceive.

In that Cyprian saith, "unto every one a portion of the flock is appointed," he saith truly, but yet doth he not thereby exempt bishops, pastors, and ministers, from obedience and subjection to their lawful governors. For due

[⁴ See above, note 1.]

Cyprian. obedience doth not hinder any duty that is owing towards their flock.

In the place that you allege out of Cyprian's second book and first epistle, you have omitted that which goeth before, and declareth what Cyprian meaneth by the words that you have recited. His words be these: *Cæterum scimus quosdam quod semel imbiberunt nolle deponere, nec propositum suum facile mutare, &c.*¹: "But we know that certain will never lay away that which once they have taken, neither easily change their purpose, but do retain certain things peculiar to themselves, which once they have used, yet not breaking the bond of peace and concord among their fellows; wherein we neither compel any man, nor appoint any law; since every governor hath free judgment of his will in the government of the church, and shall render an account of his deed to the Lord." Cyprian, in the words before, sheweth his opinion concerning such as being ministers of the word had sacrificed to idols, and, when he hath so done, thus he speaketh to Stephen, to whom he writ the epistle: Hæc ad conscientiam tuam, frater carissime, &c. Then followeth, Cæterum scimus &c.; as I have before recited; wherein Cyprian signifieth that he will not take upon him to judge or to condemn other churches, which have a contrary custom, so that they keep the bond of peace. But he meaneth undoubtedly such churches and bishops as he had nothing to do with; else it is manifest that within his own charge he would not have suffered any such thing to be done; and this place answereth all that Cyprian hath spoken anywhere touching not receiving into the ministry such as had sacrificed to idols; whereof I have spoken ²before³.

Lib. ii.
Epist. 1.

Tract. III.
cap. 2,
sect. 5.

[¹ Et iccirco satis est talibus revertentibus veniam dari. Non tamen debet in domo fidei perfidia promoveri...Hæc ad conscientiam tuam, frater carissime, et pro honore communi, et pro simplici dilectione pertulimus, &c....Ceterum &c. imbiberint &c. mutare, sed salvo inter collegas pacis et concordie vinculo, quedam propria, quæ apud se semel sint usurpata, retinere. Qua in re nec nos vim cuiquam facimus aut legem damus, cum habeat in ecclesie administratione voluntatis sue arbitrium liberum unusquisque præpositus, rationem actus sui Domino redditurus.—Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Steph. Epist. lxxii. pp. 197, 8.]

[² See Vol. I. pages 324, 5.]

[³ Cartwright rejoins at length to this and the former division, accusing Whitgift of arguing inconclusively and begging the question.—Sec. Repl. pp. 545, &c.]

Chapter iii. The Twelfth Division.

Cyprian.

T. C. Page 77, Sect. 2, 3, 4.

And, whereas it is said, for the preservation of unity one must be over all, St Cyprian sheweth that the unity of the church is conserved not by having one bishop over all, but by the agreement of the bishops one with another. For so he writeth, that "the church is knit and coupled together as it were with the glue of the bishops' consenting one with another⁴." And, as for the compounding of controversies, it is manifest that it was not done by one bishop in a province, but those bishops which were near the place where the schism or heresy sprang.

For, speaking of the appeasing of controversies and schisms, and shewing how divers bishops were drawn into the heresy of Novatus, he saith that "the virtue and strength of the Christians was not so decayed or languished, but that there was a portion of priests which did not give place unto those ruins and shipwrecks of faith⁵."

And in another place he saith: "Therefore, most dear brother, the plentiful body and⁶ company of the priests are as it were with the glue of mutual concord and band of unity joined together, that, if any of our company be author of an heresy, and go about to destroy and rent the flock of Christ, the rest should help, and as profitable and merciful shepherds gather together the sheep of the Lord⁷." Whereby it is manifest that the appeasing and composing of controversies and heresies, was not then thought to be most fit to be in one bishop's hand, but in as many as could conveniently assemble together, according to the danger of the heresy which sprang, or deep root which it had taken, or was like to take.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The bishops agree not one whit the worse⁸, when they have a superior by whom they may be called together and

[⁴ ... quando ecclesia quæ catholica una est, scissa non sit, neque divisa; sed sit utique connexa, et coherentium sibi invicem sacerdotum glutino copulata.—Cyp. Op. Ad Florent. Pup. Epist. lxvi. p. 168.]

[⁵ Non sic tamen, quamvis novissimis temporibus, in ecclesia Dei aut evangelicus vigor cecidit, aut christianæ virtutis aut fidei robur elanguit, ut non supersit portio sacerdotum, quæ minime ad has rerum ruinas, et fidei naufragia succumbat.—Id. ad Cler. Hisp. Epist. lxvii. p. 174.]

[⁶ Or, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁷ Iccirco enim, frater carissime, copiosum corpus est sacerdotum concordiae mutuae glutino atque unitatis vinculo copulatum, ut si quis ex collegio nostro hæresin facere, et gregem Christi lacerare et vastare tentaverit, subveniant ceteri, et quasi pastores utiles et misericordes, oves dominicas in gregem colligant.—Id. ad Steph. Epist. lxviii. p. 178.]

[⁸ "Albeit they agree never the worse, yet, if they agree never the better, he ought as an unprofitable tree, which occupieth place in the Lord's orchard, be rooted out."—Sec. Repl. p. 549.]

Cyprian.

put in mind of their office and duty. Neither doth Cyprian deny this, when he affirmeth the other. For, though the chief cause of unity is the consent and "agreement of the bishops one with another," yet to have one that shall have the chief care thereof must needs be a great help thereunto; even as it is in other societies. For, if the bishops were divided among themselves, and at variance, and had no superior, who should compound the controversies?

How far our archbishops deal in controversies.

Our archbishops do not take upon them (neither can they) to decide any controversy in doctrine and religion of their own authority, but therein do they deal either according to the laws of the church provided for that purpose, or else expect a new parliament or synod. Neither doth any bishop in his diocese otherwise meddle in such matters than by the common consent of the church is appointed unto him; and yet it was never otherwise taught by any, but that a bishop in his own diocese, or an archbishop in his province, might use persuasions to end controversies, and execute the laws provided for the same; other kind of deciding controversies by any private authority I know none in this church of England. Wherefore all these allegations be but in vain; for surely not in Cyprian's time was the determining of such controversies committed to the pastor and seigniorship of every parish; neither doth Cyprian make mention of any such matter: if he did, yet for government the diversity of the time and state of the church is to be considered; as I have before noted¹.

Tract. II.
and III.

Chapter iii. The Thirteenth Division.

T. C. Page 77, Sect. 4.

And that there was in his time no such authority given, as that any one might remove the causes or controversies which rose, as now we see there is when the bishop of the diocese taketh the matters in controversy, which rise in any church within his diocese, from the minister and elders, to whom the decision pertaineth, and as when the archbishop taketh it away from the bishop, it may appear in the same third epistle of the first book, where he saith after this sort: "It is ordained, and it is equal and right, that every man's cause should be there heard, where the fault was committed." And a little after he saith: "It is meet to handle the matter there where they may have both accusers and witnesses of the fault²;" which although it be spoken of them which fled out of Afric unto Rome, yet Cyprian. the reason is general, and doth as well serve against these ecclesiastical persons, which will take upon³ them the deciding of those controversies that were done a hundred mile off them.

[¹ See Vol. I. pages 175, &c., 378, &c.] [² See before, page 208, note 1.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Cyprian, as I said, speaketh not one word of your seigniory, and, in that place by you alleged, he speaketh of the several province or diocese of every bishop, and would have every matter ended in that province or diocese where it is committed; and therefore he speaketh there of such as “fled out of Africa” into Italy, to have their matters heard; so that this place is soluted by your own self. “It is meet that the matter should be there handled where there may be had both accusers and witnesses.” And that was one of the reasons that the council of Africa used against the bishop of Rome claiming interest in hearing appeals from thence. But there is no province in England so large but that both the accusers and witnesses may be brought into any part of it from any other part. This reason of yours may serve better against Westminster Hall, which is but one place to serve the whole realm for deciding of controversies; and yet I think it very necessary.

You may not wrest that to your purpose or proof of seigniory, or authority thereof, which Cyprian speaketh of divers provinces, yea, divers countries and nations. This is no good reason: Cyprian misliked the translating of causes from Africa to Rome; ergo, there may be no causes removed from Northampton to London.

Chapter iii. The Fourteenth Division.

T. C. Page 77, Sect. 5.

And, whereas M. Doctor in both places of Cyprian seemeth to stand much upon the words “one bishop and priest,” the reason thereof doth Lib. iii. appear in another place of Cyprian most manifestly, and that Epist. 13. it maketh no more to prove that there ought to be one archbishop over a whole province, than to say that there ought to be but one husband proveth that therefore there should be but one husband in every country or province, which should see that all the rest of the husbands do their duty⁴ to their wives. For this was the case: a Novatian heretic, [³ Unto, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁴ Duties, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

Cyprian.

being condemned and cast out of the churches of Africa by the consent of the bishops, and not able by embassy sent to them to obtain to be received to their communion and fellowship again, goeth afterwards to Rome, and, being likewise there repelled, in time getteth himself, by certain which favoured his heresy, to be chosen bishop there at Rome¹ (Cornelius being the bishop or pastor of those which were there godly-minded); whereupon it cometh that Cyprian urgeth "one bishop, one priest in the church," because at Rome there was two, whereof one was a wolf, which ought not to have been there, considering there was but one church which was gathered under the government of Cornelius; and therefore by that place of Cyprian it cannot be gathered that there ought to be but one bishop in one city, if the multitude of professors require more, and that all cannot well gather themselves together in one congregation to be taught of one man; much less can it serve to prove that there should be but one in a whole diocese or province. I grant that in later times, and which went more from the simplicity of the primitive church, they took occasion of these words to decree that there should be but one bishop in a city; but that can never be concluded of Cyprian's words, if it be understood why he urgeth "one bishop and one priest." If therefore neither word, "bishop" nor "priest," do make anything to prove an archbishop, nor this word "church" doth imply any province, nor in these words, "one bishop, one priest," there is nothing less meant than that there should be one archbishop over all the bishops and clergy in a province; and if Cyprian will neither allow of the title of an archbishop², nor of the authority and office, but in plain words speaketh against both; we may conclude that M. Doctor hath done very unadvisedly to lay so great weight of the archbishop upon St Cyprian's shoulders, that will not only not bear anything of him, but which hath done all that could be to make him go afoot and hand in hand with his fellows.

This is to prefer your own judgment before the judgment of worthy councils.

JO. WHITGIFT.

M. Doctor "standeth" not "upon these words, 'one bishop and one priest,'" although the words serve very well for his purpose; neither is your shift of "a Novatian being chosen bishop in Rome" any thing to the matter. For, though it might seem partly to interpret Cyprian's meaning, in his epistle to Cornelius, yet can it not pertain to that that he writeth of Florentius Pupianus. And, be it that Cyprian meant to seclude Novatus, when he said, *Dum episcopus Cyprian. qui unus est, &c.*³: “When as the bishop which is one, &c.:” what can be spoken more to my purpose? For Cyprian would have but one bishop in one city to govern the church; as his words manifestly declare.

[¹ ...cum Novatianus ipse, quem sequitur [Marcianus], olim abstentus et hostis ecclesiae judicatus sit: et cum ad nos in Africam legatos misisset, optans ad communicationem nostram admitti, hinc a concilio plurimorum sacerdotum qui praesentes eramus sententiam retulerit; se foris esse cepisse, nec posse a quoquam nostrum sibi communicari, qui episcopo Cornelio in catholica ecclesia de Dei iudicio et cleri ac plebis suffragio ordinato, profanum altare erigere, et adulteram cathedram collocare, et sacrilega contra verum sacerdotem sacrificia offerre tentaverit.—Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Steph. Epist. lxxviii. p. 177.]

[² Of archbishop, Repl. 1 and 2.]

And, whereas you say that “it cannot be gathered by that place of Cyprian, that there ought to be but one bishop in one city, if the multitude of professors require more, &c.,” the epistle of Cornelius, in Eusebius, Lib. vi. cap. 43, doth convince you of vanity in so saying. For in that epistle he declareth that there was then in Rome 46. priests, seven deacons, seven subdeacons, 42. acoluths, 52. exorcists, readers, door-keepers, 1500. widows and diseased⁴; and therefore it is to be presupposed that the number of other Christians there was very great, seeing that the clergy and those which were found of the church amounted to the number of 1654.; and most like that there were several congregations; for it was not possible for them to meet in one place; and yet was there then but one bishop. For Cornelius, in the same epistle, speaking of Novatus, saith: *Itaque vindex ille evangelii ignoravit unum esse debere episcopum in catholica ecclesia*⁴: “This defender of the gospel was ignorant that there ought to be one bishop in a catholic church.”

Euseb. Lib. vi. cap. 43. The number of Christians in Rome great in Cyprian's time.

The old canons and ancient fathers do testify that in one city there ought to be but one bishop. Chrysostom told Sisinius that one city must have but one bishop; as we read, Lib. vi. cap. 22. of Socrates⁵. Neither are you able to shew from Christ's time, that ever there was allowed to be two bishops in one city. Wherefore the words of Cyprian are yet in force (for anything you have alleged to the contrary) to prove the office of an archbishop or metropolitan to be to compound schisms, and to provide that there be unity in the church. &c.⁶

Socrat. Lib. vi. cap. 22.

[³ Id. ad Florent. Pup. Epist. lxvi. p. 167. See before, page 193, note 5.]

[⁴ Ὁ ἐκδικητὴς οὖν τοῦ εὐαγγελίου, οὐκ ἠπίστατο ἓνα ἐπίσκοπον δεῖν εἶναι ἐν καθολικῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ· ἐν ᾗ οὐκ ἠγνόει, πῶς γάρ; πρεσβυτέρους εἶναι τεσσαράκοντα ἔξ· διακόνους ἑπτὰ. ὑποδιακόνους ἑπτὰ, ἀκολουθούς δύο καὶ τεσσαράκοντα. ἐξορκιστὰς δὲ καὶ ἀναγνώστας ἅμα πυλῶροις δύο καὶ πενήκοντα· χήρας σὺν θλιβομένοις, ὑπὲρ τὰς χιλίας πεντακοσίας.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695—1700. Lib. vi. cap. xliiii. p. 198.]

[⁵ ...οὐ δύναται ἡ πόλις δύο ἐπισκόπους ἔχειν, κ.τ.λ.—Socr. in eod. Lib. vi. cap. xxii. p. 270.]

[⁶ “In all these places which the Ans. hath brought out of Cyprian, Eusebius, Cyprian.

Chapter iii. The Fifteenth Division.

T. C. Page 78, Line 26.

This argument is of your own coining, and not M. Doctor's.

There are other reasons which M. Doctor useth, as this, a notable one: St Cyprian "speaketh not of the usurped power of the bishop of Rome;" therefore he speaketh of the office of an archbishop and metropolitan. It is hard to call this argument to any head of fallation, for it hath not so much as a colour of a reason. I think¹ it can deceive nobody but yourself.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I tell you that the place is not to be understood of the usurped authority of the bishop of Rome, but of the authority of the archbishop in his province, or bishop in his diocese. I do not make any argument of it: doth it grieve you to hear that Cyprian doth not speak of the usurped authority of the bishop of Rome? or doth every man make an argument when he doth interpret? But this dealing of yours is not strange; I must be content to bear with it.

Chapter iii. The Sixteenth Division.

T. C. Page 78, Line 30; and Sect. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Another reason is that "all the godliest and best-learned men do expound" the place of Cyprian, in the third epistle of the first book, of an archbishop. The vanity of this saying, that "the godly and learned writers so expound it," I have shewed before; and here it cometh to be considered again. I will not say that no godly nor learned writer expoundeth the place of Cyprian of the authority of an archbishop.

But, first, I desire M. Doctor to set down but one, and then I will leave it to thy consideration, gentle reader, to think whether M. Doctor hath read any learned or godly man's exposition to be such, when he hath not read those which are nearest him, I mean our own countrymen. I say he hath not read them, because I would think charitably so of him, rather than that he should have read them, and yet speak untruly of them, and father those things of them which they never spake².

Untruth, as will appear.

M. Jewel, the bishop of Salisbury, expounded this place, and yet did never expound it of the office and authority of an archbishop of all the bishops and clergy of the province, but, clean contrariwise, applieth it to the authority that every bishop had in his diocese. His words are these: "Now therefore to draw that thing by

In his first book, 4. article, and in division 5.

Socrates, it is manifest that "one bishop" is opposed unto heretic bishops. Whereby may appear how like it is which I have alleged, that by one bishop is understood not the unity of number, but of truth in religion."—Sec. Repl. p. 553.]

[¹ And I think, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² Speake, Repl. 2.]

violence to one only bishop, that is generally spoken of all bishops, is a Cyprian. guileful fetch to mislead the reader, and no simple nor plain dealing³." Here you see that M. Jewel doth not understand this of any archbishop, but of every bishop.

First book against Dorman, and 25. leaf. M. Nowel, dean of Paul's, having occasion to talk⁴ of this place, saith on this sort: "So that, when he speaketh (meaning M. Nowel will witness against you.

Cyprian) of one bishop, one judge, in the church, for the time, or of the bishop which is one, and ruleth the church absolutely, he meaneth every bishop in his own diocese, without exception: if he speak specially, he meaneth the bishop of the city or diocese whereof he entreateth, whether it be the bishop of Rome, Carthage, or any other place⁵."

1 Tom. Fol. 93.8 M. Fox also expoundeth this of every bishop within his own church or diocese⁷. You hear the judgment of these three writers, that cannot pick out neither the name nor the office of an archbishop out of Cyprian's place; and yet I think you will not deny but these were learned and godly writers.

Now I have shewed you three. I ask once again of you one godly and learned writer that expoundeth it as you do. And by this time I suppose all men understand what a small friend St Cyprian is either to the name or office of an archbishop. Let us hear whether Hierome make any more for the archbishop than did Cyprian.

JO. WHITGIFT.

M. Jewel, bishop of Sarisbury, expounding the place of Cyprian, in the fourth article, 5. division, 228. page of his first book, hath these words: "Upon occasion hereof he sheweth (meaning Cyprian) what hurt and confusion of sects and schisms ensueth in any province or diocese where as the bishop's authority and ecclesiastical discipline is despised⁸." I pray you, what call you that bishop that hath government of a "province?" Is he not a metropolitan, or archbishop? and doth not my L. of Sarisbury as well speak of a province as he doth of a diocese? I do not deny but that Cyprian's words may be fitly applied to every bishop in his diocese; but

[³ Bp. Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. I. p. 348; where it is a guileful fetch, and simple or plain.]

[⁴ Speak, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ And therefore when St Cyprian nameth one bishop in the catholic church, or of a catholic church, he meaneth the bishop of that special diocese which he entreateth of, of what country so ever it be, as here he meaneth Cornelius: and by the like words in other places, he meaneth other bishops, and of other dioceses.—A Reprovfe, written by Alexander Nowell, of a booke intituled, A Prove of Certayne Articles in Religion denied by M. Iuell, set furth by Thomas Dorman, Lond. 1565. fol. 24.]

[⁶ So Repl. 2: the other edit. have only Fol. 93.]

[⁷ See below, page 219, note 7.]

[⁸ Bp. Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. I. p. 348.]

Cyprian. is the archbishop therefore secluded, seeing he of whom Cyprian did write was a metropolitan, or archbishop? That, which is the office of the archbishop in his province, is also the office of a bishop in his diocese; and therefore that which is spoken of the province, in respect of the archbishop, is also spoken of the diocese, in respect of the bishop. And page 230.

Idem. he saith that universa fraternitas is "taken for one whole particular brotherhood, within one province or diocese¹;" so that your first witness testifieth with me, else would he not have named a province.

M. Nowel. M. Nowel, fol. 22. 23. 24., doth expound this place of the authority of every bishop in his own diocese²; which is sufficient for me, and is as much against you as can be; for you would have no bishops over dioceses, but only pastors in several towns. That which he speaketh of a bishop in his diocese he also meaneth of an archbishop in his province, whose both name and office he doth allow; as it is manifest in these words of his in his third book against Dorman, fol. 320.; where he, answering this question of Dorman's, whether he will condemn the whole church for making of archbishops, saith thus: "I answer, I much commend the church for so doing; so far off is it that I will condemn the whole church therefore³." But what shall I need to use any circumstances; seeing he doth most evidently apply this place of Cyprian to that purpose which you will not acknowledge, yea, even unto the office of an archbishop in his province? for thus he writeth, fol. 33. of his first book (speaking of this epistle of Cyprian to Cornelius, and confuting Dorman's argument taken out of it for the pope's supremacy, which is grounded upon this place: Non aliunde hæreses abortæ sunt, &c.): "Concerning the avoiding and quieting of schisms and troubles in the church, we say that, as the several kings of every kingdom, the several governors of every country and city, &c., are able to oversee their several charges, and to keep their people in civil order and peace, so are the several bishops of every diocese, and the several chief prelates of every province, able to avoid, or to appease (if they rise) all schisms and troubles eccle-

Idem.

[¹ Id. ibid. p. 350.]

[² A Reproofe, &c. Lond. 1565. foll. 22, 3, 4.]

[³ A Confutation, as wel of M. Dormans last Booke entituled A Disprooffe, &c. as also of D. Sander his causes of Transubstantiation, by Alexander Nowel. Lond. 1567. Conf. of M. Dorman's 7 chap. fol. 320. 2.]

siastical; as St Cyprian, out of whom this reason is borrowed Cyprian. and falsely wrested by them to another purpose, doth most plainly teach, saying thus: *Cum statutum sit omnibus nobis &c.*⁴ What call you “chief prelates of every province?” Be they not archbishops? Likewise, fol. 60. and 61., in the same book, speaking of this and such like places, he saith: “And further, whatsoever M. Dorman, either out of Deutero., or any other place of scripture, doth untruly apply to the proof of the supremacy of one head, to wit, the bishop of Rome, the same doth St Cyprian, M. Dorman’s own usual witness, everywhere allege for the proof of the superiority of every bishop in his own diocese, and for the obedience due unto him there; he doth never apply it, as doth M. Dorman, to the supremacy of one bishop over all other, but rather against such supremacy of one; and it agreeth very well with the estate of the Jews, that as they⁵ being one nation had one chief priest, so is it good likewise that every christian nation have their chief priest or bishop: it agreeth not that, because the Jews (one nation) had one high priest to govern them in doubts, therefore all nations throughout the world should have one high priest over all other; for not only the unlikelihood between these two, but the impossibility of the latter, is most evident⁶.”

The words of M. Fox in that place, speaking against the papistical interpretation of Cyprian’s words, be these: “when their meaning is otherwise, how that every one catholic church or diocese ought to have one bishop over it⁷,” which also justifieth my interpretation. For, if it be understood of one bishop over one diocese, then is it in like manner of one archbishop over one province. For the reason is all one; and you deny them both alike; for you would have no bishops but in several parishes. Now therefore you see that even these authors, whom you would abuse against me, do make wholly and fully against you, and with me. For they confess the two places of Cyprian to be meant of Cornelius and of himself, who were both archbishops and metropolitans, and had ample jurisdiction, especially Cyprian; as I have declared. And

M. Fox.
Tom. 1.
fol. 93.

[⁴ A Reprovfe, &c. fol. 33. 2. Conf. Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. lix. pp. 129, 36.]

[⁵ That they, Def. B.]

[⁶ Ibid. foll. 60. 2, 61; where later for latter.]

[⁷ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 71.]

Cyprian.
Idem.

M. Fox himself, Tom. i. fol. 21, saith that "the see of Rome was a patriarchal see appointed by the primitive church, and the bishop thereof an archbishop, limited within his own bordering churches¹;" so that, the one place being meant of Cornelius, archbishop of Rome, the other of Cyprian, archbishop of Carthage (for so they were indeed, though they were not in those places so called), St Cyprian may well be said in both places to speak of an archbishop, though he express not his name. And that, which is there spoken of Cornelius or Cyprian within their provinces, may most aptly also be understood of every bishop within his diocese; and therefore my L. of Sarum expounding this place speaketh of them both under these names of "province" and "diocese;" and so doth M. Nowel, under the name of "chief prelate" and "province;" and M. Fox also under the word "diocese;" being plain and evident that they allow of the office.

M. Philpot,
Exam. 5.

That learned man and godly martyr, M. Philpot, as it is recorded in the book of Acts and Monuments, in his fifth examination answering this place of Cyprian, objected unto him by D. Saverson, answereth most plainly in these words: "And now for the understanding of that place, you do misconstrue it, to take the high priest only for the bishop of Rome, and otherwise than it was in his time. For there were by Nicene council four patriarchs appointed, the patriarch of Jerusalem, the patriarch of Constantinople, the patriarch of Alexandria, and the patriarch of Rome; of which four the patriarch of Rome was placed lowest in the council, and so continued many years, for the time of seven or eight general councils; as I am able to shew. Therefore St Cyprian, writing to Cornelius, patriarch of Rome, whom he calleth fellow-bishop, findeth himself offended that certain heretics, being justly excommunicated by him (as the Novatians were), did fly from his diocese, which was their chief bishop (refusing to be obedient unto him and to be reformed), to the bishop of Rome, and to the patriarch of Constantinople, and there were received in communion of congregation, in derogation of good order and discipline in the church, and to the maintaining of heresies and schisms. And that heresies did spring up and schisms daily arise hereof, that obedience was not given to the priest of God, nor once considered him to be in the church for the time the priest, and for the time the judge in Christ's stead (as in decree of Nicene council was appointed); not meaning the bishop of Rome only, but every patriarch in his precinct, who had every one of them a college or a cathedral church of learned priests, in hearing of whom, by a convocation of all his fellow-bishops, with the consent of the people, all heresies were determined by the word of God; and this is the meaning of St Cyprian²." Hitherto M. Philpot. Thus the reader may easily perceive how you have dallied about this place of Cyprian, and that this interpretation is not mine alone³.

[¹ Wherefore, seeing the see of Rome is a patriarchal see &c. bishop thereof and archbishop, &c.—Id. ibid. p. 18.]

Chapter iii. The Seventeenth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 70, Sect. 1, 2, 3;
and Page 71, Sect. 1.

And therefore Hierome, writing upon the first to Titus, saith that "in the beginning a bishop and a priest was all one. But, after that there began to rise⁴ factions in religion, and some said they held of Apollo, some of Paul, some of Cephas, and some of Christ, it was decreed that one should be chosen to bear rule over the rest; to whom the chief care of the church should appertain, and by whom sects and schisms should be cut off⁵."

[² Philpot's Fifth Examination, ibid. Vol. III. p. 469. Conf. The examination of the constaunt Martir of Christ, Johñ Philpot Archidiacon of Winchestre &c. s. 1. & a. foll. 36. 2, 37, and Philpot's Examinations and Writings, Park. Soc. Edit. pp. 43, 4. There are several verbal differences in all these editions. The metropolitans of Alexandria, Rome, Antioch and Jerusalem were mentioned at the council of Nice.]

[³ Cartwright complains that Whitgift has misrepresented Jewel; that Nowel probably meant otherwise than is here alleged: "howbeit (he adds), because the author himself is alive, and knoweth best what he meaneth, I am well content the meaning of his words be such as himself shall best like of;" that "out of M. Fox he cannot find so much as a fig-leaf;" and that Philpot, "attributing unto Cyprian a diocese, declareth that he esteemed him a bishop, not an archbishop." He proceeds: "Albeit the truth is, that the appointment of those 4. patriarchal seats was not by the council of Nice, but of Chalcedon." He afterwards goes on to animadvert on authorities which Whitgift has produced in a much later portion of his book.—Sec. Repl. pp. 554, &c.]

[⁴ Arise, Answ.]

[⁵ Idem est ergo presbyter qui episcopus: et antequam diaboli instinctu, studia in religione fierent; et diceretur in populis, Ego sum Pauli, ego Apollo, ego autem Cephae, communi presbyterorum consilio, ecclesiae gubernabantur.

Here a man may reason thus. The distinction of degrees began in the church, when men began to say, I hold of Paul, I hold of Apollo, &c. But this was in the apostles' time, the¹ 1 Cor. i. Therefore these distinctions of degrees began in the apostles' time.

The same Hierome, in his epistle ad Evagrium, teacheth that the cause why one was chosen amongst² the bishops to rule over the rest was *in schismatis remedium, ne unusquisque ad se trahens Christi ecclesiam rumperet*³: "to meet with schisms; lest every one according to his own fancy should tear in pieces the church of Christ;" and saith further that, "in Alexandria, from St Mark unto Heracla and Dionysius, bishops, the ministers used to elect one among themselves, whom they, placing in a higher degree, called a bishop; even as an army should choose their captain, or deacons should choose one of themselves whom they knew to be painful, and call him an archdeacon." Hæc Hieronymus.

In all these places Hierome doth not maintain the authority of one man over the whole church, but thinketh it necessary that in every province there be one to be chief over the rest, for unity' sake, and for rooting out of contentions and sects. And therefore, contra Luciferianos, he saith that, unless this superiority were, "there would be as many schisms in the church as there be priests⁵."

Causes of superiority amongst ministers⁴.

Postquam vero unusquisque eos quos baptizaverat suos putabat esse, non Christi, in toto orbe decretum est, ut unus de presbyteris electus superponeretur cæteris, ad quem omnis ecclesiæ cura pertineret, et schismatum semina tollerentur.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Comm. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Tom. IV. Pars I. col. 413.]

[¹ The is not in Answ.]

[² Among, Answ.]

[³ Quod autem postea unus electus est, qui cæteris præponeretur, in schismatis remedium factum est: ne unusquisque ad se trahens Christi ecclesiam rumperet. Nam et Alexandriæ a Marco evangelista usque ad Heraclam et Dionysium episcopos, &c.—Id. ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 803. See before, p. 177, note 6.]

[⁴ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[⁵ Ecclesiæ salus in summi sacerdotis dignitate pendet: cui si non exors quædam et ab omnibus eminens detur potestas, tot in ecclesiis efficientur schismata, quot sacerdotes.—Id. adv. Lucifer. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 295.]

T. C. Page 79, Sect. 1, 2.

The Hebrews do derive the name of time of a verb which signifieth to corrupt, because indeed it doth corrupt all; and, as the times are, so are men which live in them; that even very good men carry the note of the infection of the times wherein they live. And the stream of the corruption thereof, being so vehement and forcible, doth not only drive before it light things, but it cateth also and weareth the very hard and stony rocks; and therefore there is not to be looked for such sincerity at Hierome's hand⁶, which we found in St Cyprian, considering that he lived some ages after Cyprian, what time Satan had a great deal more darkened the clear light of the sun of the gospel than it was in St Cyprian's time. For, as those that came nearest unto the apostles' times, because they were nearest the light, did see best, so those that were further off from these lights had, until the time of the manifestation of the son of perdition, their heavens more dark and cloudy, and consequently did see more dimly; which is diligently to be observed of the reader, both the better to understand the state of this question, and all other controversies which lie between us and the papists.

This is your usual practice, when you cannot answer, to cavil at the credit of the author.

And, although Hierome, besides his other faults, might have also in this matter spoken more soundly, yet we shall easily perceive that he is a great deal further from either the title or office of an archbishop, or else from the authority that a bishop hath with us, than he is from the simplicity of the ministry, which ought to be, and is commended unto us by the word of God.

Jo. WHITGIFT.

This is but a poor refuge, when you cannot answer, to discredit the author: it is evident that Hierome saith nothing touching this matter but that which is both consonant to the scriptures and confirmed by the practice of the church, long before his time; as appeareth by that which is said before. And, I pray you, what difference is there betwixt that which Hierome speaketh in this place, and that which Cyprian hath said before? For Cyprian said that "heresies and schisms have sprung and do spring of this, because the priest of God is not obeyed, &c." And, "because the bishop, which is one, and is set over the church, is through the proud presumption of some contemned, &c."⁷ And Hierome saith that the cause, why among the bishops one was chosen to govern the rest, was "to remedy schisms." Do you not perceive how these two fathers join in one truth, and directly affirm the self-same matter? It is true that "time corrupteth;" and therefore much more occasion is offered to appoint government according to the times, lest the corruptions prevail and get the upper hand; and for this cause Hierome saith that upon these corruptions of time the church was constrained to appoint this order¹.

[⁶ At Jerome his hand, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. lix. p. 129; ad Florent. Pup. Epist. lxvi. p. 167. See before, pages 192, 3, notes 2, 5.]

Chapter iii. The Eighteenth Division.

T. C. Page 79, Sect. 3.

A frivolous digression from the matter.

And here I must put M. Doctor in remembrance how unfitly he hath dedicated his book unto the church, which hath so patched it and pieced it of a number of shreds of the doctors, that a sentence of the scripture either truly or falsely alleged is as it were a phenix in this book. If he would have had the church believe him, he ought to have settled their judgment and grounded their faith upon the scriptures, which are the only foundations whereupon the church may build. Now he doth not only not give them ground to stand of, but he leadeth them into ways which they cannot follow, nor come after him. For, except it be those which are learned, and besides have the means and ability to have the books which are here cited (which are the least and smallest portion of the church), how can they know that these things be true which are alleged; and, as I have said, if they could know, yet have they nothing to stay themselves upon, and quiet their conscience in allowing that which M. Doctor would so fain have them like of. Therefore he might have much more fitly dedicated his book unto the learned and rich, which have furnished libraries.

Jo. WHITGIFT.

Tract. II.

M. Doctor hath brought more scriptures than you have answered, as in the sequel it will fall out, although (as I said before)² in such matters the scripture hath not expressly determined any certainty, but hath left them to the church, to be appointed according to the circumstances of time, place, and person; as I have proved both out of the scriptures and learned writers, and intend to do hereafter more particularly, when I come to entreat of your seigniory. If all other men should do as you have done, that is, borrow the sayings of the doctors out of other men's collections, and not read the authors themselves, a few books will serve, and with very small charges they might be provided.

[¹ Cartwright rejoins "that Jerome's bishop is lower by head and shoulders than they for whom his authority is holden out." He afterwards says: "I willingly give testimony unto those governors, or at least the most of them, that they had a good meaning in that invention of man; but that it was remedy against the corruptions I deny," and declares "that even from the first day, wherein this devise was established, the corruption in the church was not diminished, but grew."—Sec. Repl. pp. 568, 9.]

[² See Vol. I. pages 175, &c.]

The “patches, pieces, and shreds of doctors,” that be in my book, are taken out of the doctors themselves, and they be whole sentences faithfully alleged. But the “shreds of doctors,” that your book is stuffed with, you have borrowed of other; you have falsified them, and cut them off by the half; you have fathered upon them that which is not to be found in them; and the words of late writers you have set down under the name of ancient fathers; and the scriptures you have falsely alleged and untruly translated: I would not gladly have burst out into this accusation at this time, being from the matter, but that you have urged me thereunto.

Chapter iii. The Nineteenth Division.

T. C. Page 79, Sect. 4, 5, 6.

Hierome saith that “at the first a bishop and an elder (which you call a priest³) were all one, but afterward, through factions and schisms, it was decreed that one should rule over the rest⁴.” Now I say, against this order that the bishop should bear rule over all, that which our Saviour Christ saith unto the Pharisees, “From the beginning it was not so;” and therefore I require that the first order may stand, which was that a bishop and elder were all one. And, if you place so great authority against the institution of God in a mortal man, hear what Tertullian saith unto you:

Contra Prax.

“That is true whatsoever is first; and that is false whatsoever is⁵ latter⁶.”

Hierome and you confess that this was first, that the bishop was all one with the elder, and first also by the word of God: then I conclude that that is true. You both do likewise confess that it came after, that one bare rule over the rest: then I conclude that that is false; for all that is false that is latter⁶. Furthermore, Hierome in the same place of Titus saith after this sort: “As the elders know themselves to be subject by a custom of the church unto him that is set over them, so the bishops must know that they are greater than the elders rather by custom than by any truth of the institution of the Lord⁷,” and so they ought to govern the church in common.

Tertullian's meaning falsified.

[³ Call priest, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ See before, page 221, note 5.]

[⁵ See below, page 226, note 2.]

[⁶ Later, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ Sicut ergo presbyteri sciunt se ex ecclesiæ consuetudine ei qui sibi præpositus fuerit, esse subjectos: ita episcopi noverint se magis consuetudine, quam dispositionis dominicæ veritate, presbyteris esse majores. — Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. In Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Tom. IV. Pars 1. cols. 413, 4.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

It followeth after in my Answer to the Admonition, that there was superiority among the ministers of the word, even in the apostles' time; which I prove by the scriptures and other testimonies: it is also evident that great factions and schisms did arise in the church even in the apostles' time; and therefore most like these that Jerome speaketh of, to have been then determined. The which to be true, his words ad Evagrium, touching the church of Alexandria, doth evidently declare; for he saith that this order was kept therein from St Mark¹. But admit these were not true (which you will never be able to prove), yet your argument is of no force; and the place of Tertullian is not understood; for Tertullian in that book, after he hath repeated the rule of faith, "which is to believe in one God, and in his Son Jesus Christ, &c.," he saith: "That this rule hath come from the beginning of the gospel, even before all former heretics, much more before Praxeas that was but yesterday, as well the posterity of all heretics as the very novelty of Praxeas, which was of late, will prove. Whereby judgment may hereof be indifferently given against all heresies, that that is true whatsoever is first, and that counterfeit whatsoever is last²." Whereby it is evident that Tertullian's rule is to be understood in matters of salvation, and of faith, and not in matters of ceremonies and kinds of government; which thing he himself in plain words declareth, in his book De Virginibus Velandis; where in like manner, after he hath recited this rule of faith, he addeth: "This law of faith remaining, other things of discipline and conversation admit newness of correction, the grace of God working and going forward, even to the end³." So that Tertullian thinketh that matters of ceremonies and dis-

Tertull.
contra Prax.

Wherein Tertullian's rule is to be understood.

Tertull. de Virgin. Ve-land.

[¹ See above, page 222, note 3.]

[² Nos vero et semper, et nunc magis, ut instructiores per Paracletum deduc-torem scilicet omnis veritatis, unicum quidem Deum credimus: sub hac tamen dispensatione, quam œconomiam dicimus, ut unicus Dei sit et Filius sermo ipsius, &c. Hanc regulam ab initio evangelii decurreris, etiam ante priores quosque hære-ticos, nedum ante Praxeum hesternum, probabit tam ipsa posteritas omnium hæreticorum, quam ipsa novellitas Praxeæ hesterni. Quo peræque adversus universas hæreses jam hinc præjudicatum sit, id esse verum quodcunque primum; id esse adulterum, quodcunque posterius.—Tertull. Op. Lut. 1641. Adv. Prax. 2. p. 635.]

[³ Hac lege fidei manente, cetera jam disciplinæ et conversationis admittunt novitatem correctionis, operante scilicet et proficiente usque in finem gratia Dei.—Id. de Virg. Veland. l. p. 192.]

cipline may be altered (the rule of faith remaining inviolable), notwithstanding his former rule.

If you will not have this to be the meaning of Tertullian, then will I reason thus. In the beginning there were apostles; therefore there must be apostles now: in the beginning it was forbidden to eat that which was strangled; ergo, we may not eat it now: in the beginning there were no christian magistrates; ergo, there must be none now: in the beginning the apostles baptized in rivers, the communion was ministered to 12. only, &c. Ergo quod posterius falsum: "that which is latter is false." These be as good arguments as yours. But it is manifest that Tertullian speaketh of matters of faith, and necessary to salvation; and therefore these arguments, and yours also with such like, be stark naught⁴.

The reason of the Replier retorted against himself.

Chapter iii. The Twentieth Division.

T. C. Page 79, Sect. ult.

Now, seeing that Hierome confesseth that a bishop and an elder by God his institution are all one, and that custom of the church hath altered this institution, for the taking away of this custom, and restoring of the Lord's institution, I say as our Saviour Christ said, "Why do you break the commandments of God, to establish your own traditions?" For the one is the institution of God; and the other the tradition of the church; and, if a man's testimony be so much with M. de Veland. Virg. Doctor, let him hear what the same Tertullian saith: "Whatsoever savoureth against the truth shall be accounted heresy, even although it be an old custom"⁶.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Your whole book is grounded upon the sands, that is, upon foundations not proved, as this is. For you should first have proved that Christ hath so commanded equality of ministers in government and ecclesiastical policy, that one of

[⁴ Cartwright rejoins that, "as one whose forehead is more hard than adamant, he shameth not still to affirm that this manner of bishop and archbishop was in the apostles' time; notwithstanding the author out of whom he draweth his proofs confesseth that at the first there was no difference between a bishop and an elder." He goes on to say that "the answer to Tertullian is absurd."—Sec. Repl. pp. 569, 70.]

[⁵ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[⁶ Quodcunque adversus veritatem sapit, hoc erit hæresis, etiam vetus consuetudo.—Tertull. Op. De Virg. Veland. 1. p. 192.]

Zuing. de Bapt.

them may not be above the other : the contrary is to be seen in scripture, both in words and examples ; as I have after declared ; so far off is it that you can shew any commandment to the contrary. This text of the xv. of Matt. did the anabaptists object unto Zuinglius in the like case ; as it appeareth in his book De Baptismo. But he answered them as I must answer you : “ I speak not as you feign me to speak : I speak only of external and indifferent things ; whereof there be many which are neither commanded nor forbidden by any express word of God, &c.¹” And again : “ For this that we speak of is not necessary unto salvation ; but it is external ; of the which things many may be found omitted in the scriptures. &c.²” Wherefore, except you can prove that we bring into the church something as necessary unto salvation, which is not expressed in the scriptures, this text is no more aptly applied by you against me, than it was by the anabaptists against Zuinglius.

The words of Tertullian are true, and make nothing for your purpose ; for you must first prove that these degrees be against the truth.

Chapter iii. The Twenty-first Division.

T. C. Page 80, Line 3.

A syllogism without form.
Here you are contrary to yourself,
p. 73, line 55.³

Now I will turn M. Doctor's own argument upon his head after this sort. In the apostles' times there were schisms and heresies, but in their times there were no archbishops ordained to appease them ; therefore the best means of composing of controversies and keeping concord is not by having an archbishop to be over a whole province.

JO. WHITGIFT.

A vicious argument displayed.

I will severally answer your arguments, that the reader may the better understand the pith of them. And first I deny this argument, because it is neither in mode nor figure. For, first, you must call to memory that, in the third figure, where you would seem to place it, the minor may not be negative as yours is. Secondly, there is more in the conclusion than there is in the premises; which is against all rules of syllogisms. If you had concluded according to your former propositions, you should have said thus; ergo, when there are archbishops there are no schisms. For this is the true conclusion of that false syllogism. Thirdly, minus extremum should be subjectum conclusionis; and in this argument it is prædicatum. Seeing therefore that your argument hath no true form in any respect, I deny it until it be better framed.

[¹ H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1531. De Bapt. Lib. Tract. III. Pars II. fol. 85. 2. See Vol. I. pages 255, 6, note 3.]

[² Id. ibid. fol. 87. 2. See Vol. I. pages 256, 7, note 1.]

[³ See before, page 143.]

Chapter iii. The Twenty-second Division.

T. C. Page 80, Line 7.

That there was none in the apostles' times, thus it may appear. If there were any, they were either ordained by the apostles and their authority, or else without and besides their authority. If there were any without and besides their authority, then they are therefore to be condemned the more, because in their time⁴ they start up without their warrant. And, if the apostles did ordain them, there was some use of them to that whereunto they were ordained; but there was no use of them to that whereunto they were ordained; therefore the apostles did not ordain them. The use, whercunto M. Doctor saith they were ordained, was to compose controversies and end schisms, but to this they were not used; whereupon it followeth that if there were any they were unprofitable. That they were not used to any such end, it shall be perceived by that which followeth.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This should be the proof of your former minor, if the argument had been good; but be it as you would have it, here is yet no sufficient proof of your minor. They are but only your own bare words, which may as easily be rejected as they be barely by you affirmed. But, lest the ignorant reader should think that I shift off matters with such quiddities as they understand not, I will set aside the deformed face of your argument, and come to the matter, and (as I think) your meaning, which is this: Controversies were compounded in the apostles' time without an archbishop; ergo, they may likewise be so now; so that there is no need of any archbishop. This is the controversy, whether the church be bound to the same kind of external government at all times that was used in the apostles' times. I have proved hitherto that it is not. And more is to be said of the same afterwards. In the meantime this I give you to understand, that, although the apostles had not this name of archbishop among them, yet they had the same authority and office. For they had the government and direction of divers churches, both in matters of doctrine and discipline: they ended controversies, repressed errors, kept them in quietness, ordained them bishops, and visited them; as appeareth, Acts xiv. xv. xviii.; 1 Cor. iii. iv. v. xi., and in the epistle to Timothy, and Titus. Euseb., Lib. iii. cap. 23., declareth of John the evangelist, that, after he returned from Pathmos, he visited and governed sundry churches, and ordained them ministers¹. The like doth Epiphanius report of Peter in Pontus and Bithynia, *Lib. i. Tom. ii.*² And what other office than those hath the archbishop? Therefore, though the name of archbishop was not among the apostles, yet was his office and function. And, notwithstanding that part of the office of the apostles is ceased which consisted in planting and founding of churches throughout the world, yet this part of government and direction of churches remaineth still, and is committed to bishops. Therefore, saith Ambrose, in the *iv. ad Ephe. : Apostoli episcopi sunt*³: “Apostles are bishops;” because bishops do succeed them in preaching the word, and governing the church.

The office of an archbishop in the apostles.

[⁴ Times, Repl. 1 and 2.]

Now, if I shall also prove by good authority that among the apostles themselves, and in their times, there was one chief (though he were not called archbishop), then I suppose that it will not seem strange unto you, that in this state of the church it should be convenient to have the like in every province or diocese. Jerome, in his first book adversus Jovinianum, saith thus: “Yet among the twelve one is chosen, that a head being appointed occasion of schism might be removed⁴.” And, lest ye should wipe this away with your xviii.

Acts xiv. xv.
1 Cor. iii. iv.
v. xi.

Utraque ad
Tim.
Ep. ad Tit.
Euseb.
Lib. iii. cap.
23.

Epipha.
Lib. i.
Tom. II.

Ambro in
iv. Ephes.

Superiority among the apostles.

Jerom. adv.
Jovi. Lib. i.

[¹ Ἐπὶ τοῦτοις κατὰ τὴν Ἀσίαν ἔτι τῷ βίῳ περιλειπόμενος, αὐτὸς ἐκείνους ὅν ἡγάπα ὁ Ἰησοῦς, ἀπόστολος ὁμοῦ καὶ εὐαγγελιστὴς Ἰωάννης, τὰς αὐτοὶ διείπεν ἐκκλησίας, ἀπὸ τῆς κατὰ τὴν νῆσον μετὰ τὴν Δομετιανοῦ τελευτὴν ἐπανελθὼν φυγῆς.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. xxiii. p. 73.]

[² Ὁ μὲν γὰρ Παῦλος καὶ ἐπὶ τὴν Ἰσπανίαν ἀφικνεῖται, Πέτρος δὲ πολλάκις Πόντον τε καὶ Βιθυνίαν ἐπεσκέψατο.—Epiph. Op. Par. 1622. Adv. Hær. Lib. I. Tom. II. Hær. xxvii. 6. Tom. I. p. 107.]

[³ Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Ephes. cap. iv. vv. 11, 12. Tom. II. Append. col. 241.]

[⁴ ... tamen propterea inter duodecim unus eligitur, ut capite constituto, schismatis tollatur occasio.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Adv. Jovin. Lib. I. Tom. IV. Pars I. col. 168.]

accustomed depraving of the author, I will join unto him the testimony of M. Calvin, in his Institutions, cap. 8. who writeth thus: "That the twelve apostles had one among them to govern the rest it was no marvel; for nature requireth it, and the disposition of man will so have it, that in every company (although they be all equal in power) yet that there be one as governor, by whom the rest may be directed. There is no court without a consul, no senate without a prætor, no college without a president, no society without a master⁵." M. Bucer likewise, in his book De Regno Christi, hath these words: "Now we see by the perpetual observation of the churches, even from the apostles themselves, that it hath pleased the Holy Ghost that, among the ministers to whom especially the government of the church is committed, one should have the chief care, both of the churches and whole ministry, and that he should go before all other in that care and diligence; for the which cause the name of a bishop is peculiarly given to such chief governors of churches: &c."⁶ Again, upon the iv. to the Ephe. he saith, as before is alleged, "Paul in the Acts called the same men bishops and ministers, when he called for the ministers of Ephesus to Miletum; yet, because one among them did rule, and had the chief care of the church, the name of a bishop did properly belong unto him. Neither was his age always considered, so that he were virtuous and learned; as we have an example in Timothy being a young man⁷." Thus then you see that, even among the apostles themselves, and in the churches in their times, Calvin.

Bucer.

Idem.

[⁵ Quod duodecim unum habuerint inter se qui omnes regeret, nihil mirum. Hoc enim fert natura, hoc hominum ingenium postulat, ut in quovis cætu, etiamsi æquales sint omnes potestate, unus tamen sit veluti moderator, in quem alii respiciant. Nulla est curia sine consule, nullus consessus judicum sine prætore seu quæstore, collegium nullum sine præfecto, nulla sine magistro societas.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 8. Tom. IX. p. 296.]

[⁶ Jam ex perpetua ecclesiarum observatione, ab ipsis jam apostolis, videmus, visum et hoc esse Spiritui sancto, ut inter presbyteros, quibus ecclesiarum procuratio potissimum est commissa, unus ecclesiarum et totius sacri ministerii curam gerat singularem, eaque cura et solitudine cunctis præeat aliis. qua de causa episcopi nomen, hujusmodi summis ecclesiarum curatoribus est peculiariter attributum: tametsi hi, sine reliquorum presbyterorum consilio nihil statuere debeant: &c.—M. Bucer. De Regno Christi Libr. ii. Basil. 1557. Lib. ii. cap. xii. p. 98.]

[⁷ Et in Actis &c. Nec ætas semper in illis spectabatur, modo singularis probitas, et rerum cognitio adesset: ut est exemplum in Timotheo, alioquin adolescente.—Id. Prælect. in Epist. ad Ephes. Basil. 1562. cap. iv. p. 107. See before, pages 108, 9, note 2.]

there were some that had the chief authority over the rest, and to this end especially, that schisms and contentions might be compounded, and the rest might be directed; which are the chief parts of the archbishop's office; and therefore all this that you have here said falleth flat to the ground. And yet still I do affirm that, if it had not been so in the apostles' time, yet might it have been both lawfully and necessarily at other times¹.

Chapter iii. The Twenty-third Division.

T. C. Page 80, Sect. 1.

At Antioch there rose a great and dangerous heresy, that had in a manner infected all the churches, which shook the very foundation of the salvation of God's children, that was, whether faith were sufficient to justify without circumcision. The matter was disputed of both sides; it could not be agreed of. What do they now? Do they ordain some archbishop, arch-prophet, arch-apostle, or any one chief, to whom they will refer the controversy, or upon whom they will depend? Nothing less. And, if they would have had the controversies ended by one, what divine was there ever or shall there be more fitter for that purpose than St Paul, which was amongst them? Why do they send abroad for remedy, when they had it at home? Why with great charges and long journeys, which they might have had without charges, or one foot set out of the door? What do they then? They send Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem: as if the lesser towns should send to the churches of the universities and of London, to desire their help in the determining of the controversy. And what is Paul and Barnabas' ambassage? is it to desire the judgment or mind of some one? It must needs be answered with St Luke, that they came to know the resolution of the church; and yet there were the apostles, whereof every one was better able both sharply to see, and to judge incorruptly without affection, than any archbishop that ever was. If therefore, in so great abundance and overflowing of the gifts of God, and in that time when as controversies might have been referred without danger of error unto one only, this ministry of one above all was not thought good; now, when the gifts are less and the danger of error more, to make an archbishop for the deciding of controversies and avoiding of schisms is a thing so strange that I am not able to see the reason of it. For, to which soever of the apostles the controversy had been referred, it is certain that he would have given a true sentence of it.

[¹ Cartwright rejoins that "to prove the apostles' authority in the churches (which is not in question) he hath made a great muster of testimonies; to prove the archbishop's not a word;" and characterizes the reason afterwards brought as "more favourable to the pope than to the archbishop."—Sec. Repl. pp. 572, 3.]

[² These marginal references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

It was told you before that an archbishop of himself Supr. div. 12. alone doth not take upon him to determine matters of doctrine in controversy³; but, if any such contention arise, either he determineth the matter according to the law and rule already by the church established, or else with the consent of the prince doth he set an order in the same by a provincial and lawful synod; in the which he is the chief, as some one of the apostles were in such like assemblies, according to that which I have before declared; and therefore all this speech might well have been spared. Your argument also is faulty in two respects: first, it is ab auctoritate negativè, or a non facto ad non jus, which is good neque in divinis neque in humanis: “neither in divine nor in human matters.” Secondly, you go about to conclude an universal doctrine of one particular and singular example; which at no time nor in any matter is tolerable.

Moreover, it rather justifieth my assertion, for it evidently proveth that every parish within itself hath not absolute authority to end controversies, but that it beloveth them in such weighty matters to resort to the chief church, as they now did to Jerusalem. This example therefore, if you well consider it, is directly against you; neither doth it in any respect prove that there was then no chief governor, or guide of the rest, to supply that place and office which now the archbishop hath. The example of T. C. is rather against him than for him.

Chapter iii. The Twenty-fourth Division.

T. C. Page 80, Sect. 2.

And, if any can shew me one man in these times, of whom we may be assured that he will pronounce the truth of every question which shall arise, he shall make me somewhat more favourable to the archbishop than presently I am. For, although there were found one such as could not err, yet I could not consent that the matter should lie only upon his hand; seeing that the apostles, which could not err in these matters, would not take that upon them; and seeing that by that means the judgment of the church should be contemned; and, further, for that the judgment of one man in a controversy is not so strong to pull up errors that are rooted in men's minds, as the judgment and consent of many. For that the judgment of many is very apt either to confirm a truth, or to confute false- The archbishop hath cause to thank you for your gentleness.

[³ See before, page 212.]

hood, it is evident that St Paul doth hold forth, as it were a buckler against the frowardness of certain, the authority of the church. 1 Cor. xi. 16.¹
1 Cor. xiv. 33.¹

JO. WHITGIFT.

You take great pains in fighting without an adversary, and, because otherwise (as it should seem) you lack matter to lengthen your book, therefore you devise matter of your own to strive against. For who hath affirmed that which you so earnestly seek in this place to overthrow? It hath been told twice already, that neither of our archbishops taketh upon him to compound controversies in doctrine by himself alone; neither is it their office so to do. The archbishop's authority in this church is to provide by lawful and ordinary means that unity be observed in the church; that contentions and schisms be cut off; that the religion and orders of the church, by the whole consent of the church agreed upon, be maintained; that every bishop in his province do his duty according to the same: this is his principal charge (as I take it), against the which you have not as yet spoken any thing, but devise with yourself² to improve that which no man affirmeth: this is but very shifting and dallying.

The authority of archbishops in our church.

Chapter iii. The Twenty-fifth Division.

T. C. Page 80, Sect. 3.

Furthermore, if this distinction came up in the apostles' time, and by them, how cometh it to pass that they never mention it? nay, how cometh it to pass that even St Paul, in that very epistle where these voices are found, "I hold of Paul, I of Apollo, I of Cephas," which are said to be the cause of the archbishop, ordaineth a clean contrary to this that M. Doctor commendeth? For, when two or three prophets have expounded the scriptures, he appointeth that all the rest that are there should judge whether they have done well or no. 1 Cor. xiv. 29.³

A place far-fetched, to improve the office of the archbishop.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I contend not that the name of the archbishop was in the apostles' time; but you have not yet proved that the office was not then, or that there was then no superiority among the clergy, which you notwithstanding deny. Your negative reason proveth nothing; as you have been oftentimes told.

[¹ These references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[² You self, Def. B.]

[³ The verse is inserted from Repl. 2.]

The place in the 1 Cor. xiv. is far-fetched: it speaketh not of government and discipline, or external policy of the church, but of expounding the scriptures. And what a reason call you this? St Paul saith, 1 Cor. xiv. : Prophetæ duo aut tres loquantur, cæteri dijudicent: "Let two or three prophets speak, and let the other judge;" ergo, he speaketh against an archbishop! Surely, if the authors of the Admonition had not been detected of their unskilful allegations of scriptures, I should have had as much ado with you in that point; for, even of these few which you have used, there is not almost one rightly and truly applied. St Paul in that place to the Corinthians sheweth that the hearers must judge of the doctrine of the prophets, whether it be according to the word of God or no⁴; as those did which are commended in the xvii. of the Acts. But what is this to an archbishop?

T. C. faulteth with the Admonition in unapt allegations of scripture.

Chapter iii. The Twenty-sixth Division.

T. C. Page 81, Sect. 1.

And how cometh it to pass that St Paul, being at Rome in prison, and looking every day when he should give up his last breath, commended unto the church a perfect and an absolute ministry, standing of five parts, wherein he maketh mention not one word of an archbishop; and saith, further, that that ministry is able to entertain the perfect unity and knitting together of the church? Do not all these things speak, or rather cry, that there was not so much as a step of an archbishop in the apostles' times?

How oft hath this been repeated.

JO. WHITGIFT.

How oft have you alleged this place to the same purpose⁶? If I should do the like, you would bestow one whole side in jesting at it. But I answer you as I did before. In this place the apostle, as you confess, reciteth offices that be but temporal, as "apostle, prophet, &c.:" he leaveth out those offices which you say are perpetual, as "deacon" and "senior." Therefore it is no such perfect pattern as you would have it.

The place Eph. iv. no perfect pattern.

[⁴ "Howbeit, if he had conferred the text, he should have found that the apostle speaketh of the prophets, and not of the whole church....Therefore the D. corrupteth the place, &c."—Sec. Repl. p. 576.]

[⁶ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[⁶ "If it be a fault in me to allege one place often upon divers occasions, what is it in him to allege one thing so continually upon the same occasion? If he would have opened his eyes, he should have seen that I used an argument proper to this place, and not used before."—Ibid.]

And, if you say that these offices are contained under the names of “pastors and doctors,” then I say that “bishops and archbishops” be so in like manner. If you will have the apostles to speak of these ministries only which are occupied in the word and sacraments, then I say unto you that an “archbishop” is a name of jurisdiction and government committed to a bishop, pastor, or minister of the word, as necessary for the good government of the church, but not as any new ministry; as you untruly, both now and also before, have surmised. But to let all this pass: in those offices which St Paul here reciteth is the office of an archbishop contained, though it be not named, and namely under the apostles and pastors; as I have before shewed.

Archbishop
a name of jurisdiction, not of a new ministry.

Chapter iii. The Twenty-seventh Division.

T. C. Page 81, Sect. 1.

And, if you will say that the apostles did ordain archbishops (as you have indeed said and do now again), when as there is not one word in the writings of them, I pray you, tell us how we shall hold out of the church the unwritten verities of the papists? For my part, if it be true that you say, I cannot tell what to answer unto them. For our answer is to them, the apostles have left a perfect rule of ordering the church written; and therefore we reject their traditions, if for no other cause, yet because they are superfluous and more than need. Now, this degree of archbishop being not only not mentioned in the scriptures, but also manifestly oppugned, it is too bold and hardy a speech (that I say no more) to fet¹ the pedigree of the archbishop from the apostles' times, and from the apostles themselves.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I must answer you still as Zuinglius answered the anabaptists in the like objection, and as I have answered you before²: the papists make their traditions necessary unto salvation; and therefore they are to be rejected, because the word of God containeth all things necessary to salvation. I make those offices part of decency, order, ecclesiastical government and policy, which admitteth alteration as the times and persons require, and are not particularly expressed in the scriptures, no more than divers other things be in the same kind; as I have proved before. And, that this may seem no strange matter, or anything favouring “the papists’ unwritten verities," you may call to remembrance that which M. Calvin saith of such traditions upon these words, 1 Cor. xi., Quemadmodum tradidi vobis instituta tenetis. "I do not deny ^{Calvin.} (saith he) but that there were some traditions of the apostles not written, &c.³," as I have before recited, speaking of cere- ^{Tract. II.} monies not expressed in the word. And you may see that wise and learned men are not so scrupulous in apostolical traditions not written, so that they be not such as are made necessary unto salvation; neither is any learned man of contrary judgment. And therefore archbishops may well be brought from the apostles' times, without any danger of admitting "the unwritten verities of the papists." You have not yet proved that either the name or office of archbishops is in any respect "oppugned" in the word of God; and therefore that is but feigned.

[¹ Fetch, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² See Vol. I. pages 255, 6, 7.]

Chapter iii. The Twenty-eighth Division

T. C. Page 81, Sect. 1.

But all this time M. Doctor hath forgotten his question, which was to prove an archbishop; whereas all these testimonies which he allegeth make mention only of a bishop; and therefore this may rather confirm the state of the bishop in this realm than the archbishop. But in the answer unto them it shall appear that, as there is not in these places so much as the name of an archbishop mentioned, so, except only the name of a bishop, there shall be found very little agreement between the bishops in those days and those which are called bishops in our time and with us.

JO. WHITGIFT.

M. Doctor remembereth that the authors of the Admonition as well deny the office of "a bishop" as the office of "an archbishop," and he is not ignorant that the proof of the one is the confirmation of the other, and therefore he useth such testimonies as pertain to them both; of the which nature those places be that he hath hitherto alleged. For you must understand that I spake before of the name, and now, according to my promise, I speak of the office, which is not so far distant from the bishop's, but that in most things they be confounded. But let us now hear how you perform your promise.

[³ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. i. ad Cor. cap. xi. Tom. VII. p. 177. See Vol. I. page 221, note 7.]

Chapter iii. The Twenty-ninth Division.

T. C. Page 81, Sect. 2.

And consequently, although M. Doctor thought with one whitening-box to have whited two walls (by establishing our archbishop and bishop by the same testimonies of the fathers), yet it shall be plain that, in going about to defend both, he left both undefended.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Words of pleasure, too too usual with T. C., but of small weight (God be thanked), and of less truth.

Chapter iii. The Thirtieth Division.

T. C. Page 81, Sect. 2, 3.

Let us therefore come first to examine Jerome's reasons why one must be over the rest; for in the testimony of men that is only to be regarded which is spoken either with some authority of the scripture, or with some reason grounded of the scripture: otherwise, if he speak without either scripture or reason, he is as easily rejected as alleged. "One (saith he), being chosen to be over the rest, bringeth remedy unto schisms:" how so? "Lest every man (saith he) drawing to himself do break the church in pieces."

Here you confound a monarchy and a tyranny.

Not so, if that one do govern by law. Your similitudes hold not.

Untruth.

A good proctor for contention.

But I would ask if the church be not in as great danger when all is done at the pleasure and lust of one man, and when one carrieth all into error, as when one pulleth one piece with him, another another piece, and the third his part also with him. And it is harder to draw many into an error than one, or that many should be carried away by their affections than one; which is evident in water, which if it be but a little it is quickly troubled and corrupted, but being much it is not so easily. But by this ecclesiastical monarchy all things are kept in peace. Nay, rather it hath been the cause of discord and well-spring of most horrible schism; as it is to be seen in the very Decretals themselves¹. And admit it were Decret. par. ii. c. 9. q. 3. et Can. Apost. 33. et alibi passim. so, yet the peace which is without truth is more execrable than a thousand contentions. For as by striking of two flints together there cometh out fire, so it may be that sometimes by contention the truth which is hidden in a dark peace may come to light, which by a peace in naughtiness and wickedness, being as it were buried under the ground, doth not appear.

JO. WHITGIFT.

T. C. dis-crediteth the author whom he cannot answer

Jerome, being a man of such singular learning and great credit, among those that be learned, in a matter of history as this (for he reporteth when one bishop was placed over the rest, and for what cause), is more to be believed without "reasons" than you with all your popular and frivolous arguments. Let the reader again consider whether this be your manner or no, by vain reasons to shake the credit of the author, when you cannot otherwise answer².

[¹ See before, page 222, note 3; also below, pages 241, 2, notes 4, 1, 2.]

The reasons, that you use for the popular or aristocratical government of the church, when they come among the people, will be easily transferred to the state of the commonweal, and peradventure breed that misliking of civil government, that you would now have of ecclesiastical, to a further inconvenience and mischief than you and all yours will be able to remedy. In the meantime you utterly overthrow the queen's authority in ecclesiastical matters, given unto her by the laws of God; as hereafter shall be proved. For, if the state must either be popular or aristocratical, then must there be no one supreme governor in church-matters. But I will come to your reasons.

T. C. over-throweth the authority of the prince in matters ecclesiastical.

First you ask, "whether the church be not in as great danger when all is done at the pleasure and lust of one man, and when one carrieth all into error, &c." Here you do either ignorantly or wilfully confound monarchiam with tyranny³. For betwixt a king and a tyrant this is one difference, that a king ruleth according to the laws that are prescribed for him to rule by, and according to equity and reason; a tyrant doth what him list, followeth his own affections, contemneth laws, and saith, *Sic volo, sic jubeo: stat pro ratione voluntas*⁴: "So I will, so I command: my pleasure standeth for reason." Now, therefore, to use those reasons to overthrow a lawful monarchy, which are only proper to wicked tyranny, is either closely to accuse the government of this church of England of tyranny, or maliciously, by subtile dealing and confounding of states, to procure the misliking of the same in the hearts of the subjects. There is neither prince nor prelate in this land that ruleth "after their pleasure and lust," but according to Difference betwixt a king and a tyrant.

The ecclesiastical government in this church not tyrannical but lawful.

[² "The D. saith 'I refuse Jerome in a matter of story,' yet I deny no part of his story: wherein he seemeth to have lost all common sense. For who (in whom there is any light of judgment) would say it is matter of story, 'whether the appointing of one in every church over the rest is a remedy against heresy or no?' ...If this be 'a matter of story,' story hath a larger kingdom than ever I heard of."—Sec. Repl. p. 577.]

[³ Cartwright rejoins here: "it is but a vain shifting-hole."—Ibid. p. 578.]

[⁴ Juvenal, Sat. vi. 222.]

those laws and orders that are appointed by the common consent of the whole realm in parliament, and by such laws of this monarchy as never hitherto any good subject hath misliked; and therefore, your ground being false, how can the rest of your building stand? It hath been said before that the archbishop hath not this absolute authority given unto him, to do all things alone, or as him lust. He is by law prescribed both what to do, and how to proceed in his doings. Moreover, this church of England (God's name be praised therefore) hath all points of necessary doctrine certainly determined, ceremonies and orders expressly prescribed, from the which neither archbishop nor bishop may swerve, and according to the which they must be directed, to the observing of the which also their duty is to constrain all those that be under them. So that whosoever shall wilfully and stubbornly sever himself from obedience either to archbishop or bishop in such matters may justly be called a schismatic, or a disturber of the church¹. And in this respect is that saying of Cyprian now most true: "For neither do heresies arise, nor schisms spring of any other thing, but hereof, that the priest of God is not obeyed²." And so is this of Jerome's in like manner: *Ecclesiæ salus in summi sacerdotis pendet dignitate; cui si non exors et ab omnibus eminens detur potestas, tot in ecclesia efficiuntur schismata, quot sacerdotes*³: "The safety of the church dependeth upon the dignity of the high priest; to whom unless a singular and peerless power be given, there will be as many schisms in the church as there be priests."

Lib. i.
Epist. 3.

Contra Luciferianos.

The government of one by law more safe than of many without law.

You say that "it is harder to draw many into an error than one, &c.;" which is not true when that one ruleth and governeth by law. For the mind of man, even of the best, may be overruled by affection; but so cannot the law. Wherefore a wicked man directed by law governeth more indifferently than multitudes without law, be they never so godly.

[¹ Cartwright calls the answer here "as much to the question as if he had answered of the weather. For the question is not of the estate of our church, but of all generally; nor whether we have the truth of doctrine, &c., but by what way it is best kept."—Sec. Repl. p. 578.]

[² Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. lix. p. 129. See before, page 192, note 2.]

[³ Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Adv. Lucifer. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 295. See before, page 222, note 5.]

Moreover, one godly wise and learned man is much more hardly moved to any error than is the multitude, which naturally is prone and bent to the same; in whom not only philosophers, but singular divines also, have noted great inconstancy and a disposition most unmeet to govern.

Your similitude of water holdeth not; for a little water in a gravelly or stony well or river is not so soon troubled and corrupted as are multitudes of waters in fennish and marish grounds. Again, a little water in a running river or ford is at all times more pure and clear than is a great quantity in standing puddles. To be short, is not the water of those little springs and conduit-heads (which, being safely locked up, and inclosed in stone and lead, do minister great relief to whole cities), much more pleasant, hardlier corrupted, less troubled, than the great waters in the Thames? Therefore is a little water proceeding from a good fountain, by stones and lead kept from things that may hurt it, hardlier putrefied and corrupted than all the fennish waters in a whole country, than mighty pools, yea, than the Thames itself. So is one wise and prudent man, governed and directed by order and by law, further from corruption and error in government, than whole multitudes of people, of what sort soever they be.

The similitude of water returned against the Replier.

You further say that "this ecclesiastical monarchy hath been the cause of discord, &c." I answer, that it hath been the cause of the contrary, until such time as it was turned into tyranny; as by all ecclesiastical stories and writers it may appear, and namely by these two, Cyprian and Jerome.

In all that Decretal, part ii. C. 9. Quæst. 3, noted in your margent, there is nothing against any form of government used by the archbishop in this church of England, but in plain and manifest words both the name and office of the archbishop is there maintained and approved. And I wish that the learned reader would peruse over all that part of Gratian, then should he easily perceive your faithfulness in alleging authorities. And, though it be somewhat tedious, yet, that the unlearned also may have some taste of your dealing, I will set down some canons contained in that part of Gratian. Out of the council of pope Martin he citeth this canon: Per singulas provincias oportet episcopos cognoscere §c.⁴: "In every province the bishops must know their metropolitan to have the chief authority, and that they ought to do nothing without him, according to the old and ancient canons of our forefathers; for the which cause also the metropolitan must take upon him nothing presumptuously without the counsel of other bishops." And out of the council of Antioch he hath this: *Per singulas provincias episcopos singulos scire oportet &c.*¹: "In every province the bishops must know their metropolitan which governeth to have the chief care of the whole province; and therefore those that have any causes must resort to the metropolitan city. &c." In all the rest of the canons he manifestly attributeth superiority and government to the archbishop and metropolitan, even the same that we do in this church, only he denieth that the metropolitan or archbishop hath such absolute authority, that he can deal anything in criminal causes against a bishop, or in other common matters, without the consent of other bishops; which is not against anything by me affirmed, or contrary to any authority claimed by the archbishop; for it hath been from the beginning denied that the archbishop of his own absolute authority can determine anything in matters doubtful and not determined by the laws and orders of this church, to the which the whole realm hath consented.

The places cited by T. C. maketh for the archbishop.

[⁴ Per singulas &c. cognoscere metropolitanum tantum suum, et ipsum pri-

The 33. canon of the apostles quoted in the margent is this: *Episcopos singularum gentium scire convenit quis inter eos primus habeatur, quem velut existiment &c.*²: "It behoveth the bishops of every province to know who is chief among them, whom they must esteem as their head, and do nothing without his knowledge, save such things only as appertain to their own parish and villages which are under it; neither shall he do anything without the knowledge of all. For so shall unity be kept; and God shall be glorified through Christ in the Holy Ghost." What have you gotten by this canon? You see here manifestly that in every province or nation there must be one chief bishop, that is archbishop; to matus curam suscipere, nihil autem agere reliquos episcopos præter eum, secundum quod antiquitus a patribus nostris constitutum continetur in canone. Propter quod metropolitanus episcopus nihil præsumptivè assumat absque consilio cæterorum.—Concil. Martin. Papæ, cap. 4. in Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Sec. Pars, Caus. ix. Quæst. iii. can. 1. col. 871.]

[¹ Ex Concil. Antioch. c. 9. ibid. can. 2. cols. 871, 2. See before, pages 145, 6 note 1.]

[² Can. Apost. 33. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 32. See before, page 145, note 4.]

whom the rest must submit themselves, and do nothing without his knowledge. This is as much as I require. And, if this canon was made by the apostles (whereof you seem not to doubt), then is the name and authority of an archbishop of greater antiquity than you would gladly have it, and the reason and saying of St Jerome most true.

Both of this canon, and of the canon of the council of Antioch confirming it, I have spoken before. Your passim in the margin, if it be meant of such like places as this, I grant it; but, if of any other popular or aristocratical state and kind of government, or to the improving of the office and authority of an archbishop, it will fall out to be nusquam. You say that "it appeareth in the Decretals themselves that this kind of government hath been the well-spring of most horrible schism." Shew one place: why are you not ashamed to utter manifest untruths? Shew one sentence there tending to that end. I have recited some canons out of that place, and I have shewed the intent of Gratian both in them and in the rest. They all signify that an archbishop may not do anything of his own authority without the consent of the other bishops; which no man denieth; and this is the whole scope of that question³.

Our peace is in truth and due obedience: we have the true doctrine of the word of God, and the right administration of the sacraments; and therefore to make contention in this church, and to disturb the quietness and peace, cannot be but mere schismatical, I will say no worse. Zuinglius in his Ecclesiastes saith that the anabaptists went about to defend their contentions then after the same manner that you do yours now. But I answer you as he answered them: your contention is not against infidels, papists, and such like; but against the faithful, against the true professors of the gospel, and in the church of Christ; and therefore, as it is of itself wicked, so is it the cause of contempt, disobedience, and much other ungodliness¹. And “the two flint-stones” may be in such time and place “stricken together,” that the sparks of fire which cometh from them may consume and burn the whole city and country too. And surely he is but a mad man that will smite fire to light a candle to see by at noon-day when the sun shineth most clearly.

[³ Cartwright rejoins: "After, where I quoted certain places out of the decrees, and other canons, to prove the contention for these offices, the Ans. acknowledgeth 'nothing' there 'that carrieth any sound that ways.' Albeit the sound was clear enough, if he had not been deaf of that ear." He then goes on to argue that the decrees and canons of councils prove that there was "continual war" "who should be the first," and concludes: "Whereby it appeareth, that this metropolitanship was the very apple of contention, in scrambling for which, the church was miserably haled in pieces. Therefore, forasmuch as the apostle sheweth that the truth is kept by the bond of unity, and it being most manifest that these smoky titles of honour were cause of contention, it followeth that, so far they are from that pretended, of being bulwarks against heresies and schisms, that they were the principal hooks that pulled them in."—Sec. Repl. pp. 560, 1.]

Chapter iii. The Thirty-first Division.

T. C. Page 81, Sect. 4.

If therefore superiority and domination of one above the rest have such force to keep men from schisms, when they be in the truth, it hath as great force to keep them together in error; and so, besides that one is easier to be corrupted than many, this power of one bringeth as great incommodity in keeping them in error, if they fall into it, as in the truth, if they are in it.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is as though you should say that, if a monarchy be an excellent kind of government, and indeed the best, when the laws rule and not man² (as Aristotle saith), then also is it the worst when affection ruleth and not the law, which is true; for that is the worst state of government which is opposed to the best. But, if you will therefore conclude that a monarchy is not the best state, your argument hath no reason in it: even so is it in the government of the church, if the chief governor thereof should follow his own appetite and be ruled by his private affections; but it is far otherwise when he ruleth according to the laws whereunto he himself is subject.

Chapter iii. The Thirty-second Division.

T. C. Page 81, Sect. 4.

Moreover, if it be necessary, for the keeping of unity in the church of England, that one archbishop should be primate over all, why is it not as meet that, for the keeping of the whole universal church, there should be

A popish reason.

[¹ H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1581. Ecclesiast. Part II. foll. 44. 2, 54. See Vol. I. pages 127, note 3, 128, 9, note 3.]

[² See Aristot. Op. Lut. Par. 1629. De Rep. Lib. III. cap. xv. Tom. II. pp. 357, &c.]

one archbishop or bishop over all, and the like necessity of the bishop over all Christendom, as of the bishop of all England? unless peradventure it be more necessary that there should be one bishop over the universal church than over the church of England; forasmuch as it is more necessary that peace should be kept, and schisms be avoided in the universal church, than in the particular church of England.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is the reason of the papists for the pope's supremacy; and you have borrowed it from them. Wherefore I will answer you as M. Calvin answereth them in his Institutions, cap. viii. sect. 95: "That which is profitable in one nation cannot by any reason be extended to the whole world; for there is great difference betwixt the whole world and one nation³." And a little after: "It is even as though a man should affirm that the whole world may be governed by one king, because one field or town hath but one ruler or master⁴." And again: "That which is of force among few may not by and by be drawn to the whole world; to the government whereof no one man is sufficient⁵." M. Nowel also answereth Dorman (making the same reason that you do) in these words: "To your third question," saith he, speaking to Dorman, "the lowdest of all, why the same proportion may not be kept between the pope and the rest of the bishops of Christendom, that is, between the archbishop and the other bishops of the province? I answer, you might as well ask, why the same proportion may not be kept between one emperor of all the world and all the princes of the world to be under him, that is between the king of one realm and his lords under him? The reason that the same proportion cannot be kept is, first, because there is no like proportion at all between the ability of man's wit and power (being but weak) to govern one province, and his ability to govern the whole church and all churches throughout the world, which no one man can have knowledge of, much less can have ability to rule them. Secondly, you can bring no such pro-

The reasons serve not for the pope that serve for the archbishop.
Calvin.

M. Nowel,
Lib. iii.
fol. 321.

[³ Primum, quod in natione una fuit utile, id in universum orbem extendere nulla ratio cogit: imo gentis unius et totius orbis longe diversa erit ratio.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 2. Tom. IX. p. 295.]

[⁴ Perinde enim est acsi quis contendat totum mundum a præfecto uno debere regi, quia ager unus non plures præfectos habeat.—Id. ibid.]

[⁵ Sed quod inter paucos valet, non protinus trahendum ad universum orbem terrarum, ad quem regendum nemo unus sufficit.—Id. ibid. 8. p. 296.]

portion of antiquity for your pope to be chief head of the whole church, as is to be shewed for archbishops to be the chief bishops in their own provinces, &c.¹" Hitherto M. Nowel. I marvel that ye will join with the papists in so gross a reason.

Chapter iii. The Thirty-third Division.

T. C. Page 82, Sect. 1.

If you say that the archbishop of England hath his authority granted of the prince, the pope of Rome will say that Constantine or Phocas, which was enperor of all Christendom, did grant him his authority over all churches. But you will say that is² a lie; but the pope will set as good a face, and make as great a shew therein, as you do in divers points here. But admit it to be, yet³ I say further, that it may come to pass, and it hath been, that there may be one christian Cæsar over all the realms which have churches. What if he then will give that authority to one over all, that one king granteth in his land? may any man accept and take at his hands⁴ such authority? And, if it be not lawful for him to take that authority, tell me what fault you can find in him which may not be found in them.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The pope doth challenge much of his temporalties from Constantinus and Phocas; but his supremacy and jurisdiction over all churches he claimeth from Peter and from Christ; wherein his claim is more intolerable, being most false, and his jurisdiction more usurped, being wrongfully challenged: you err therefore in that point greatly. The archbishop doth exercise his jurisdiction under the prince and by the prince's authority. For, the prince having the supreme government of the realm, in all causes and over all persons, as she doth exercise the one by the lord chancellor, so doth she the other by the archbishops.

Your supposition of one Cæsar over all realms that have churches is but supposed, and therefore of no weight; but admit it were true, yet is there not the like reason for one archbishop to be over all those churches, and over one province: the reasons I have alleged before out of M. Calvin

[¹ A Confutation, as wel of M. Dormans last Boke entituled A Disproufe. &c. as also of D. Sander his causes of Transubstantiation, by Alexander Nowel. Lond. 1567. Conf. of M. Dorman's 7 chap. fol. 321; where the same proportion that you speak of cannot be kept.]

[² That it is, Repl. 2.]

[³ But admit it to be a lie (as indeed it is touching Constantine) yet, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Hand, Repl. 1 and 2.]

and other; neither is there any man not wilfully blinded, or papistically affected, that seeth not what great diversity there is betwixt one province, and many kingdoms, the government of the one, and the government of the other. *Si unus duodecim hominibus præfuit, an propterea sequetur unum debere centum millibus hominum præfci*⁵? “If one was over twelve men, shall it therefore follow that one may be appointed over an hundred thousand men?” saith M. Calvin.

Inst. cap. 8.

Chapter iii. The Thirty-fourth Division.

T. C. Page 82, Sect. 2.

It will be said that no one is able to do the office of a bishop unto all the whole church. Neither is there any one able to do the office of a bishop to the whole church of England: for, when those which have been most excellent in knowledge and wisdom, and most ready and quick in doing and dispatching matters, being always present, have found enough to do to rule and govern one several congregation, what is he which absent is able to discharge his duty toward so many thousand churches? And, if you take exception that, although they be absent, yet they may do by under-ministers, as archdeacons⁶, chancellors, officials, commissaries, and such other kind of people, what do you else say than the pope, which saith that by the cardinals⁷, and archbishops, and legates, and other such like, he doth⁸ all things? For with their hands he ruleth all, and by their feet he is present everywhere, and with their eyes he seeth what is done in all places. Let them take heed therefore, lest, if they have a common defence with the pope, that they be not also joined nearer with him in the cause than peradventure they be aware of. Truly it is against my will that I am constrained to make such comparisons; not that I think there is so great diversity between the popedom and the archbishopric, but because, there being great resemblance between them, I mean having regard to the bare functions, without respecting the doctrine good or bad which they uphold, that I say, there being great resemblance between them, there is yet, as I am persuaded, great difference between the persons⁹ that execute them. The which good opinion conceived of them, I do most humbly beseech them, by the glory of God, by the liberty of the church purchased by the precious blood of our Saviour Christ, and by their own salvation, that they would not deceive, by retaining so hard such excessive and unjust dominion over the church of the living God.

Who can believe you mean good faith?

JO. WHITGIFT.

But one man may do the office of an archbishop in one

[⁵ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 8. Tom. IX. p. 296; where propterea consequetur.]

[⁶ As by archdeacons, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ By his cardinals, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁸ Doeth, Repl. 2.]

[⁹ Parsons, Repl. 1 and 2.]

province, every several diocese whereof hath a bishop. And one man may do the office of a bishop in one diocese, every several parish whereof hath a several pastor. The archbishop hath a general charge over the province to see that unity be kept among the bishops, and that the bishops do their duties according to the laws and orders of the church, or else to see them reformed according to the said laws and orders, if they shall be complained of to have neglected the same. The like care have the bishops over the several pastors of their diocese, and other persons. Neither doth their office consist in preaching only, but in governing also; in the respect whereof they are over and above the rest. This office of government may be well executed in one province, so much and so far as by the laws is required, and as is convenient for the state of the church; but it could not be so over all Christendom.

It may be that some pastors, having small charges and busy heads, may find and procure more matters and controversies than either they be able or willing to compound: such busy pastors there be in England; but their unquietness or lack of ability to dispatch those controversies, which they themselves are the authors and causes of, doth not prove but that either the archbishop or bishop may do those things sufficiently and well that do appertain to their office and calling¹.

So much may they do "by under-ministers, as archdeacons, chancellors, &c.," as by the rules of the church are permitted unto them², and may be convenient for the time and persons. But the office of preaching, of ordaining ministers, of suppressing heresies and schisms, with such like, they do not commit unto them, but execute them themselves; the which because they cannot do throughout all churches, as they may in one province, therefore your reason is no reason. Moreover, a bishop of one diocese or province may have conference with his archdeacons and chancellor, and be privy to

[¹ "I make my argument of all; and he answereth of some: I of the most fit and sufficient pastors; and he of unfit. If he have any better answer, we will attend after it; if not, then the archbishop is here again taken by default."—Sec. Repl. p. 584.]

[² "... it is his continual fault, that he should prove by the law of God he proveth by the laws of our church, yea, and by those which remained of the estate which was in popery. I might much better allege the laws of the reformed churches, which have abolished them."—Ibid. p. 585.]

all and singular their doings: so cannot the pope with "his cardinals, archbishops, and legates, &c." dispersed throughout whole Christendom. And therefore an archbishop or bishop may well govern a province or diocese, and use the help of archdeacons, chancellors, &c.; but so cannot the pope do whole Christendom, what help or deputies soever he have.

If "against your will" you were "constrained to make such comparisons," why do you make them when there is no cause? why do you forge that which is untrue? why do you join together offices which in no point are like. The pope challengeth authority over all Christendom; so do not our archbishops. The pope exalteth himself above kings and princes; so do not our archbishops, but with all reverence acknowledge their subjection to the prince. The pope saith that to be subject unto him is of necessity to salvation; so do not our archbishops. The pope maketh his decrees equal to the word of God; our archbishops think nothing less of theirs. To be short, the pope oppresseth and persecuteth the gospel; they earnestly profess it, and have suffered persecution for it. Therefore your comparison is odious, and your riotous speech more presumptuous than becometh a man pretending your simplicity³.

Difference between the pope and our archbishops.

Your "good opinion conceived of them" is well uttered in your book: what spirit hath taught you thus to dissemble? Surely even the same that hath falsified scriptures and writers in your book, that hath uttered so many proud and contemptuous speeches against your superiors, that hath moved you to make contention in the church, even spiritus mendax, spiritus arrogantiae et superbiae: "a lying spirit, the spirit of arrogancy and pride;" for such fruits cannot proceed from any other spirit.

Chapter iii. The Thirty-fifth Division.

T. C. Page 82, Sect. 3, 4.

But Jerome saith that this distinction of a bishop, and a minister or elder, was from St Mark his time unto Dionysius his time⁴; whereby M. Doctor would make us believe that Mark was the author of this dis-

[³ "The differences between the pope and the archbishop serve but for stuffing."—Ibid. p. 587.]

[⁴ Dionysius time, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

inction. But that cannot be gathered by Jerome's words¹. For, besides that, things being ordered then by the suffrages of the ministers and elders, it might (as it falleth out oftentimes) be done without the approbation of St Mark, the words "from Mark" may be rather taken exclusively, to shut out St Mark, and the time wherein he lived, than inclusively, to shut him in the time wherein this distinction rose.

Howsoever it be, it is certain that St Mark did not distinguish, and make those things divers, which the Holy Ghost made all one. For then (which the Lord forbid) he should make the story of the gospel which he wrote suspected.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is no answer to Jerome's words, but a dallying with them: the place is evident: he saith, "from the time of Mark the Evangelist," whom undoubtedly he would not have named, unless the same manner had been in his time. But be it that the words "from Mark" "be taken exclusively" (which no man of judgment will grant), yet doth it argue a great antiquity of this distinction, even from the most pure and best time of the church.

It is certain that these things were not otherwise "distinguished" than the Holy Ghost had appointed; and therefore your "for then, &c." is an ungodly collection, and unbecoming your person in any respect to imagine of the glorious gospel written by that holy evangelist.

Chapter iii. The Thirty-sixth Division.

T. C. Page 82, Sect. 5.

An absurd collection.

Again, it is to be observed that Jerome saith it was so in Alexandria, signifying thereby that in other churches it was not so. And indeed it may appear in divers places of the ancient fathers, that they confounded priest and bishop, and took them for all one; as Eusebius out of Irenæus calleth Anicete, Pius, Telesphorus, Higinus, Xystus, Lib. v. 26. πρεσβυτέρους καὶ προστάτας: "elders and presidents²." Cyprian confoundeth priest and bishop in the epistles before recited³; so De Dignitate doth Ambrose in the place alleged before by M. Doctor⁴; and sacerdotali.

[¹ See before, page 222, note 3.]

[² Καὶ οἱ πρὸ Σωτήρος πρεσβύτεροι οἱ προστάντες τῆς ἐκκλησίας ἥς νῦν ἀφήγη, Ἀνίκητον λέγομεν καὶ Πίον, Ὑγινόν τε καὶ Τελεσφόρον καὶ Ξύστον, κ. τ. λ.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. v. cap. xxiv. p. 156.]

[³ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. lix.; ad Steph. Epist. lxxviii. pp. 129, 178. See before, pages 192, 211.]

[⁴ Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. De Dign. Sacerd. cap. v. Tom. II. Append. col. 362. See before, page 153, note 7.]

yet it is one thing with us to be a priest (as M. Doctor speaketh), and another thing to be a bishop.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This argument passeth of all that ever I heard. Jerome saith, there was a bishop "in Alexandria" above the other ministers from St Mark's time; therefore there was no bishop in any place else. God is the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; ergo, he is nobody's God else: he is the God of the Jews; ergo, not of the gentiles. There be bishops in England; ergo, there are none in any other place. No marvel it is though you riot in your logic, when such stuff is set abroad. Like unto this are the other: "Eusebius out of Irenæus calleth Anicete, Pius, Telesphorus, &c., elders and presidents; and Cyprian confoundeth priest and bishop; and so doth Ambrose;" ergo, every priest is such a bishop as Jerome here speaketh of. These be pretty arguments.

Every bishop is a priest, but every priest hath not the name and title of a bishop, in that meaning that Jerome in this place taketh the name of a bishop. For his words be these: *Nam Alexandria a Marco evangelista usque ad Heraclam &c.*⁵: "At Alexandria, from Mark the evangelist until Heracla and Dionysius, bishops, the ministers always chose one from among themselves, and, placing him in a higher degree of dignity, called him a bishop; as if an army should make a captain⁶, &c." Neither shall you find this word episcopus commonly used but for that priest that is in degree over and above the rest, notwithstanding episcopus be oftentimes called presbyter, because presbyter is the more general name; so that M. Doctor saith truly, that "it is with us one thing to be a bishop, another thing to be a priest;" because every bishop is a priest, but every priest is not a bishop.

I know these names be confounded in the scriptures, but I speak according to the manner and custom of the church, even since the apostles' time. And this is not only my opinion, but other learned men affirm it in like manner; as M. Bucer in his book *De Regno Christi*⁷, and upon the iv.

[⁵ Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 803. See before, page 222, note 3.] [⁶ Capitain, Def. B.]

[⁷ M. Bucer. De Regno Christ. Libr. II. Basil. 1557. Lib. II. cap. xii. p. 98. See before, page 231, note 6.]

The passing logic of T. C.

Difference betwixt bishop and priest.

Hieronimus ad Evangelium.

Ephes.¹; whose words I have before rehearsed. Thus you see that M. Doctor's distinction is with better authority confirmed than you have any to overthrow it.

Chapter iii. The Thirty-seventh Division.

T. C. Page 82, Sect. ult.

Jerusalem was a famous church; so was Rome, as the apostle witnesseth; so was Antioch and others; where also were Rom. i. 8.2 great contentions, both in doctrine and otherwise; and yet for avoiding of contention and schism there there was no one that was ruler of the rest. Therefore we ought rather to follow these churches, being many, in keeping us to the institution of the apostles, than Alexandria, being but one church and departing from that institution; and, if there had been any one set over all the rest in other places, it would have made much for the distinction that Jerome had recited.

An untruth

JO. WHITGIFT.

James was bishop of Jerusalem, and in authority above all other ministers there. Eusebius so reporteth of him out of Egesippus, who lived immediately after the apostles' time: his words out of Egesippus be these: *Ecclesiam gubernandam post apostolos Jacobus frater Domini accepit*³: "James the brother of the Lord had the government of the church after the apostles," Lib. ii. cap. 23. And, in the beginning of that chapter, Eusebius, speaking of this James, saith thus: *Cui Hierosolymis ab apostolis episcopalis sedes concredita fuerat*⁴: "To whom the bishop's seat at Jerusalem was committed by the apostles." In the first chapter of that book he saith, out of Clement, that Peter and John, after the ascension of Christ, *constituerunt Jacobum Justum Hierosolymorum episcopum*⁵: "did appoint James the Just bishop of Jerusalem." The same thing do all ecclesiastical histories and writers (that make any mention of this matter) affirm of him. After James was Simeon the son of Cleophas appointed bishop there; as the same Eusebius reporteth, Lib. iii. cap. 11, and Lib. iv.

Bishops at Jerusalem in the apostles time.

Eusebius, Lib. ii. cap. 23.

Lib. ii. cap. 1.

Idem.

[¹ Id. Prælect. in Epist. ad Ephes. Basil. 1562. cap. iv. p. 107. See before, pages 108, 9, note 2.]

[² The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[³ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. II. cap. xxiii. p. 50.]

[⁴ Id. ibid.]

[⁵ Πέτρον γάρ φησι καὶ Ἰάκωβον καὶ Ἰωάννην μετὰ τὴν ἀνάληψιν τοῦ Σωτῆρος... Ἰάκωβον τὸν Δίκαιον ἐπίσκοπον τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων ἐλέσθαι.—Id. ibid. cap. i. p. 30.]

cap. 22.⁶ Therefore you are greatly deceived in saying that there "was no one over the rest" at Jerusalem; although, if there had been none, yet would it not have served your turn; because, the apostles as yet being alive, this office of bishops was less needful. But it is certain that they placed bishops in all great and famous churches after they had planted them; as Zuinglius saith in his Ecclesiastes⁷; and ancient authors do testify.

Linus was bishop of Rome; as Eusebius witnesseth, Lib. iii. cap. 2;⁸ and he lived in the apostles' time; Timothy bishop at Ephesus, Titus at Creta, Dionysius Arcopagita at Athens, &c.; as he also writeth in the same book, cap. 4.⁹ But this thing is so manifest and so well known to all that read ecclesiastical histories, that I am sure they will marvel at your gross oversight in denying the same. Wherefore Jerome's distinction standeth.

Other bishops in the apostles'
time.
Eus. Lib. iii.
cap. 2 & 4.

Chapter iii. The Thirty-eighth Division.

T. C. Page 83, Lin. 2.

But against this distinction of St Jerome I will use no other reason than that which Jerome useth in the same epistle to Evagrius. Jerome in that epistle taketh up very sharply the archdeacon that he preferred himself before the elder; and the reason is, because by the scripture the deacon is inferior to¹⁰ the elder. Now therefore, Jerome himself confessing that by the scripture a bishop and an elder are equal, by Jerome's own reason the bishop is to be sharply reprehended, because he lifteth himself above the elder.

Jerome
speaketh not in that place
of an archdeacon, but
of a deacon.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Without doubt you forget yourself, else would you not reason in this manner: The archdeacon is inferior to the elder; therefore the bishop is not superior to the elder in any respect. I see no sequel in this reason, neither yet any likelihood¹¹. Besides that, you untruly report of Hierome;

[⁶ Id. Lib. III. cap. xi.; Lib. IV. cap. xxii. pp. 69, 115. See before, page 136, note 7.]

[⁷ Quoties vero se fidem alicubi plantavisse, et eandem succrescere videbant [apostoli], mox vigiles et episcopos constituebant, &c.—H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1581. Ecclesiast. Pars II. p. 48.]

[⁸ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. III. cap. ii. p. 57.]

[⁹ Id. ibid. cap. iv. pp. 53, 9. See before, page 130, note 4.]

[¹⁰ Unto, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[¹¹ "Notwithstanding I trust there is none that hath but his common sense, which doth not easily understand that it is no more lawful for those which are for he speaketh of a deacon and not of an archdeacon. But it¹ is your manner so to deal: surely I marvel that you will utter so manifest untruths. But, if Hierome should so say, yet is your argument nothing; for, though an archdeacon be inferior to a minister (whom you call "elder"), yet doth not that prove but that there may be degrees among the ministers, and that the chiefest of them in authority may be called a bishop; as Hierome also in that epistle declareth. And, although Hierome confess that by scripture presbyter and episcopus is all one (as indeed they be quoad ministerium), yet doth he acknowledge a superiority of the bishop before the minister. For, besides these places that I have alledged in my Answer to the Admonition, he saith thus in the same epistle: *Presbyter et episcopus aliud ætatis, aliud dignitatis est nomen*²: "The one is a name of age, and the other of dignity." And a little after: *In episcopo et presbyter continetur*³: "The elder or minister is contained in the bishop." Therefore no doubt this is Jerome's mind, that a bishop in degree and dignity is above the minister, though he be one and the self-same with him in the office of ministering the word and sacraments; and therefore he saith, Presbyter continetur in episcopo; because every bishop is presbyter, but every presbyter is not bishop⁴.

Ad Evagr.

Chapter iii. The Thirty-ninth Division.

T. C. Page 83, Lin. 8.

But what helpeth it you that there was a bishop of Alexandria, which urge an archbishop, or what advantageth it you that there was one chief, called a bishop, in every several congregation, which would prove that there ought to be one bishop chief over a thousand congregations? What could have been brought more strong to pull down the archbishop out of his throne, than that which Jerome saith there, when he affirmeth that the ordained equals by the scripture, to lift themselves one above another, than it is lawful for him that is appointed to be under, to exalt himself above his superior."—Sec. Repl. pp. 589, 90.]

[¹ It is supplied from Def. A.]

[² Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Evagr. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 803.]

[³ Id. ibid.]

[⁴ Cartwright makes a long answer to this division, accusing Whitgift of "striving with the truth," of being "stricken with...a giddiness of spirit," of "oversight in his grammar," and "in logic," &c.—Sec. Repl. pp. 590, &c.]

bishop of the obscurest village or hamlet hath as great authority and dignity as the bishop of Rome? Erasmus did see this, and said, ἐρωτεύόμενος, that is, jestingly, that Hierome spake that of the bishops of his time⁵; but, "if he had seen how the metropolitans of our age excel other bishops, he would have spoken otherwise⁶." And what could have been more fit to have confused the large dominion and superiority of our realm, than that that Jerome saith, when he appointeth the bishop's see in an uplandish town, or in a poor village or hamlet, declaring thereby that in every town there was a bishop, and that the bishop that he speaketh of differeth nothing at all from an elder, but that the bishop had the ordaining of the ministers? Whereupon it doth appear (which I promised to shew) that by this place of Jerome there is neither name of archbishop, nor so much as the shadow of his authority, and that the bishops which are now have besides the name no similitude almost with the bishops that were in Jerome's time. As for his reason ad Luciferanos, it is the same which he hath ad Evagr., and to Titus, and is already answered.

But in the same place speaking in earnest he affirmeth as much as I require.

Untrue.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If this be true that you say, why have you then hitherto sought so to deface this worthy writer? why did you not in the beginning tell us that this saying of Jerome made nothing against you, because he only speaketh of pastors in several parishes, and not of one to have charge and government over one whole diocese? But full well knew you the vanity of this your fancy, and how unlike it is to stand with Jerome's words. For in his commentaries upon the epistle to Titus, he saith that, *postquam unusquisque eos quos baptizaverat &c.*⁷ "After that every one did think those to be his, and not Christ's whom he had baptized, it was decreed throughout the whole world that one of the ministers being chosen should be set over the rest, unto whom the whole care of the church should appertain, and the seeds of schisms be taken away." Do you think that this is meant of the pastor of "every town?" To what purpose should Jerome say so? For the pastor of every several town had from the beginning his authority over his flock without any such constitution. Moreover, there are not in every several congregation many pas-

Jerome's bishop differeth from an elder in dignity and rule.

Hier. in Tit. i.

[⁵ Times, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ Quod episcopo minus tribuit dignitatis, quam his temporibus videntur possidere, non ad hanc tempestatem, sed ad eam, in qua vixit Hieronymus, referri debet. Si nostros vidisset episcopos, longe aliud dixisset.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1534. Erasm. Schol. in Epist. ad Evagr. Tom. II. fol. 117. 2.]

[⁷ Id. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Comm. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Tom. IV. Pars 1. col. 413. See before, pages 221, 2, note 5.]

tors or priests, over whom one should be placed as chief. But Jerome speaketh of a bishop that must govern the other priests, and procure that unity be kept among them; and therefore his jurisdiction must of necessity extend to many parishes, because it is over many pastors. He saith likewise that "the care of the whole was committed unto him." In his epistle ad Evagrium he uttereth his meaning as plainly. For he saith that "the priests did choose one among themselves, whom they, placing in a higher degree, called a bishop¹." Whereby it appeareth that he had authority over many pastors, and therefore over many congregations; for you will not deny but that every presbyter, that is minister of the word, had his several flock. This he declareth more evidently by the examples there used, of soldiers choosing their captain; for, though the captain before was a common soldier, yet now, being thus preferred, he ruleth and governeth the rest of the soldiers; even so, the bishop being before a minister equal with other, yet, being chosen to that degree, he is their guide and governor; a governor, I say, of those that did elect him, that is of priests or ministers, and therefore of divers congregations.

Idem ad
Evagr.

Ibidem.

Idem contra Lucifer.

This doth yet more evidently appear in these words of the same epistle: "That one was afterwards chosen to rule the rest, it was a remedy against schisms, lest every one, drawing to himself the church, should break the same²." And, in his book contra Luciferianos, he saith that, "except the chief authority were given to one, tot essent schismata quot sacerdotes: there would be as many schisms as priests³." By which places it is certain that Jerome's meaning is to have some one in a province or diocese over the rest (properly called a bishop), who should have chief authority, lest every man, in his own several parish being permitted to do what he list, might in the end fill the church with schisms, ut tot essent schismata quot sacerdotes. And surely it is impossible to expound Jerome otherwise.

But you ask me, "what this helpeth for the archbishop, &c.?" Very much. For, if it be so necessary to have one bishop over divers priests in every several diocese, for the avoiding of schism and contention, it is also necessary in every province to have an archbishop for the direction of divers bishops, and the avoiding of schism among them. And therefore saith Jerome again in his epistle ad Rusticum Monachum: "Every ecclesiastical order is subject to her governors⁴." Hier. ad Rusticum.

[¹ Id. ad Evagr. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 303. See before, page 222, note 3.]

[² Id. ibid. See before, page 222, note 3.]

[³ Id. adv. Lucifer. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 295. See before, page 222, note 5.]

You ask, "what could have been brought more strong to pull down the archbishop out of his throne than that which Jerome saith there, when he affirmeth that the bishop of the obscurest village or hamlet hath as great authority and dignity as the bishop of Rome?" I answer that this nothing at all derogateth from the archbishop. For it is not denied but that every bishop and every minister are equal quoad ministerium, but not quoad ordinem et politiam; and this is that which Jerome saith, *Ejusdem sunt meriti et sacerdotii*⁵: "They be of the same merit and priesthood," that is, their ministry and office in preaching the word and administering the sacraments is all one; and their authority also toward such as were under their jurisdiction. But he doth not say that one bishop hath not more ample and large jurisdiction than the other; for the contrary of that is manifest. And in St Jerome's time there were metropolitans, archbishops, &c.; as you may read in the Defence of the Apology⁶, Edit. 2. pa. 121. Metropolitans, &c. in Jerome his time.

These obscure towns do derogate nothing from the authority of a bishop; for we see it oftentimes come to pass, that the bishop's seat is often in⁷ obscure towns; as it is in divers places of England: and yet is the bishop's jurisdiction in his diocese no whit the less. If we respect the places, Canterbury is far inferior to London. And therefore Jerome's meaning is that the place neither addeth anything or taketh anything away from the worthiness, authority, and office of a bishop. Wheresoever a bishop is, in city or in town, he is of the same authority and worthiness.

Erasmus in his Scholies upon that epistle of Jerome hath these words: Certe metropolitanus habet aliquid dignitatis, Erasmus.

[⁴ ... et omnis ordo ecclesiasticus suis rectoribus nititur.—Id. ad Rustic. Monach. Epist. xcv. Tom. II. Pars II. col. 775.]

[⁵ Ubiquumque fuerit episcopus...ejusdem meriti, ejusdem est et sacerdotii.—Id. ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 803.]

[⁶ See Bp. Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. III. p. 292.]

[⁷ Is but in, Def. A.]

§c.¹: "Surely the metropolitan hath some dignity and jurisdiction above the other bishops; therefore that he here maketh the bishops of base cities equal with the rest, it is to be referred unto the deacons, which in some places were preferred before the ministers, whom he doth in a manner make equal with bishops. And in another place he saith that the ministers succeed into the place of the apostles, the bishop into the place of Christ. In this thing therefore are bishops and ministers equal, that, wheresoever they are, they are to be preferred before deacons." Here Erasmus speaketh in good earnest, howsoever he jested before. He sheweth that these obscure villages or hamlets (as you term them) were cities, and no doubt as good as either Ely or Peterborough; but, in the respect of Rome, contemptible, as these be in respect of London. And yet the bishops of every one of them ejusdem meriti et sacerdotii: "of the same merit, priesthood, and authority." Erasmus also here telleth in what respect he hath made this comparison betwixt bishops and other ministers, in the respect of deacons. For both bishops and priests are to be preferred equally before deacons, because of their ministry and office, which is above the office of a deacon. Nam ex diacono ordinatur presbyter: "For a minister or priest is made of a deacon," not *ex presbytero diaconus*²: "the deacon of the priest." It is most evident (neither can it be so unknown unto you) that Jerome in all these places meaneth to have one bishop governor of many priests. And therefore this interpretation of yours is without all probability, or shadow of truth, that "Hierome's meaning is to have such a bishop in every town."

The shift of T. C. in his answer to Hierome.

I trust the reader will note with what vain reasons you first went about to shake the credit of this writer; then, how without reason you took upon you to answer his reasons; and now, in the end, how impossible an interpretation you feign

[¹ Certe metropolitanus habet aliquid dignitatis, et jurisdictionis supra reliquos episcopos. Itaque quod hic æquat humilium urbium episcopos cum aliis, ad diaconos est referendum: qui nonnullis locis præferebantur presbyteris, quos propemodum æquat episcopis. Et alicubi dicit, presbyteros in apostolorum vicem succedere, episcopum in locum Christi. In hoc igitur æquales sunt episcopi et presbyteri, quod, ubicunque sunt, diaconis sint præferendi.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1534. Erasm. Schol. in Epist. ad Evagr. Tom. II. fol. 117. 2.]

[² Aut igitur ex presbytero ordinatur diaconus, ut presbyter minor diacono comprobetur, in quem crescit ex parvo: aut si ex diacono ordinatur presbyter, noverit se lucris minorem, sacerdotio esse majorem.—Id. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 803.]

of his words; which if he well consider, he shall note in you great audacity, small judgment, and no truth. For the author is of great learning and worthiness, his reasons strong, and his words plain and evident, for the authority of the bishop over the rest of the clergy³.

Chapter iii. The Fortieth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 71, Sect. 2, 3.

Chrysostom, writing upon the twentieth of Matthew, saith that “the rebellious nature of man caused these distinctions of degrees, that one should be an apostle, another a bishop, another a minister, another a layman.” And that, “unless there were such distinctions of persons, there could be no discipline⁴.” Chrysostom.

And upon the xiii. to the Romans he saith that, “because equality engendereth strife and contention, therefore superiority and degrees of persons were appointed⁵.”

[ And in the xiii. ad Hebr., expounding these words, Parete his qui præsunt vobis, &c. (which both he and all other writers understand of bishops), saith that there be three evils which overthrow the church and all other societies: the first is to have no superior, none to rule; the second, to have many disobedient; the third, to have evil rulers. The first he proveth by divers examples, as by a quire which is without a chanter, an army of soldiers without a captain, a ship without a master, a flock of sheep without a shepherd; as it may in that place more at large be seen¹. ².

[³ Cartwright rejoins at very great length to this division, maintaining that Whitgift cannot “prove that the bishop had any further reach than unto one only church.” He adds, however, “I will not deny but in Jerome’s times the bishops upon occasions before of me alleged had enlarged their bounds in such sort, that there were certain congregations which belonged to their oversight, and whereof they were called bishops. But I appeal first,” he goes on, “to the institution of God, and use of the purer times after the apostles: and then I answer, that a diocese was not the twentieth part of that which they have now. &c.”—Sec. Repl. pp. 593, &c.]

[⁴ Quod autem in hoc sæculo differentia dignitatis facta est inter sanctos, dignitatis dico, non sanctitatis, ut alter quidem sit apostolus, alter autem episcopus, vel minister, vel laicus: contumacia carnis coëgit, ... nisi ergo sint quos timeant, solvitur disciplina.—Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. Op. Imp. in Matt. Hom. xxxv. ex cap. xx. Tom. VI. p. cliii.]

[⁵ Ἐπειδὴ γὰρ τὸ ὁμότιμον μάχην πολλάκις εἰσάγει, πολλὰς ἐποίησε τὰς ἀρχὰς καὶ τὰς ὑποταγὰς, κ. τ. λ.—Id. in Epist. ad Rom. Hom. xxiii. Tom. IX. p. 686.]

T. C. Page 83, Sect. 1.

What is that to the purpose, that Chrysostom saith there must be degrees? Who denieth that there are degrees of functions? We confess there is, and ought to be, a degree of pastors, another of doctors, the third of those which are called elders, the fourth of deacons. And, where he saith, there should be "one degree of bishop, another of a minister, another of the layman," what proveth that for the office of an archbishop, which is your purpose to shew? How oftentimes must you be called ad Rhombum? And that he meaneth nothing less than to make any such difference between a bishop and a minister, as is with us, which you would fain make your reader believe, I will send you to Chrysostom, upon the third chapter 1. Epistle to Timothy; where he saith: "The office of a bishop differeth little or nothing from an elder's;" and, a little after, that "a bishop differeth nothing from an elder or minister but by the ordination only." Still M. Doctor goeth forward in killing a dead man, that is, in confuting that which all men condemn, and proving that which no man denieth; that there must be superiority amongst men, and that equality of all men alike confoundeth all and overthroweth all.

It proveth that there are degrees among ministers of the word;
which you deny.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Chrysostom in that place maketh degrees in the ministry, and placeth the bishop in degree above the minister; which utterly overthroweth your equality. As for your distinction of degrees, it hath as small ground in the scripture to warrant it as can be; and indeed it is but your own invention. For the pastor, doctor, and elder in office are all one; as the most and best writers think. Howsoever it is, you have them not thus distinguished in the scripture, that the pastor should be first, the doctor next, the elder third, and the deacon last; and it is strange that you will invent a new order of ministers, without the express warrant of God's word, misliking the same so much in other.

[¹ Κακὸν μὲν ἡ ἀναρχία πανταχοῦ, καὶ πολλῶν ὑπόθεσις συμφορῶν, καὶ ἀρχὴ ἀταξίας καὶ συγχύσεως· μάλιστα δὲ ἐν ἐκκλησίᾳ τοσοῦτον ἐπισφαλές-
τέρα ἐστίν, ὥσον καὶ τὸ τῆς ἀρχῆς μείζον καὶ ὑψηλότερον. ὥσπερ γάρ, ἀν χοροῦ τὸν κορυφαῖον ἀνέλῃς, οὐχὶ κατὰ μέλος καὶ κατὰ τάξιν ὁ χορὸς ἔσται, καὶ φάλαγγος στρατοπέδου τὸν στρατηγὸν ἀν ἀποστήσης, οὐκ ἐτι ρυθμῷ καὶ τάξει τὰ τῆς παρατάξεως ἔσται, καὶ πλοίου τὸν κυβερνήτην ἐὰν περιέλῃς, καταδύσεις τὸ σκάφος· οὕτω καὶ ποιμνίου τὸν ποιμένα ἐὰν ἀποστήσης, πάντα ἀνέτρεψας καὶ ἡφάνισας. κακὸν μὲν οὖν ἡ ἀναρχία, καὶ ἀνατροπῆς ὑπόθεσις.
κακὸν δὲ οὐχ ἦττον καὶ ἡ ἀπειθεια τῶν ἀρχομένων...ἀλλ' ἵσως ἐρεῖ τις ἡμῖν, ὅτι ἐστὶ καὶ τρίτον κακὸν, ὅταν ὁ ἀρχων ἢ κακός.—Id. in Epist. ad Hebr. cap.
xiii. Hom. xxxiv. Tom. XII. p. 311.]

[² This paragraph is inserted from Answ. 2.]

This superiority that Chrysostom talketh of overthroweth that part of the Admonition that I confute; for they do not only disallow the office of the archbishop, but of the bishop also, and would have a mere equality among the ministers: this I refel, as well as the other; and indeed the overthrow of this is the overthrow of the other. And therefore this place of Chrysostom serveth my turn very well, and aptly.

Chrysostom, upon that iii. chapter of the first to Timothy, giveth as much superiority to the bishop as I do, and maketh as much difference betwixt him and the minister; for I grant that quoad ministerium they be all one, but that there be degrees of dignity; and so saith Chrysostom, that “there is little difference betwixt a bishop and a priest;” but that a bishop hath authority to ordain priests, and all other things that the bishop may do the priest also may do, that excepted³; so that Chrysostom here speaketh only of the ministry of the bishop, not of his authority in the ecclesiastical government; for of that he spake in the place before alleged, where he saith that “there is one degree of the bishop, and another of the minister, &c.⁴,” which distinction of degrees was long before Chrysostom’s time, as I have declared. In xx. Matth.

To prove these degrees of superiority among ministers is to prove that which both the Admonition and you “deny,” and which is the ground of this controversy; and therefore I have not herein gone about to “kill a dead man,” except you count the ground of your assertion “dead.”

If “there must be superiority amongst men, and that equality of all men alike confoundeth all and overthroweth” (as you confess, and is most true), then equality of ministers confoundeth all among them; and therefore it is requisite that in that state also there be superiors to avoid confusion; which being granted, what have you to say, either against archbishops or bishops, except you have some new device of your own? which is not unlike, because nothing doth please you but your own.

[³ “Οτι οὐ πολὺν μέσον αὐτῶν [πρεσβυτέρων] καὶ τῶν ἐπισκόπων...τῇ γὰρ χειροτονίᾳ μόνῃ ὑπερβεβήκασι, καὶ τοῦτω μόνον δοκοῦσι πλεονεκτεῖν τοὺς πρεσβυτέρους.—Id. in 1. Epist. ad Tim. cap. iii. Hom. xi. Tom. XI. p. 604.]

[⁴ See before, page 259, note 4.]

Chapter iii. The Forty-first Division.

T. C. Page 83, Sect. 2.

This is a notable argument: There must be some superior amongst¹ men; ergo, one minister must be superior to another: again: There must be in the ecclesiastical functions some degrees; ergo, there must be an archbishop over the whole province, or a bishop over the whole diocese. And, albeit M. Doctor taketh great pain to prove that which no man denieth, yet he doth it so evil-favouredly and so unfitly, as that, if a man had no better proofs than he bringeth, the degrees of the ecclesiastical functions might fall to the ground. For here, to prove the degrees of the ecclesiastical functions, he bringeth in that that Chrysostom saith there must be magistrate and subject, him that commandeth and him that obeyeth.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Superiority convenient among ministers.

Chrysost.

The argument is good, and followeth very well. For, as superiority and government is necessary in all other states and degrees of men, so is it in the ministry also; for ministers be not angels, nor they are not of that perfection that they may safely be left in their own absolute government. That which Chrysostom in this place speaketh of government in the civil state, the same doth he speak in the xiii. to the Hebrews of the ecclesiastical in like manner; for, expounding these words, Parete his qui præsunt vobis, &c., which is understood of bishops, he saith that there be three evils which overthrow the church and all other societies. The first whereof is to have no superior, none to rule; and this he proveth by divers examples, as of a quire without a chanter, an army of soldiers without a captain, a ship without a master, a flock of sheep without a shepherd². Now, if superiority be so needful among the clergy, then why may not one bishop be over one diocese, and one archbishop over one province? Wherefore I conclude thus: It is necessary that among the clergy some should be in authority over the rest; and therefore there may be both archbishops and bishops. But I know you will answer that there may be government without these degrees: then say I unto you again, Stand not so much in your own conceit: this order is most ancient in the church, it is confirmed by the best and noblest councils, it is allowed by the best-learned fathers, it hath the pattern from the practice of the apostles (all which hath been shewed before), it is most meet for this state and kingdom; and therefore be not wilful in a new device, the trial whereof was never as yet, the manner whereof is unknown to yourself³, and the end no doubt mere confusion. Your well-favoured and fit speeches, together with your accustomed contempt, I omit here, as I do in other places.

[¹ Among, Repl. 2.]

[² Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-33. In Epist. ad Hebr. cap. xiii. Hom. xxxiv. Tom. XII. p. 311. See before, page 260, note 1.]

Chapter iii. The Forty-second Division.

T. C. Page 83, Sect. 3.

The most therefore that he can conclude of this, for the ministry, is that there must be minister that shall rule and people that shall be obedient; and hereby he cannot prove that there should be any degrees amongst the ministers and ecclesiastical governors, unless he will say, peradventure, that, as there are under-magistrates and a king above them all, so there should be under-ministers, and one minister above all⁴. But he must remember that it is not necessary in a commonwealth that there should be one over all; for that there are other good commonwealths, wherein many have like power and authority. And further, if, because there is one king in a land above all, he will conclude there should be one⁵ archbishop over all, I say, as I have said, that it is not against any word of God which I know (although it be inconvenient) but that there may be one Caesar over all the world; and yet I think M. Doctor will not say that there may be one archbishop over all the world.

Note this suspicious speech of the kind of government.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Yes, I will conclude that there ought to be degrees of superiority among the ministers also, because they labour of imperfections as well as other men do, and especially of pride, arrogance, vain-glory, which engender schisms, heresies, contentions; as the examples of all times and ages even from the apostles to this time declare.

Why there ought to be superiority among ministers as well as other.

I am persuaded that the external government of the church under a christian magistrate must be according to the kind and form of government used in the commonwealth; else how can you make the prince supreme governor of all states and causes ecclesiastical⁶? will you so divide the govern-

The government of the church in a christian commonwealth ought to be according to the form therein used.

[³ You self, Def. B.]

[⁴ Above them all, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ None, Repl. 1.]

[⁶ "His reason ('the prince cannot else be supreme governor of all estates and causes ecclesiastical'), to say no more, is senseless, and hath no knot with that whereunto it belongeth."—Sec. Repl. p. 604.]

ment of the church from the government of the commonwealth, that, the one being a monarchy, the other must be a democracy, or an aristocracy? This were to divide one realm into two, and to spoil the prince of the one half of her jurisdiction and authority. If you will therefore have the queen of England rule as monarch over all her dominions, then must you also give her leave to use one kind and form of government in all and every part of the same, and so to govern the church in ecclesiastical affairs as she doth the commonwealth in civil.

T. C. speaketh suspiciously of government.

But you say that I “must remember that it is not necessary in a commonwealth that there should be one over all;” and I say that you must remember that in this commonwealth it is necessary that one should be over all, except you will transform as well the state of the kingdom as you would of the church; which is not unlike to be your meaning; for not long after you add that the “commonwealth must be framed according to the church, as the hangings to the house, and the government thereof with her government, &c.; and not contrary¹,” meaning that the government of the commonwealth ought not to be monarchical, but either democratical, or aristocratical, because (as you say) the government of the church ought to be such. What this in time will breed in this commonwealth, especially when it cometh to the understanding of the people, who naturally are so desirous of innovations, I refer it to the judgment of those that can and ought best to consider it.

The unlikeliness that is betwixt “one Cæsar being over all the world,” and of “one archbishop being over all the world,” I have shewed before: they be most unlike; and yet this is but a frivolous and vain supposition; and M. Calvin, in his Inst. cap. viii. sect. 96., doth say that it is absurdissimum: “most absurd².”

[¹ See Tract. xvii. Chap. ii. Div. 17.]

[² Verum sit sane, ut volunt, bonum atque utile, orbem totum monarchia contineri: quod est tamen absurdissimum. sed ita sit: non tamen propterea concedam idipsum in ecclesiæ gubernatione valere.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 9. Tom. IX. p. 296.]

Chapter iii. The Forty-third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 71, Sect. 4.

It is not to be denied but that there is an equality of all ministers of God's word quoad ministerium: "touching the ministry;" for they have all like power to preach the word, to minister the sacraments: that is to say, the word preached, or the sacraments ministered, is as effectual in one (in respect of the ministry) as it is in another. But, quoad ordinem et politiam: "touching order and government," there always hath been and must be degrees and superiority among them. For the church of God is not a confused congregation, but ruled and directed as well by discipline and policy in matters of regiment, as by the word of God in matters of faith.

Equality among ministers touching ministry.

T. C. Page 84, Sect. 1, 2.

Now M. Doctor cometh to his old hole, where he would fain hide himself, and with him all the ambition, tyranny, and excess of authority which is joined with these functions of archbishop and bishop, as they are now used; and this his hole is that all the ministers are equal with bishops and archbishops, as touching the ministry of the word and sacraments, but not as touching policy and government. The papists use the very self-same distinction for the maintenance of the pope's tyranny and ambition, and other their hierarchy.

This distinction is allowed of those that be far from papistry.

M. Doctor hath put out the mark and concealed the name of the papists, and so with a little change of words, as it were with certain new colours, he would deceive us. For the papists say that every sir John or hedge-priest hath as great authority to sacrifice and offer for the quick and the dead, and to minister the sacraments, as the pope of Rome hath, but for government and for order the bishop is above a priest, the archbishop above a bishop, and the pope above them all. But I have declared before out of the scriptures, how vain a distinction it is; and it appeareth out of Cyprian that, as all the bishops were equal one to another, so he saith that "to every one was given a portion of the Lord's flock," not only to feed with the word and sacraments, but "to rule and govern," not as they which shall make any account unto an archbishop, or be judged of him, but as they which cannot be judged of any but of God⁴. And Jerome upon Titus saith that the elder or minister did govern and rule, in common with the bishops, the church whereof he was elder or minister⁵.

You have not yet declared it, neither can you.

But you conceal that which followeth.

[³ In what respect there is equality among ministers, Answ. 2.]

[⁴ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. lix. p. 136. See before, page 208, note 1.]

[⁵ See next page, note 4.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

The distinction quoad ministerium, and quoad ordinem, justified. Calvin.

Beza. Lib. Conf. cap. vii. Art. 12.

In the 72. division of this chapter.

Hier. ad Tit. i.

The distinction is good and true, allowed of the best writers; though the papists wrongfully apply it. M. Calvin, upon the 2. Cor. x., hath the same distinction. Quamvis ... (saith he) *commune sit omnibus verbi ministris idemque officium, sunt tamen honoris gradus*¹: "Although there is one office common to all the ministers of the word, yet are there degrees of honour." M. Beza likewise, Lib. Conf. cap. vii., saith thus: "That pastors in process of time were distinct into metropolitans, bishops, and those we now call curates, it was not in the respect of the ministry of the word, but rather in respect of jurisdiction and discipline. Therefore concerning the office of preaching the word and administrating the sacraments there is no difference betwixt archbishops, bishops, and curates. &c."² The same distinction doth Hemingius use in his *Enchiridion*³; as shall be seen hereafter. What say you now? is this a starting-"hole," or rather a true distinction, allowed by such as are far from papistry? except you will accuse M. Calvin and Beza for papists. You are not able to improve this distinction with all the learning you boast of; and bitterness of words will not carry away the matter.

You "have declared" nothing tending to the improving "of this distinction;" and the words both of Cyprian and of Hierome do manifestly confirm it; for they both would have one chief among the ministers to govern the rest, as it is said before. You deal corruptly in reciting Hierome's words; for you have left out his purpose and meaning: I will set them down as they be indeed: *Idem est ergo presbyter, &c.*⁴: "Wherefore the minister and bishop are all one; and, before that

[¹ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. II. ad Corinth. cap. x. v. 8. Tom. VII. p. 261.]

[² Nam quod pastores temporis progressu distincti sunt in metropolitas, episcopos, et quos nunc vocant curatos, id est singulis parœciis præfectos, id minime factum est respectu ministerii verbi, sed potius habita ecclesiasticæ jurisdictionis ac disciplinæ ratione. Itaque quod attinet ad verbi prædicandi munus, et sacramentorum administrationem, nullum est inter archiepiscopos, episcopos, et curatos discrimen.—Th. Bezae Confess. Christ. Fid. Genev. 1587. cap. vii. 12. p. 238.]

[³ ... in ministris magna est diversitas. Quanquam enim potestas omnium eadem est ministrorum, quantum ad spirituales jurisdictionem attinet...tamen disparēs dignitatis ordines et gradus sunt.—N. Hemming. Opusc. Theol. 1586. Enchir. Theol. Class. III. cap. x. col. 459.]

[⁴ Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Comm. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Tom. IV. Pars I. col. 413. See before, pages 221, 2, note 5.]

through the instinct of the devil there were divisions in religion, and that it was said among the people, I hold of Paul, I of Apollo, and I of Cephas, the churches were ruled in common by the council of the ministers; but, after that every one accounted those whom he baptized to be his, and not Christ's, it was decreed throughout the whole world, that one being chosen from among the ministers should be placed over the rest, to whom the whole care of the church should appertain, and the seeds of schisms be taken away." Will you not leave off to deal thus guilefully with your reader? have you no care to deal plainly and simply? Jerome in that place verifieth this distinction, and sheweth that it was for order and policy, that among the ministers there was one bishop appointed, ad quem omnis ecclesiæ cura pertineret, et schismatum semina tollerentur. And what can be spoken more directly to the purpose? But one thing here I note, that you would be controlled of none but of God, that is, you would be exempted from all authority of man, even as the pope himself is.

Chapter iii. The Forty-fourth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 72, Lin. 4.

And therefore well saith M. Calvin, in his Institutions, cap. viii.: "That the twelve apostles had one among them to govern the rest, it was no marvel; for nature requireth it, and the disposition of man will so have it, that in every company (although they be all equal in power) yet that there be one as governor, by whom the rest may be directed: there is no court without a consul, no senate without a prætor, no college without a president, no society without a master⁵." Hæc Calvin.

Calvin alloweth superiority.

T. C. Page 84, Sect. 3.

After followeth M. Calvin, a great patron forsooth of the archbishop, or of this kind of bishop, which is used amongst us here in England. And here to pass over your strange citations and quotations which you make, to put your answerer to pain, sending him sometimes to Musculus' Common-places for one sentence, to Augustine's works, to Chrysostom's works, to Cyril, to M. Fox, and here sending him to the viii. chapter of the Insti-

[⁵ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 3. Tom. IX. p. 296. See before, page 231, note 5.]

As though you know not that there are divers editions of his Institutions.

tutions, as though you had never read Calvin's Institutions, but took the sentence of somebody else, without any examination; whereby it seemeth that you were loth that ever any man should answer your book—letting, I say, all this pass, what maketh this either to prove that there should be one archbishop over all the ministers in the province, or one bishop over all in the diocese, that amongst twelve that were gathered together into one place there was one which ruled the action for which they met?

JO. WHITGIFT.

A practice worthy the noting.

This is to be observed throughout your whole book, as I have noted in other places, that, when any authority is alleged that pincheth you, then you fall to cavilling by and by. I have nowhere referred you to "Justinian's code," to "Gratian's decrees," to "Augustine's works," to "divers councils," to "Theodoret," to the "Centuries," &c., without noting either book, chapter, distinction, number, canon, or such like, as you usually deal with me; and yet these be far more tedious to read over than is the viii. chap. of Calvin's Institutions. I do not remember that I referred you to Augustine, Chrysostom, or any other writers, for any matter in controversy (Cyril, Musculus, and M. Fox only in one place excepted), but I quoted the places as particularly as I could¹. And why will you then so untruly report of me? undoubtedly I never read a book, for the quantity of it, so pestered with slanderous reports, false accusations, and contentious deriding speeches, as this your book is. But let it go.

Divers editions of Calvin's Institutions.

This book of Institutions, which is distinguished into chapters and not into books, I read and noted through before you (as it should seem) knew whether there were any such book or no; and, because I have laboured in it, noted it, and am well acquainted with it, therefore I use it, and follow it, and so will I do still; neither are you ignorant, I am sure, that there be sundry editions of those Institutions², although you seem to dissemble the matter in this place, I might say of purpose (for you have answered after your manner places before, out of the same book quoted in like manner), but let it be of ignorance, you take occasion by it to utter your cynical rhetoric but to your own shame.

[¹ "Touching Augustine; that he was so alleged appeareth first, page 583 (an error for 581, see Tract. XIII. Chap. iii. Div. 1), and both he and Chrysostom, page 296 (see before, page 75). Where he saith he used that large quotation only once in Muscul. Cyril. and M. Fox; he could hardly do it oftener in the two last, considering that, as I remember, he allegeth them once only; but touching Muscul. beside the place I charge him with, he left his adversary twice to his wide works. &c."—Sec. Repl. p. 605.]

[² The edition Whitgift used was that of 1553.]

The place alleged maketh much for my purpose; for it proveth superiority to have been among the apostles, and therefore that it may be among ministers; which you deny, and I affirm; which also being granted (as it cannot be denied), whatsoever I affirm either of archbishops or bishops will soon be proved. But let us hear the proof of this new device of yours in soluting this, and such like places, that one "ruled the action, &c."

Chapter iii. The Forty-fifth Division.

T. C. Page 84, Sect. 2.

And, that it may appear what superiority it is which is lawful amongst the ministers, and what it is that M. Calvin speaketh of, what also the fathers and councils do mean, when they give more to the bishop of any one church than to the elder of the same church, and that no man be deceived by the name of governor, or ruler over the rest, to fancy any such authority and domination or lordship, as we see used in our church, it is to be understood that, amongst the pastors, elders, and deacons of every particular church, and in the meetings and companies of the ministers or elders of divers churches, there was one chosen by the voices and suffrages of them all, or the most part, which did propound the matters that were to be handled, whether they were difficulties to be soluted, or punishments and censures to be decreed upon those which had faulted, or whether there were elections to be made, or what other matter soever occasion was given to entreat of, the which also gathered the voices and reasons of those which had interest to speak in such cases, which also did pronounce according to the number of the voices which were given, which was also the mouth of the rest, to admonish, or to comfort, or to rebuke sharply, such as were to receive admonishment, consolation, or rebuke, and which, in a word, did moderate that whole action, which was done for the time they were assembled. Which thing we do not deny may be, but affirm that it is fit and necessary to be, to the avoiding of confusion.

This is a device never heard³ of before.

JO. WHITGIFT.

All this is spoken of your own head, and a device without proof or reason as yet, and contrary to the testimonies of all histories, councils, and fathers, affirmed by no learned writer; as it may appear by that which I have hitherto alleged out of the canons attributed to the apostles, the council also of Nice, Antioch, Arelat., Carthage, Chalcedon, likewise out of Cyprian, Eusebius, Epiphanius, Athanasius, Gregory Nazian., Ambrose, Jerome, Socrates, Sozom., Theodoret, Calvin, Illyricus¹. All which manifestly declare that the office of an archbishop and jurisdiction of a bishop is permanent, and affixed to certain places, not moveable, nor during one action only. And, undoubtedly, I marvel what urgeth you to such absurd and unlearned paradoxes, unless it be ignorance and lack of reading. But let us hear your reasons.

[³ Hard, Def. A. and B.]

Chapter iii. The Forty-sixth Division.

T. C. Page 84, Sect. 3.

A needless
proof.

For it were an absurd hearing that many should at once attempt to speak. Neither could it be done without great reproach that, many men beginning to speak, some should be bidden to hold their peace; which would come to pass if there should be no order kept, nor none to appoint when every one should speak or not, to put them to silence when they attempted confusedly to speak and out of order. Moreover, when many ministers meet together, and in so great diversity of gifts as the Lord hath given to his church, there be found that excel in memory, facility of tongue, and expedition or quickness to dispatch matters more than the rest; and therefore it is fit that the brethren, that have that dexterity, should especially be preferred unto this office, that the action may be the better and more speedily made an end of.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Surely and your device of salving it is as absurd; for there would be as great contention at such elections as there is confusion in the former equality; and the rather because there is none to direct them therein. For who shall call them together before this election be made? where shall they meet? who shall declare unto them the cause of their meeting? or what remedy if they cannot agree of some one that hath this dexterity, but are drawn into divers parts, some thinking one most meet, and some another, other some the third, &c.? How if there be sects and schisms among them, as there is at this time? an hundred inconveniences are there in this device of yours; and, to tell you the truth, it may be used in places where there is no government, no laws, no form of a commonwealth, no order; but in a kingdom, in a church under civil government, in a place of order, &c., it is the very highway to subversion and confusion.

[¹ See before, pages 158, & c.]

Chapter iii. The Forty-seventh Division.

T. C. Page 85, Sect. 1.

And, if any man will call this a rule or presidentship, and him that executeth this office a president or moderator, or a governor, we will not strive, so that it be with these cautions, that he be not called simply governor or moderator, but governor or moderator of that action, and for that time, and subject to the orders that others be, and to be censured by the company of the brethren, as well as others, if he be judged any way faulty. And that, after that action ended, and meeting dissolved, he sit him down in his old place, and set himself in equal estate with the rest of the ministers. Thirdly, that this government or presidentship, or whatsoever like name you will give it, be not so tied unto that minister, but that at the next meeting it shall be lawful to take another, if another be thought meet.

And what scripture have you for this?

JO. WHITGIFT.

These cautions are meet for such a device, and apt for a tumultuous company and a congregation of proud and arrogant persons that cannot abide any superiority or government. This I am well assured of; and it is evident both by that which is already spoken, and that which is to be said hereafter, that there can neither pattern nor form be found of it in any church since the apostles' time, recorded in any writer of credit, but the clean contrary; for ecclesiastical writers do both call bishops "governors simply," and manifestly also declare that their office of government was not for one action only, but during their life, or, at the least, during their continuance in that seat or bishopric; and it is plain, by that which I have said before, that the office of the metropolitan (which was to call synods, and to moderate them, to ordain bishops, or, at the least, to consent thereunto, to suppress schisms, and such like) was affixed to the place and bishop of the same, as to Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, &c. This do all the old canons declare; as the 6. and 7. canon of the council of Nice², the 9. of the council of Antioch³, and the Bishops, governors simply, not of one action only.

The office of the metropolitan fixed to a place.

[² Concil. Nic. cans. 6, 7, in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 32. See before, page 144, notes 1, 2.]

[³ Concil. Antioch. can. 9. ibid. col. 565. See before, page 146, note 1.]

5. of the general council of Constantinople¹, the 12. of the second council of Carthage², the 21. *Concilii Milevitani*³, the 11. of the general council of Chalcedon⁴; to be short, all these testimonies and examples alleged of me before out of Cyprian, &c., and the continual practice of the church. And therefore such new cautions here by you set down be only meet for such a strange and misshapen platform and kind of government as is by you and your faction devised.

Chapter iii. The Forty-eighth Division.

T. C. Page 85, Sect. 2, 3, 4.

Of this order and policy of the church, if we will see a lively image and perfect pattern, let us set before our eyes the most ancient and gospel-like church that ever was or shall be.

In the first of the Acts⁵, the church being gathered together for the election of an apostle into the place of Judas the traitor, when as the interest of election belonged unto all, and to the apostles especially above the rest, out of the whole company Peter riseth up, telleth the cause of their coming together, with what cautions and qualities they ought to choose another, conceiveth the prayer whereby the help of God in that election and his direction is begged, and no doubt executed the residue of the things which pertained unto the whole action.

In the ii. of the Acts, all the apostles are accused of drunkenness. Peter answered⁷ for them all, wipeth away the infamy they were charged with. But you will say, Where are the voices of the rest, which did choose Peter unto this? First, you must know that the scripture setteth not down every circumstance, and then surely you do Peter great injury that ask whether he were chosen unto it; for is it to be thought that Peter would thrust in himself to this office or dignity, without the consent and allowance of his fellows, and prevent his fellows of this pre-eminence? undoubtedly,

What is this but a mere conjecture, or rather an imagined answer of your own?

[¹ Τὸν μέντοι Κωνσταντινουπόλεως ἐπίσκοπον ἔχειν τὰ πρεσβεῖα τῆς τιμῆς μετὰ τὸν τῆς Ῥώμης ἐπίσκοπον, διὰ τὸ εἶναι αὐτὴν νέαν Ῥώμην.—Constant. Concil. can. 3. ibid. col. 947.]

[² Concil. Carthag. 11. can. 12. ibid. cols. 1162, 3. See before, page 159, note 12.]

[³ It will be sufficient to give the closing sentence of this canon: Si autem ille aliquam questionem retulerit, per episcopos judices causa finiatur, sive quos eis primates dederint, sive quos ipsi vicinos ex consultu primatis delegerint.—Concil. Milev. 11. can. 21. ibid. col. 1542.]

[⁴ The 9th canon is probably that intended; where we find: Εἰ δὲ πρὸς τὸν τῆς αὐτῆς ἐπαρχίας μητροπολίτην ἐπίσκοπος ἢ κληρικὸς ἀμφισβητοίῃ, καταλαμβάνετω ἢ τὸν ἑξάρχον τῆς διοικήσεως, ἢ τὸν τῆς βασιλευούσης Κωνσταντινουπόλεως θρόνον, καὶ ἐπ' αὐτῷ δικάζεσθω.—Conc. Chalced. Act. xv. can. 9. ibid. Tom. IV. col. 759.]

[⁵ In the Acts, Repl. 2.]

[⁶ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁷ Answereth, Repl. 1 and 2.]

if it had not been done arrogantly, yet it must needs have a great shew of arrogancy, if he had done this without the consent of his fellows. And here you shall hear what the scholiast saith which gathereth the judgment of Greek divines: ὅρα (speaking of Peter) πάντα μετὰ κοινῆς αὐτῶν γνώμης ποιοῦντα⁸: "Behold, how he doth all with their common consent." And, if any man hereupon will say that Peter exercised domination over the rest, or gat any arch-apostleship, beside that the whole story of the Acts of the Apostles and his whole course of life doth refute that, the same scholiast which I made mention of in the same place saith he did nothing ἀρχικῶς: "imperiously," nothing μετὰ ἐξουσίας: "with dominion or power:" further I will admonish him to take heed, lest if he strive so far⁹ for the archbishop, he slide or ever he be aware into the tents of the papists, which use these places to prove that Peter had authority and rule over the rest of the apostles.

This is not spoken of choosing Peter to be speaker, but of electing Matthias, which pertained not to Peter alone.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is a rod to beat yourself with; for it is evident, even by these words of yours, that your devise is most farthest from the apostolical form; for Peter in all such assemblies is the chief, speaketh the first and moderateth the rest; in which respect most of the old ecclesiastical writers count him the chief of the apostles; neither do the late writers dissent from them in that point; and yet is there no danger "of sliding into the papists' tents," who by this would prove the pope's supremacy, whose arguments you have used and I have confuted before.

Peter chief in apostolical assemblies.

To prevent subtilly that question which neither you do nor can answer, that is, where it is in scripture mentioned that, at every action, or at any time, Peter was chosen to speak before the rest, or to govern the action, you say that "first I must know that the scripture setteth not down every circumstance, and then that I do Peter great injury that ask whether he were chosen to it, &c." To the first, I answer that you ought to know how wicked and ungodly a thing it is to ground the alteration of any lawful kind of government so long continued, and in the best times of the church practised, upon your own fond device and conjectures, without any ground of scripture, yea, to make that your foundation which you cannot find in the whole scripture, but the clean contrary. For shew me one piece of a text that doth but insinuate Peter to have been at any time in any action

Peter not chosen in every action to be chief.

[⁸ Ὅρα δὲ πάντα κατὰ κοινῆς κ.τ.λ. καὶ οὐκ ἀρχικῶς οὐδὲ μετὰ ἐξουσίας.—Œcumen. Op. Lut. Par. 1631. Enarr. cap. ii. in Act. Apost. Tom. I. p. 10.]

[⁹ Sore, Repl. 1 and 2.]

chosen to direct the action; I can shew you the contrary, especially in the second of the Acts, where Peter suddenly answered with a notable apology, in the presence of the apostles, the accusation of drunkenness laid against him and them: neither can it be that he should expect the voices of the rest to choose him to be the chief for that time in that action.

Whosoever shall well consider the first of the Acts, and the xv., and other places where mention is made of Peter's speaking, as he shall perceive that this was Peter's peculiar office, and always appertaining unto him from the ascension of Christ to his dying day, so shall he also easily understand that he was not at any time chosen to that office by voices, much less at every particular meeting or singular action. And dare you presume upon vain conjectures, without warrant of scripture, to build the foundation of your kind of government, which you before said is a matter of faith and salvation? Is not this to open a way to unwritten verities and fantastical interpretations? If your words be of such weight with the reader, that because you speak them therefore he will believe them, per me licebit; but this I will assure him of, that he shall believe that that is neither grounded upon scripture, nor any learned or ancient authority.

To the second, that is, that I "do Peter great injury, &c.," I say that I do him no injury at all when I affirm that of him that the scripture doth, and presume not of mine own brain for the maintaining of an evil cause to imagine that of him which I have myself devised besides the word of God; as you do most manifestly.

Peter did not "thrust himself into any office or dignity," which was not appointed unto him by God, neither did he otherwise use himself therein than his office and duty required; and it is impiety thus to dally and trifle in God's matters. We are well assured in scripture that Peter did this and had this pre-eminence; and therefore you must know that he was lawfully called unto it, and did lawfully execute it.

The scholiast playeth not the part which is laid upon him.

The Greek scholiast saith that Peter in such assemblies did conclude nothing without the consent of the rest; the which also the scripture itself doth plainly declare. But the Greek scholiast nowhere saith that Peter was at every assembly or at any time chosen by the voices of the rest, to speak first, and to moderate the action; which is your assertion. For, in the place by you cited, he speaketh not of the election of Peter to his prolocutorship, but of the choosing of Matthias to the apostleship; wherein Peter took not that pre-eminence to himself to appoint him alone, but communicated the matter with the rest of the disciples. So that you have either wittingly or ignorantly applied the scholiast to a wrong matter.

It is true that "Peter did nothing imperiously, nothing with dominion or power:" no more doth any man that executeth lawful jurisdiction, and governeth by law, equity, and order, no, not the king himself; for in superiority there is humility, and in rule and authority there is servitude; as I have before shewed in the exposition of the places in the xx. of Matth., xxii. Luke, &c.¹ And yet doth the Greek scholiast in the same place say that "Peter rose up, and not James, as being more fervent, καὶ ὡς τὴν προστάσιν τῶν μαθητῶν ἐγκεχειρισμένος²:" and as having received the presidentship of the apostles." Your admonishment of "falling into the tents of the papists," how necessary it is for yourself, which use their manner of reasoning upon this example of Peter, and upon devised interpretations of the scripture, I have touched before. As for myself, I refuse no warning. But I trust it is not so necessary; for I know what they have said, and what they can say in that matter³.

Tract. i.

Chapter iii. The Forty-ninth Division.

T. C. Page 85, Sect. 4.

And, that it may be understood that this moderate rule, void of all pomp and outward shew, was not perpetual, nor all was tied⁴ unto one man, which were the last points of the cautions I put before, turn unto the xv. of the Acts; where is shewed how, with the rest of the church, the apostles, and amongst them Peter, being assembled, decide⁶ a great controversy, James the apostle, and not Peter, moderated and governed the whole action, when as, after other had said their judg-

This maketh against yourself; as will appear.

[¹ See Vol. I. pages 148, &c.]

[² Ἀνίσταται ὁ Πέτρος οὐχ ὁ Ἰάκωβος, καὶ ὡς θερμότερος, καὶ ὡς κ. τ. λ. —Ecumen. Op. Lut. Par. 1631. Enarr. cap. ii. in Act. Apost. Tom. I. pp. 9, 10.]

[³ In his reply to this division, Cartwright accuses Whitgift that, "although he have never a spur of argument either to defend himself, or to offend his adversary, yet" he "croweth as high as if the mastery were in his hand;" and calls his reasoning "ridiculous," smelling "of anabaptistry," &c.—Sec. Repl. pp. 607, &c.]

[⁴ Nor always tied, Repl. 2.]

[⁵ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁶ Assembled to decide, Repl. 2.]

ments, and namely Paul and Barnabas, and Peter, he, in the end, in the name of all, pronounced the sentence, and that whereof the rest agreed, and had disputed unto; and the residue rested in that judgment; the which also may likewise appear in the xxi. of the Acts. Acts xxi. 20.¹

JO. WHITGIFT.

Peter moderator so long as the apostles remained together.

Acts xv.

The office of the speaker or moderator.

It is evident, by the story of the Acts of the Apostles, that this function remained to Peter so long as the apostles continued together, and that he did execute the same whensoever they met; and therefore it is untrue that this office was not "tied to one man:" the xv. of the Acts helpeth you nothing: for even there Peter keepeth his accustomed manner in making the first oration²; and in that place it may appear that he did it as chief in that assembly; for the text saith that, "when there had been great disputation, Peter rose up and said unto them, &c.;" so that Peter, as one having authority to appease the tumult and bitter contention, "rose up and said unto them, &c." Then spake Barnabas and Paul, after them James, not as moderator or governor of the whole action, but as one having interest to speak as the rest of the apostles had; and, because he had spoken that which the rest well liked of, therefore they consented to his opinion and judgment. This is no more to give pre-eminence to James in moderating that action, than it is to give the speakership in the parliament to him that speaketh last in a matter, and whose oration hath most persuaded, to whom also the whole house consenteth. So that Peter keepeth his prerogative still, for anything that is here spoken to the contrary; which may also evidently appear by this, that, when there was great contention among them about the matter, the cause whereof is like to be, for that they did not understand the state of the cause, Peter stood up, *et in hoc maxime insistit, ... ut statum questionis demonstraret*³: "and stood especially upon this point, that he might declare the state of the question," as M. Calvin saith; which is the office of the speaker or moderator; wherefore not James, but Peter, did moderate the action.

[¹ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[² "... which is untrue; for there was great disputation of both sides before Peter spake; therefore it must needs be that the cause was propounded by some before."—Sec. Repl. p. 611.]

[³ ... quare in hoc &c. demonstrat, &c.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Act. Apost. cap. xv. v. 7. Tom. VI. p. 136.]

But be it as you would have it, that "James did moderate the action," it maketh most against you; for, if we believe the ancient writers, and namely the Greek scholiast upon the xv. of the Acts, James was now bishop of Jerusalem⁴; and therefore, the synod being within his charge, it was not unfit that he, according to his office, should moderate the same; as other bishops did in their several churches⁵.

The example of James against the Replier.

The xxi. of the Acts is nothing to your purpose; but Paul, coming to Jerusalem, went with certain other in unto James, and told him and all the rest that were gathered together what God had wrought among the gentiles by his ministration. What is this to prove your purpose? Peter is not here; and James was now bishop of Jerusalem; as the note in the margin of the bible printed at Geneva doth testify⁶. The place in no respect proveth your assertion, but the contrary; for there is no doubt but that James was the chief governor of the church of Jerusalem in all actions during his life, after that he was once placed in the bishopric.

You talk in another place of "raking of doctors to prove my purpose;" but, if these be not rakings of scriptures, gathered together to no purpose, for the confirming of your fond devices, I know not what you should mean by the name of "rakings."

Chapter iii. The Fiftieth Division.

T. C. Page 85, Sect. 4.

This is he which is called the bishop in every church, this is he also whom Justin, whereof mention is made afterwards, called⁷ προεστώς⁸; and, finally, this is that great archbishopric and great bishopric that M. Doctor so often stumbleth on. This order and pre-eminence the apostles' time, and those that were near them, kept; and the nearer they came to the apostles' times the nearer they kept them to this order, and the farther off they were from those times, until the discovering of the son of perdition,

[⁴ Οὗτος ὁ Ἰάκωβος, ὁ τῶν Ἱεροσολύμων ὑπὸ Κυρίου προχειρισθεὶς ἐπίσκοπος υἱὸς Ἰωσήφ ἦν τοῦ τέκτονος, κ. τ. λ.—Œcumen. Op. Lut. Par. 1631. Enarr. cap. xxiii. in Act. Apost. Tom. I. p. 122.]

[⁵ "...if it be true that it is meet the bishop of the place where the synod is holden should govern the synod, why hath he made this before (see before, pages 211, 2) a necessary cause of having an archbishop, to govern synods?"—Sec. Repl. p. 612.]

[⁶ Who was the chief or superintendent of the church of Jerusalem.—The Bible, transl. according to the Ebrew and Greeke. Lond. 1578. Not. in Acts xxi. v. 18. fol. 61.]

[⁷ Callesh, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ Just. Mart. Op. Par. 1742. Apol. i. 67. p. 83.]

the further off were they from this moderation, and the nearer they came to¹ that tyranny and ambitious power which oppressed and overlaid the church of God.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Indeed this is one part of the office of the archbishop and bishop, but not the whole, no more than it was of James being bishop of Jerusalem, nor of him whom Justin calleth προεστώς. But your chief purpose now is to prove that this office is not perpetual, but changeable at every action, and durable only continuing that action; which how soundly you have done, and with what strange arguments, every child that hath discretion may judge.

Chapter iii. The Fifty-first Division.

T. C. Page 86, Sect. 1.

And therefore M. Calvin doth warily say, that one amongst the apostles indefinitely, not any one singular person, as Peter, had the moderation and rule of the other, and further shadoweth out what rule that was, by the example of the consul of Rome, whose authority was to gather the senate together, and to tell of the matters which were to be handled, to gather the voices, to pronounce the sentence. And, although the antichrist of Rome had perverted all good order, and taken all liberty of the church into his hands, the cardinals', archbishops', and bishops', yet² there are some cold and light footings of it in our synods, which are holden with the parliament, where, amongst all the ministers which are assembled out of all the whole realm, by the more part of voices one is chosen which should go before the rest, propound the causes, gather the voices, and be as it were the mouth of the whole company, whom they term the prolocutor. Such great force hath the truth, that in the utter ruins of popery it could never be so pulled up by the roots, that a man could never know the place thereof no more, or that it should not leave such marks and prints behind it, whereby it might afterwards recover itself, and come again to the knowledge of men.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It followeth in the same place of M. Calvin immediately :
 Instit. cap. 8. *Sic nihil absurdi esset si fateremur apostolos detulisse Petro talem primatum. Sed quod inter paucos valet non protinus trahendum [est] ad universum orbem terrarum, ad quem regendum nemo unus sufficit*³: “So should it be no absurdity if we should confess that the apostles did give this kind of pre-eminence unto Peter. But yet that which availeth among

[¹ And nearer to, Repl. 2.]

[² Into his the cardinals archbishops and bishops hands yet, Repl. 2.]

[³ Calvin, Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 8. Tom. IX. p. 296.]

The archbishop con-tenteth himself with less authority than the consuls had.

few must not by and by be drawn to the whole world; to the ruling whereof no one man can suffice." You see, therefore, that M. Calvin speaketh of one singular person, even of Peter himself, and yet doth he not "slide into the tents of the papists," but teacheth rather how to beware of them, and yet to acknowledge the truth of Peter.

We give no greater authority either to archbishop or bishop than the consul or prætor had among the Romans, or a master or⁴ president in a college; for the consuls (upon whose authority you seem so much to stay) were appointed to govern the commonwealth of the Romans, after they had banished their kings, and they were called consuls, *quia plurimum reipublicæ consulebant*⁵: "because they profited the commonwealth very much;" whose authority in this did differ from the authority of a king, that there might be appeal from them, and that they could not put to death any citizen of Rome without the consent of the people; but they might otherwise punish them, and cast them into prison: they had authority also to make free those that were in bondage, they were of the greatest honour (si nullus esset dictator), "if there were no dictator," in the commonwealth, and their authority was of force, not only in the senate, but elsewhere. And it is manifest that they had not only "authority to call the senate, to tell those matters that were to be handled, and to take their voices," but to command that none should depart out of the city that had any voice in the senate, and to elect senators, &c. It appeareth that you little knew what the office of a consul was, when you writ this. If you take advantage of this, that the office of the consul was annual, and not perpetual, yet it helpeth not you anything; for he was moderator and ruler not of one action only, but of so many as were by occasion, either ordinary or extraordinary, in the whole year of his consulship. For my part, I do not think that the archbishop either hath, or ought to have, that authority in his province that the consul had in Rome.

The example of T. C. against himself.
Consuls, and their authority.

A master of a college (the which example also master Calvin doth use⁶) hath a perpetual office: he is chief governor

Masters of colleges, and their authority.

[⁴ And, Def. A.]

[⁵ Animo consulem esse oportet,.....omni officio tuendo, maximeque, id quod vis nominis præscribit, reipublicæ consulendo.—Cic. Op. Lond. 1681. Orat. in C. Pison. Tom. II. p. 465. Conf. De Orat. Lib. II. Tom. I. p. 112.]

[⁶ Calvin. Op. Inst. Lib. IV. cap. vi. 3. Tom. IX. p. 296. See before, page 231, note 5.]

of that society; and all the members thereof owe duty and obedience unto him, as to their head: he hath authority to punish, and to see laws executed: neither do I think that either archbishop or bishop claimeth greater authority and jurisdiction over their provinces and diocese than is due to the master within his college. And therefore those examples of Master Calvin do confute your assertion, they do in no point confirm it.

In synods, though there be chosen a "prolocutor" for the inferior sort of the clergy, yet doth the archbishop retain still both his office, place, and authority¹: even as the prince doth, or the lord-keeper, notwithstanding it be permitted to the lower house of parliament to choose them a speaker. And therefore this is nothing, nor alleged to any purpose; except you will say that in the civil state all was equal, and that there was no superior, but in every action some chosen by the multitude to govern the action, because in the lower house of parliament they choose a speaker, whose office continueth but during that parliament. You pass not what you allege, so you may seem to allege something.

Chapter iii. The Fifty-second Division.

T. C. Page 86, Sect. 2.

Now you see what authority we allow amongst the ministers, both in their several churches, or in provincial synods, or national, or general, or whatsoever other meetings shall be advised of, for the profit and edifying of the church; and withal you see that, as we are far from this tyranny and excessive power which now is in the church, so we are by the grace of God as far from confusion and disorder; wherein you travail so much to make us to seem guilty.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I see you "allow" much more "authority" in words, that is in the examples you have used, than you will willingly acknowledge: I see also that this authority, which you call "tyranny, and excessive," is moderate and lawful, and according both to the laws of God and man. To conclude, I see that you are as far from order, and a right form of government, as you are from modesty and due obedience, and that the end you shoot at is nothing else but a mere "confusion,"

[¹ "... it sheweth that he is now but an idol, having put over the duty to other, for which he is supposed to have been so necessary."—Sec. Repl. p. 613.]

not only of the church, but of the commonwealth also; the government whereof you would have framed according to your platform of the church: that is, you would have it brought from a monarchy to a popular or aristocratical kind of government, even as you would have the church.

Chapter iii. The Fifty-third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 72, Sect. 1.

Paul was superior both to Timothy and Titus; as it may easily be gathered out of his epistles written unto them.

T. C. Page 86, Sect. 3.

M. Doctor reasoneth again, that Paul, an apostle, and in the highest degree of ministry, was superior to Timothy and Titus, evangelists, and so in a lower degree of ministry; therefore one minister is superior to another, one bishop to another bishop; which are all one office, and one function. As if I should say, my lord mayor of London is above the sheriffs; therefore one sheriff is superior to another.

They are not yet proved evangelists.

JO. WHITGIFT.

There was no difference betwixt them in respect of preaching the gospel and administering the sacraments, but in respect of government²; therefore among ministers of the word and sacraments there may be degrees of dignity, and superiority, and one may rule over another; which is the ground of my assertion, and the overthrow of yours. And this doth the example of Paul prove evidently; even as the example of "my lord mayor" doth prove that there is superiority in government among the citizens. For thus you should have reasoned: as "my lord mayor" his authority above the rest of the citizens declareth that there is superiority in the civil state, and one subject to another, even so Paul's superiority over Timothy, Titus, and other ministers, declareth that there may be superiority in the state ecclesiastical, and that one of them may and ought to be subject to another. Thus you should have applied the similitude, if you had truly applied it³.

The example of Paul proveth superiority among the ministers of the word.

[² "Which is untrue, for they differed in both alike."—Ibid. p. 614.]

[³ Cartwright calls this "too ridiculous," and says "that, if there were any argument here, it is that, as my lord mayor ruleth over the citizens, so it behoveth the pastor to rule over his flock."—Ibid.]

Chapter iii. The Fifty-fourth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 72, Sect. 2.

Titus had superiority.Calvin con-fesseth superiority among ministers³.

Titus had superiority over all the other pastors and ministers which were in Creta; for he had *potestatem constituendi oppidatim presbyteros: ad Tit. i.*¹ The which place M. Calvin expounding saith on this sort: *Discimus ex hoc loco, &c.*²: “We learn of this place (saith he) that there was not such equality among the ministers of the church, but that one both in authority and counsel did rule over another.”

T. C. Page 86, Sect. 3.

Again, another argument he hath of the same strength. Titus being an evangelist was superior to all the pastors in Crete, which was a degree under the evangelists; therefore one pastor must be superior unto another pastor. And that he was superior he proveth, because he had authority to ordain pastors; so that the print of the archbishop is so deeply set in his head, that hereof he can imagine nothing but that Titus should be archbishop of all Creta.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Titus was a bishop, as it shall be proved; and you have not one word in scripture of his being an evangelist: it is Erasmus⁴ and Pellican⁵, two famous men, that “imagine Titus to have been archbishop of Creta:” scoff at them.

Chapter iii. The Fifty-fifth Division.

T. C. Page 86, Sect. 4.

You shift off
M. Calvin's place for

I have shewed before how these words are to be taken of St Paul. And, forsomuch as M. Doctor burdeneth us with the authority of Calvin so often, I will send him to Calvin's own interpretation upon this place; where he sheweth that Titus did not ordain by his own authority⁶. For St Paul

[¹ Presbyteros: authority to ordain elders in every city, Tit. i., Answ. 2.]

[² Discimus quidem ex hoc loco, non eam fuisse tunc æqualitatem inter ecclesiæ ministros, quin unus aliquis auctoritate et consilio præset.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. 5. Tom. VII. p. 497.]

[³ This marginal note is not in Answ.]

[⁴ Erasm. Op. L. Bat. 1703-6. In Epist. ad Tit. Arg. Tom. VII. cols. 1067, 8. See before, page 132, note 2.]

[⁵ C. Pellican. Comm. in Omn. Apost. Epist. Tigur. 1539. In Epist. ad Tit. Arg. p. 577. See before, page 132, note 3.]

[⁶ Sed videtur nimium Tito permittere, dum jubet eum præficere omnibus ecclesiis ministros. hæc enim fere regia esset potestas: deinde hoc modo et singulis ecclesiis jus eligendi, et pastorum collegio judicium tollitur: id vero esset totam sacram ecclesiæ administrationem profanare. Verum, &c.—Calvin. Op. Comm. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. 5. Tom. VII. p. 497. See Vol. I. page 427, note 9.]

would not grant Titus leave to do that which he himself would not, and sheweth that to say that Titus should make the election of pastors by himself is to give unto him "a princely authority, and to take away the election from the church, and the judgment of the insufficiency of the minister from the company of the pastors; which were (saith he) to profane the whole government of the church."

superiority amongst the clergy, by flying to another place of election of ministers.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is to set Calvin against Calvin, and not to answer him; and yet this is nothing contrary to that which I have alleged out of him; for in the place that I have alleged he gathereth upon these words, ut constituas oppidatim presbyteros, &c., "that there was not such equality among the ministers of the church, but that one both in authority and counsel did rule over another⁷." You, to avoid this testimony of Calvin for superiority, tell me that Calvin saith upon this place, that "Titus did not ordain ministers by his own authority, &c.," which is no answer to the place that I have alleged, but a very quarrel picked out to avoid the answering of it. Master Calvin saith that among the ministers there "was one ruled over another auctoritate et consilio: by authority and counsel." And he doth gather it out of the text by me alleged. Either answer it, or give place unto it, or deny it. Of electing ministers I have spoken before: it is now out of place to speak of it again, and it is to no purpose, but to shift off an answer.

The shifts of the Replier.

Chapter iii. The Fifty-sixth Division.

T. C. Page 86, Sect. 5.

I marvel therefore what M. Doctor meaneth to be so busy with M. Calvin, and to seek confirmation of his archbishop and bishop at him, which would have shaken at the naming of the one, and trembled at the office of the other, unless it be because he would fain have his plaster where he received his wound. But I dare assure him that in his garden he shall never find the herb that will heal him. And, because that the scriptures, when they make for our cause, receive this answer commonly, that they served but for the apostles' times, and Master Calvin's authority will weigh nothing as I think with Master Doctor, when he is alleged by us against him, I will send him to the Greek scholiast, which upon this place of Titus saith after this sort: "He would not (speaking of St Paul) have the whole isle of Crete ministered and governed by one, but that every one should have his proper charge and care⁸;" for so should Titus have a lighter labour, and the people that are governed should enjoy greater attendance of the pastor, whilst he that teacheth them doth not run about the government of many congregations, but attendeth unto one, and garnisheth that.

[⁷ Id. ibid. See above, note 2.]

[⁸ Οὐ γὰρ ἐβούλετο πᾶσαν τὴν νῆτον τὴν Κρήτην μεγάλην οὔσαν, ἐπι-

JO. WHITGIFT.

What opinion Master Calvin hath of archbishops, and of superiority amongst pastors and ministers, may appear in his words that I have alleged in my Answer. I think Master Calvin never uttered in word or writing his misliking of the present government of this church of England by archbishops and bishops: what he hath spoken against the abuse of them in the pope's church is not to be wrested against the right use of them in the true church of Christ.

I have answered the scriptures by you alleged truly and directly. You have not as yet urged me with that authority of Master Calvin, that I have so shifted off, as you have done this last.

The scholiast meaneth that every city should have his pastor in the isle of Creta, and that Titus should govern them as bishop, not as having the whole and sole charge of every several town or city; which may evidently appear to be true by these words of Theodoret placed in the same author: "Titus was a notable disciple of Paul, but was ordained bishop of Creta, which was a very large isle; and it was permitted and committed unto him, that he might ordain *τοὺς ὑπ' αὐτοῦ ἐπισκόπους*¹: bishops that were under him." Whereby it may be gathered that every city in Creta had a bishop, which had the several charge, and that Titus governed them as archbishop. The like doth Chrysostom (whom the Greek scholiast doth especially follow) affirm of Timothy in 1 Tim. v. upon these words, *Adversus presbyterum &c.: Timotheo credita fuerat ecclesia, imo gens fere tota Asiatica*²: "The church, yea, almost the whole people of Asia, was committed to Timothy." But what need I use many words, when Chrysostom himself affirmeth the same directly of Titus, i. ad

Titus, arch-
bishop.

Theodoret. in
arg. Epist.
Tit. apud Scholiast.

Chrysost.

τετράβθαι ἐν ἐπισκόπῳ, ἀλλ' ἐκάστην πόλιν ἔχειν ἴδιον ποιμένα.—Œcumen. Op. Lut. Par. 1631. Comm. cap. i. in Epist. ad Tit. Tom. II. p. 289. Conf. Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Hom. ii. Tom. XI. p. 737.]

[¹ Ὁ Τίτος θαυμάσιός τις ἦν μαθητὴς τοῦ Παύλου. ἐπίσκοπος δὲ τῆς Κρήτης, μεγίστης οὔσης, χειροτονήτο ὑπὸ τοῦ Παύλου. ἐπετέτραπτο δὲ τοὺς ὑπ' αὐτὸν ἐπισκόπους χειροτονῆσαι.—Theod. ibid. p. 285.]

[² Chrysost. Op. In i. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. v. Hom. xv. Tom. XI. p. 637.]

*Titum: Neque ejus profecto illi &c.*³: “Truly Paul would not have committed the whole isle to him, neither would he have commanded those things to be supplied which were wanting (for he saith, ‘that thou mightest correct those things which are wanting’), neither would he have committed unto him the judgment of so many bishops, if he had not trusted him very well⁴.” Idem.

Chapter iii. The Fifty-seventh Division.

T. C. Page 87, Sect. 1.

Now M. Doctor may see by this, that Titus was not⁵, as he fancieth, the archbishop of all Crete; but that he had one flock, whereupon for the time he was there he attended; and that, where it is said he ordained ministers, it is nothing else but that he was the chief and the moderator in the election of the ministers; as I have declared before by many examples. And it is no marvel although the rest granted him this pre-eminence, when he had both most excellent gifts, and was a degree above the pastors, being an evangelist.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This I “may see,” that, first, you have no conscience in falsifying and corrupting of authors: secondly, that you speak contraries, even in these few lines; for you say that “Titus had one flock in Creta, whereupon he did attend for the time he was there,” which must needs prove him to be a pastor⁶; and yet you afterwards deny him to be a pastor, affirming him to be “an evangelist;” and you take the office of an evangelist to be so distinct from the office of a pastor, that they may not meet together in one man: thirdly, I see that you confidently take upon you to expound Paul’s meaning against his plain words, and against the judgment of the old interpreters, and divers of the new; as I have shewn before

T. C. contrary to himself.

[³ Εἰ μὴ γὰρ ἦν δόκιμος, οὐκ ἂν αὐτῷ τὴν νῆσον ὁλόκληρον ἐπέτρεψεν, οὐκ ἂν τὰ ἐλλειφθέντα ἀναπληρῶσαι προσέταξεν· ἵνα γὰρ, φησι, τὰ λείποντα ἐπιδιορθώσῃ· οὐκ ἂν τοσοῦτων ἐπισκόπων κρίσιν ἐπέτρεψεν, εἰ μὴ σφόδρα ἐθαύρει πάνδρι.—Id. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Hom. i. p. 729.]

[⁴ Cartwright rejoins that the first two sections of this division are “shamefully” “said,” and urges against the last that Timothy and Titus might have a more extended charge “until the church there were fully established;” but, when “every church had a lawful and complete ministry, the charge before general is now restrained unto that one church where Titus made his abode.”—Sec. Repl. p. 615.]

[⁵ Titus (by the judgment of the scholiast) was not, Repl. 2.]

[⁶ “... let him learn that to have charge in one church alone maketh not a pastor, unless he be so tied that he cannot depart, without the church loose his bond.”—Ibid. pp. 615, 6.]

in the election of ministers. Besides these, I see nothing answered to this example of Titus.

Chapter iii. The Fifty-eighth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 72, Sect. 3.

Timothy's authority.

Timothy bare rule over all the other ministers of the church of Ephesus; for Paul saith unto him, 1 Tim. v. Adversus presbyterum accusationem &c.: "Against a minister receive no accusation, unless there be two or three witnesses." In which words Paul maketh him a judge over the rest of the ministers.

T. C. Page 87, Sect. 2.

Unto the place of Timothy, where he willeth him not to admit an accusation against an elder under two or three witnesses, I answer as I have done before to the place of Titus; that is, that, as the ordination of the pastors is attributed unto Titus and Timothy, because they governed and moderated that action, and were the first in it, so also is the deposing, or other censures of them; and that, forasmuch as he writeth his epistles unto Timothy and Titus, he telleth them how they should behave themselves in their office, and doth not shut out other from this censure and judgment. And it is more agreeable to the inscription of the epistles that he should say, admit not thou, or, ordain not thou, writing unto one, than if he should say, ordain not ye, or, admit not ye, as if he should write to many; for so should neither the ending agree with the beginning, nor the midst with them both. And, if this be a good rule, that, because Paul biddeth Timothy and Titus to judge of the faults of the pastors, and to ordain
A mere cavil. pastors, therefore none else did but they, then, whereas St Paul biddeth Timothy that he should command, and teach, that, "godliness is ^{1 Tim. iv.} profitable to all things," and admonisheth him to "be an example ^{8, 12, 1.} of the whole flock," by your reason he will have no other of the ministers of Ephesus, or of the isle of Creta, to teach that doctrine, or to be examples to their flocks, and an hundred such things in the epistles of Timothy and Titus; which although they be there particularly directed unto Timothy and Titus, yet do they agree, and are common to them with all other ministers, yea, sometimes unto the whole flock.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You have certain common shifts to put off such places as you cannot answer; among which this is one, that you use in this place. But it will not serve, being grounded neither upon authority nor reason. These words of St Paul indeed be not spoken to Timothy alone, but to all other bishops of like authority; for that which is prescribed to Timothy is also prescribed to all other in the like function; which argueth that this authority, given to Timothy over all the ministers of the church of Ephesus, doth pertain also to all other bishops over the ministers of their several diocese. But, as St Paul in these epistles writeth only to bishops and pastors, so are the precepts given therein properly pertaining to the office of bishops and pastors, and therefore not to be wrested to any other. And how can the papists more grossly abuse the scriptures, in interpreting them to serve their turn, and to shift off their authority alleged against them, than you do in this, and such other places, against the whole scope of the epistle, and the plain and evident words of the text? for what is this but to give Timothy superiority and government over the other ministers of Ephesus, to say unto him, Adversus presbyterum: "Against a minister receive no accusation, &c.?" And, as this authority of judgment is not only given unto Timothy, but to all bishops of like calling, so that also of teaching (that "godliness is profitable to all things," &c.) pertaineth to all ministers of the word generally, and not to Timothy alone. This is only the difference, that the first is common to Timothy with all other bishops of like jurisdiction; the other, common to him with all other ministers of the word.

[¹ This marginal reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

You know that every pastor, or other minister of the word, hath not other pastors and ministers of the word under him, that it may be said unto him, Adversus presbyteros &c., as it is here said to Timothy; for I have proved before that presbyter doth signify the ministers of the word and sacraments, and shall have occasion to speak more of it hereafter.

You say that there is "an hundred such things in the epistles of Timothy and Titus:" I think that there is not one hundred several precepts in all the three epistles. These stout and hyperbolical brags, with so manifest resisting of the plain sense and meaning of the scriptures, argueth an evil conscience, and a mind so addicted to error, that it will not be reformed. Many things in these epistles pertain to all Christians, many things be proper to bishops, such as Timothy was, and many common to all ministers. But this, Adversus presbyteros &c., must needs be proper to those that have under them other ministers, committed to their government; which every pastor hath not¹.

Chapter iii. The Fifty-ninth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 72, Sect. 3.

Epiphanius*. And Epiphanius, Lib. iii. Tom. i. contra Hæresim Aerii, proveth Timothy his superiority³ over the rest by this self-same place⁴.

T. C. Page 87, Sect. 3.

This is your practice to discredit the author that speaketh against you.

*As for Epiphanius, it is known of what authority he is in this place, when as by Aerius' sides he goeth about to prick at the apostle, whilst he goeth about to confute the apostle, which maketh a distinction and difference between those which the apostle maketh one, that is, a bishop and elder⁵; and, to spare the credit of Epiphanius, it were better lay that opinion upon some Pseud-epiphanius, which⁶ we may do not without great probability, seeing Augustine saith that the true Epiphanius uttereth Ad Quod-vult-deum, all after a story fashion, and doth not use any disputation, or reasoning for the truth against the falsehood; and this Epiphanius is very full of arguments and reasons; the choice whereof M. Doctor hath taken.*

JO. WHITGIFT.

The writings of Epiphanius contra 80. hæreses not counterfeit.

I have not heard any probable reason alleged of any why these books of Epiphanius should be suspected, whether they be his or no, seeing they be both learned and very ancient, mentioned also of sundry old writers. But, to omit all other proofs, I will only use the judgment (at this time) of the authors of the Centuries, who are to be credited in such matters, because they have diligently and carefully laboured in them: their opinion of these books of Epiphanius, Cent. iv. cap. 10. is this: *Nunc de scriptis &c.*⁷: "Now we will speak

Cent. iv. cap. 10.

[¹ Cartwright rejoins to this that "it argueth that the D. is spent. For he knoweth that we hold that every pastor had his elders assistant: &c."—Sec. Repl. p. 616.]

[² This word is not in Answ.]

[³ Titus' superiority, Answ. 1; Timothy's superiority, Answ. 2.]

[⁴ Epiph. Op. Par. 1622. Adv. Hær. Lib. 111. Tom. 1. Hær. lxxv. 5. Tom. 1. pp. 909, 10. See below, pages 291, 2, note 2.]

[⁵ And an elder, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ Pseud-epiphanius that is to say counterfeit which, Repl. 2.]

[⁷ Nunc de scriptis ejus dicemus: ex quibus nobilissimum opus illud est contra octuaginta hæreses, quod πανάριον ipse in epistola ad Acacium et Paulum presbyteros dixit, et in Anacephalæosi: ... De quo scripto Augustinus ad Quod-vult-deum hæc retulit: Noster, inquit, Epiphanius Cyprius episcopus, abhinc non

of his books; of the which that work against the four-score heresies is most noble; which book he himself in his epistle to Acacius and Paulus, ministers, and in his book called Anacephaleosis, calleth παράμυρον, &c. Of the which writing Augustine, in his book ad Quod-vult-deum, maketh this mention. 'Our Epiphanius, bishop of Cy[p]rus (saith he), which died not long since, speaking of four-score heresies, wrote also himself six books making mention of all things after an historical manner, and disputing nothing either against the falsehood, or with the truth: they be but short books, and, if they were all made in one, yet were it not to be compared to ours, or to divers other men's books in length.' Out of the which words it is evident that Augustine neither had, nor at any time did see, that work which Epiphanius intituled Panarium; for Epiphanius is very long in recounting the history, as concerning the beginning, the endeavour, and country of the heretics, the occasion of the heresy, the success, increase, and such like, throughout every heresy. Then is he very long in confuting and condemning the heresies by true scriptures, and the interpretation of them. Wherefore it should seem that Augustine had belike only the arguments prefixed before the tomes of books of Epiphanius, which he doth therefore call short books, or, at the least, had his book called Anacephaleosis" (which is the sum of his work called Panarium). Cornarius, Cornarius. that writeth the preface before this book of Epiphanius, is of the same judgment, and addeth these words: "Wherefore either Augustine did not see this work of Epiphanius; or the right work of Augustine is not extant, but lost; or else Augustine did not indeed perform that which he promised⁸." I can longe humanis rebus exemptus, de octoginta hæresibus loquens, sex libros etiam ipse conscripsit, historica narratione commemorans omnia, nulla disputatione adversus falsitatem pro veritate decertans. Breves sane sunt libelli, et si in unum librum redigantur, nec ipse erit nostris, vel aliorum quorundam libris longitudine comparandus (August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Lib. de Hær. ad Quodvultd. Tom. VIII. col. 3). Ex quibus tamen verbis liquet, Augustinum id operis quod Panarium Epiphanius inscripsit, non habuisse, neque vidisse. Nam Epiphanius multus est in historia recensenda, quod ad originem, studia, patriam hæreticorum, hæresis occasionem, successum, incrementum et alia attinet, per singulas adeo hæreses. Deinde prolixus est in confutandis ac condemnandis hæresibus, per veras scripturas, earumque interpretationes. Quare argumenta forsitan sola, præfixa tomis librorum Epiphani, quæ sic vocet breves libellos, aut Anacephalæosin saltem habuisse Augustinus videtur.—Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. IV. cap. x. cols. 1105, 6.]

[⁸ Igitur hoc Epiphani opus Augustinus non vidit, aut justum opus read of none that doubteth whether these books were Epiphanius his, or no. And certainly this kind of answering is next the worst, especially when it is used against such approved authors.

Aerius' heresy in denying the difference betwixt a bishop and priest.

Epiph. Lib. iii. tom. i. hæres. 75.

And, because all men may understand what Epiphanius' words and reasons be (which indeed pinch you very near, for he calleth you heretics), I will declare them as I have there found them. First he setteth down the heresy of Aerius in these words: "His talk was more outrageous than becomed a man; and he said, 'What is a bishop to a priest? he nothing differeth from him; for there is but one order, and the same honour and dignity. The bishop layeth on his hands; and so doth the priest: the bishop ministereth baptism; and so doth the priest: the bishop saith divine service; and so doth the priest: the bishop sitteth in his throne; and so doth the priest.' In this he hath deceived many; and they use him for their captain¹." Then doth he a little after confute this heresy with Aerius' reasons on this sort: "To say that a bishop and a priest is equal, how can it be possible? for the order of bishops is the begetter of fathers, for it ingendereth fathers to the church: the order of priests, not being able to beget fathers, doth beget sons to the church, by the sacrament of baptism, but not fathers or teachers; and how is it possible for him to ordain a priest, not having imposition of hands to elect, or to say that he is equal with a bishop? but fantasticalness and emulation deceived the foresaid Aerius: he proveth his error, and the error of those that hear him, by this, that the apostle writ to priests and deacons, and did not write to bishops. And to the bishop he saith, 'Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which thou hast received by the hands of the presbytery.' And again, in another place he writeth to bishops and deacons: 'Wherefore (saith he) a bishop and a priest is all one ;' and he knoweth not, which is ignorant of the sequel of the truth, and hath not read profound stories, that, when the preaching was but newly begun, the holy apostle writ according to the state of things as they were then ; for, where there were bishops appointed, he writ to bishops and deacons ; for the apostle could not by and by at the first appoint all things ; for there was need of priests and deacons, because by those two ecclesiastical matters may be complete. And, where there was not any found worthy a bishopric, there the place remained without a bishop ; but, where there was need, and worthy men to be bishops, there were bishops appointed. And, when there was not so many that there could be found among them meet to be priests, they were content with one bishop in an appointed place ; but it is impossible for a bishop to be without a deacon ; and the holy apostle had a care that deacons should be where the bishop was, for the ministry. So did the church receive the fulness of dispensation, such was then the state and condition of the places. For every thing had not the perfection from the beginning, but in process of time those things which were necessary to perfection were added. &c. The apostle teacheth who is a bishop, and who is a priest, when he saith to Timothy, that was a bishop, ' Chide not a priest, but exhort him as a father : ' what should a bishop have to do not to chide a priest, if he had not authority above a priest ? As he also saith again, ' Against a priest admit no accusation suddenly, without two or three witnesses ; ' and he said not to any priest, admit no accusation against a bishop ; neither did he write to any priest, that he should not rebuke a bishop². Thus mayest

Augustini non extat et periit, aut non præstitit Augustinus quod promisit.—Epiph. contr. Octoag. Hæ. Op. Panar. Iano Cornar. Interp. Basil. 1543. Præf. fol. a 2. 2.]

[¹ Ἦν δὲ αὐτοῦ ὁ λόγος μανιώδης μᾶλλον, ἥπερ καταστάσεως ἀνθρωπίνης. καὶ φησι, τί ἐστὶν ἐπίσκοπος πρὸς πρεσβύτερον; οὐδὲν διαλλάττει οὗτος τοῦτον· μία γάρ ἐστι τάξις, καὶ μία, φησι, τιμὴ, καὶ ἐν ἀξίωμα. χειροθετεῖ φησὶ ἐπίσκοπος, ἀλλὰ καὶ ὁ πρεσβύτερος. λουτρὸν δίδωσιν ὁ ἐπίσκοπος, ὁμοίως καὶ ὁ πρεσβύτερος. τὴν οἰκονομίαν τῆς λατρείας ποιεῖ ὁ ἐπίσκοπος, καὶ ὁ πρεσβύτερος ὡσαύτως. καθέζεται ὁ ἐπίσκοπος ἐπὶ τοῦ θρόνου, καθέζεται καὶ ὁ πρεσβύτερος. ἐν τούτῳ πολλοὺς ἠπάτησε, καὶ ἀρχηγὸν τοῦτον ἐσχήκατι.—Id. Op. Par. 1622. Adv. Hæ. Lib. iii. Tom. i. Hæ. lxxv. 3. Tom. i. pp. 906, 7.]

[² ... τὸ λέγειν αὐτὸν ἐπίσκοπον καὶ πρεσβύτερον ἴσον εἶναι. καὶ πῶς ἔσται τοῦτο δυνατόν; ἡ μὲν γάρ ἐστι πατέρων γεννητικὴ τάξις· πατέρας γὰρ γεννᾷ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ. ἡ δὲ πατέρας μὴ δυναμένη γεννᾷ, διὰ τῆς τοῦ λουτροῦ παλιγγενεσίας τέκνα γεννᾷ τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, οὐ μὴν πατέρας, ἢ διδασκάλους. καὶ πῶς οἷόν τε ἦν τὸν πρεσβύτερον καθιστᾶν, μὴ ἔχοντα χειροθεσίαν τοῦ χειροτονεῖν; ἡ εἰπεῖν αὐτὸν εἶναι ἴσον τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ; ἡπάτησε δὲ τὸν προειρημένον Ἀέριον ἡ αὐτοῦ ἐρεσχηλία, καὶ ὁ ζῆλος. φέρεי δὲ εἰς ἑαυτοῦ πλάνην καὶ τῶν αὐτοῦ ἀκούοντων, ὅτι ὁ ἀπόστολος γράφει πρεσβυτέροις, καὶ διακόνοις, καὶ οὐ γράφει ἐπισκόποις. καὶ τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ φησὶ, μὴ ἀμέλει τοῦ ἐν σοὶ χαρίματος, οὐ ἔλαβες διὰ χειρῶν τοῦ πρεσβυτερίου. πάλιν δὲ ἐν ἄλλῳ τόπῳ, ἐπισκόποις καὶ διακόνοις ὡς εἶναι, φησὶ, τὸν αὐτὸν ἐπίσκοπον, τὸν αὐτὸν πρεσβύτερον, καὶ οὐκ οἶδεν ὁ τὴν ἀκολουθίαν τῆς ἀληθείας ἀγνοήσας, καὶ ἱστορίαις βαθυτάταις μὴ ἐντυχῶν, ὅτι νέου ὄντος τοῦ κηρύγματος, πρὸς τὰ ὑποκείμενα ἔγραφεν ὁ ἅγιος ἀπόστολος. ὅπου μὲν ἦσαν ἐπίσκοποι ἡδὴ κατασταθέντες, ἔγραφεν ἐπισκόποις, καὶ διακόνοις. οὐ γὰρ πάντα εὐθὺς ἡδυν-

Timothy,
bishop.

thou see, good reader, that it is not for nought that T. C. so storms against Epiphanius, and so unreverently useth him.

August. ad
Quod-vult.

But I will give him as much cause to deal in like manner with Augustine, who in this matter fully joineth with Epiphanius; and in that book of his, De Hæresibus ad Quod-vult-deum (quoted by T. C. in his margent), attributeth this also as heresy to the said Acrius, adding that the cause of this and other of his heresies was, “because he himself was not made ¹bishop².”

Chapter iii. The Sixtieth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 72, Sect. 4.

That this word presbyter in this place of the apostle signifieth a minister of the word, both Ambrose³, Calvin⁴, and other learned writers declare.

νήθησαν οἱ ἀπόστολοι καταστήσαι. πρεσβυτέρων γὰρ ἐγένετο χρεία, καὶ διακόνων. διὰ γὰρ τῶν δύο τούτων τὰ ἐκκλησιαστικά δύνανται πληροῦσθαι. ὅπου δὲ οὐχ εὐρέθη τις ἄξιος ἐπισκοπῆς, ἔμεινεν ὁ τόπος χωρὶς ἐπισκόπου. ὅπου δὲ γέγονε χρεία, καὶ ἦσαν ἄξιοι ἐπισκοπῆς, κατεστάθησαν ἐπίσκοποι. πλήθους δὲ μὴ ὄντος, οὐχ εὐρέθησαν ἐν αὐτοῖς πρεσβύτεροι κατασταθῆναι, καὶ ἠρκέσθησαν ἐπὶ τῷ κατὰ τὸν μόνον ἐπισκόπῳ. ἄνευ δὲ διακόνου, ἐπίσκοπον ἀδύνατον εἶναι, καὶ ἐπεμελήσατο ὁ ἅγιος ἀπόστολος διακόνους εἶναι τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ διὰ τὴν ὑπηρεσίαν, οὕτω τῆς ἐκκλησίας λαβούσης τὰ πληρώματα τῆς οἰκονομίας. οὕτω κατ’ ἐκείνῳ [?] καιροῦ ἦσαν οἱ τόποι. καὶ γὰρ ἕκαστον πρᾶγμα οὐκ ἀπαρχῆς τὰ πάντα ἔσχευ, ἀλλὰ προβαίνοντος τοῦ χρόνου τὰ πρὸς τελείωσιν τῶν χρειῶν κατηρτίζετο. κ.τ.λ. καὶ ὅτι μὲν οὐ δύναται ταῦτόν εἶναι, διδάσκει ὁ θεῖος λόγος τοῦ ἁγίου ἀποστόλου, τίς μὲν ἐστι ἐπίσκοπος, τίς δὲ ἐστι πρεσβύτερος, ὡς λέγει Τιμοθέῳ ἐπισκόπῳ ὄντι, πρεσβύτερον μὴ ἐπιπλήξῃς, ἀλλὰ παρακάλει ὡς πατέρα. τί εἶχε πρᾶγμα, ἐπίσκοπον πρεσβυτέρῳ μὴ ἐπιπλήττειν, εἰ μὴ ἦν ὑπὲρ τὸν πρεσβύτερον ἔχων τὴν ἐξουσίαν; ὡς καὶ πάλιν λέγει, κατὰ πρεσβύτερον μὴ ταχέως κατηγορίαν δέχου, εἰ μὴ τι ἐπὶ δύο καὶ τριῶν μαρτύρων. καὶ οὐκ εἶπέ τινα τῶν πρεσβυτέρων, μὴ δέξῃ κατηγορίαν κατὰ ἐπισκόπου, οὐδὲ ἔγραψε [περὶ] τῶν πρεσβυτέρων τινα μὴ ἐπιπλήττειν ἐπισκόπῳ. —Id. ibid. 4, 5. pp. 908, 9, 10.]

[¹ Aeriani ab Aerio quodam sunt, qui cum esset presbyter, doluisse fertur quod episcopus non potuit ordinari.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Lib. de Hær. ad Quodvult. 53. Tom. VIII. col. 18.]

[² Cartwright accuses Whitgift of taking the ground of Pighius; and maintains that Wicliffe, Luther, and the reformed churches generally in their confessions held other views: he also argues at length against the citation from Epiphanius, who he says contradicted Augustine and Jerome, they teaching that a bishop and an elder differed “not by the word of God but by custom;” while Epiphanius made “a bishop and an elder differ by the apostles’ institution.”—Sec. Repl. pp. 616, &c.]

[³ Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Timoth. prim. cap. v. vv. 17, 18, 19. Tom. II. Append. cols. 300, 1.]

[⁴ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. 1. ad Timoth. cap. v. 19. Tom. VII. p. 463.]

[ But, because some, desirous of contention, seeing certain points of their contentious doctrine manifestly overthrown by the example of Timothy bishop of Ephesus, have, contrary to the opinion of all learned men, denied him to be bishop there, I purpose in few words to shew how desirous they are in this point (as in divers others) to be singular, and how manifestly they do decline from the truth.]⁵

Timothy,
bishop.

T. C. Page 87, Sect. 4.

And, whereas M. Doctor citeth Ambrose, Calvin, and other godly writers, to prove that the minister is understood by the word elder or presbyter, he keepeth his old wont by bringing sticks into the wood, and proving always that which no man denieth; and yet with the minister of the word he also understandeth the elder of the church which ruleth and doth not labour in the word. But therein is not the matter; for I do grant that by presbyter the minister of the word is understood, and yet nothing proved of that which M. Doctor would so fain prove.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I add this interpretation, that the reader may understand Timothy to have authority over bishops and ministers of the word, lest you by cavilling should shift off this place with your signification of seniors, which were not ministers of the word, as you say.

All this while have I looked for the performance of your promise, to prove that Timothy and Titus were no bishops; but, because I perceive that you are content to forget it, I will here perform mine (lest I fall into the same fault with you), repeating only that which I have before added to my Answer in the 2. edition, lest I should put the reader both to cost and pains in searching for it there.

That Timothy
was bishop.

First therefore, that Timothy was bishop of Ephesus, the whole course of the two epistles written unto him declareth; wherein is contained the office and duty of a bishop, and divers precepts peculiarly pertaining to that function, as it is manifest; neither were those epistles written to Timothy for the instruction of other only, but for the instruction of himself also; as the whole course of both the epistles do declare, and all learned expositors confess.

1.
The course of the epistle.

[⁵ Answ. 2 introduces here the paragraph between brackets, and proceeds (as noted by Whitgift) with what follows below, "First therefore &c." to "purpose," page 304.]

Timothy,
bishop.
2.
The subscription.

Secondly, the subscription of the second epistle is this: Πρὸς Τιμόθεον δευτέρα, τῆς Ἐφεσίων ἐκκλησίας πρῶτον ἐπίσκοπον χειροτονηέντα, ἐγράφη ἀπὸ Ῥώμης, ὅτε ἐκ δευτέρου παρέστη Παῦλος τῷ Καίσαρι Νέρωνι: “The second (epistle) was written from Rome to Timothy, who was ordained the first bishop of the church of Ephesus, when Paul appeared before the emperor Nero the second time.” Which although it be left out in some Greek testaments, yet is it in the most, the best, and the ancientest, yea, almost in all; neither is this a sufficient answer to say that the subscription¹ of some one or two epistles seem to be untrue, therefore this is untrue. For the² subscription, as it is (no doubt) of great antiquity, so is it consonant to all old ancient authority.

3.
Consent of histories.

Thirdly, the universal consent of histories conclude him to be bishop at Ephesus. Eusebius, Lib. iii. cap. 4., saith that “Timothy was the first bishop of Ephesus³.”

Dorotheus, who lived in Dioclesian’s time, writeth that “Paul made him bishop of Ephesus⁴.”

Nicephorus, Lib. ii. cap. 34., saith that “Paul made him bishop of Ephesus, before he writ his first epistle unto him⁵.”

Hierome, in Catalog. Scripto. Eccles., saith that “he was made bishop of Ephesus by Paul⁶.”

Isidorus, De Patribus novi Testamenti, saith also that “he was bishop of Ephesus⁷.”

Antoninus⁸, Parte i. titulo vi. cap. i., affirmeth the same

[¹ Subscriptions, Answ. 2.]

[² This, Answ. 2.]

[³ Τιμόθεός γε μὴν τῆς ἐν Ἐφέσῳ παροικίας ἱστορεῖται πρῶτος τὴν ἐπίσκοπὸν πῆν ἐιληχέναι.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. iv. p. 58.]

[⁴ Timotheus Ephesiorum episcopus a Paulo constitutus, evangelium Domini Jesu Christi Ephesi exorsus, Illyricum usque, et in universa Hellade prædicavit, ubi et mortuus et honorifice sepultus est.—Dorothe. de Vit. et Mort. Proph. et Apost. Synops. in Magn. Biblioth. Vet. Patr. Col. Agrip. 1618-22. Tom. III. p. 148. This Synopsis is spurious. See Cave, Script. Eccles. Hist. Lit. Oxon. 1740-3. Vol. I. pp. 163, &c.]

[⁵ ... τὴν πρὸς Τιμόθεον πρῶτην γράφει ἐπιστολὴν ὃν ἐπίσκοπον Ἐφέσου πρότερον καταστήσειεν.—Niceph. Call. Eccles. Hist. Lut. Par. 1630. Lib. II. cap. xxxiv. Tom. I. p. 189.]

[⁶ Timotheus autem Ephesiorum episcopus ordinatus a beato Paulo, ex gentibus erat, non ex circumcisione.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1533-4. Catalog. Script. Eccles. II. Tom. I. fol. 94. 2. This is an addition to Jerome’s genuine catalogue.]

[⁷ Timotheus, Ephesiorum episcopus sanctus, ... apud Ephesum, in monte, qui vocatur Pion, cum magno honore sepultus, quiescit.—Isidor. Hisp. Op. Col. Agrip. 1617. De Vit. et Mort. Sanct. 86. p. 366.]

[⁸ Antonius, Answ. 2.]

out of Polycrates⁹. So doth *Supplementum Chroni.*¹⁰ So Timothy, doth also Volaterane, Lib. xx.; where he calleth him *præsulem Ephesinum*¹¹. And all the histories that I have read, which make any mention of him.

Historia Magdel., Centu. i. Lib. ii. cap. 10. in vita Ioan. Evangel., hath these words: *Constat Paulum Ephesinæ ecclesiæ Timotheum dedisse pastorem*¹²: “It is certain that Paul appointed Timothy pastor of the church of Ephesus¹³.”

Surely it is the general consent of all histories that Timothy was bishop of Ephesus.

Fourthly, the fathers affirm the same.

Dionysius Areopagita (so called of some men), who lived in the apostles’ time, writeth his book De Divinis Nominibus, “to Timothy bishop of Ephesus¹⁴.”

Epiphanius, Lib. iii. Tom. i., affirmeth that “Timothy was bishop of Ephesus¹⁵.”

Ambrose saith the same in his preface to the first epistle written to Timothy¹⁶.

Chrysostom in his argument of the same epistle giveth this reason why Paul of all his disciples writ only to Timothy and Titus, “because he had committed to them the government and care of the church; and the other he carried about with him¹⁷.” The same Chrysostom, upon the fourth to the fathers.

4.
Consent of

[⁹ De eo sic scribit Polycrates presbyter. Timotheus...a Paulo apostolo edoctus est...devenit cum eo ad...Ephesinorum metropolim, a quo episcopatum ibidem consecutus est...At operarii diaboli indignati palis et lapidibus justum interfecerunt.—Antonin. Chronic. Op. Lugd. 1586. Pars I. Tit. vi. cap. xxviii. 6. p. 448. Conf. Bolland. Act. Sanct. Antv. 1643. Jan. xxiv. Tom. II. p. 566.]

[¹⁰ Timotheus Pauli apostoli discipulus, Ephesi episcopus ab eodem magistro ordinatus, &c.—Suppl. Chronic. Par. 1538. Lib. viii. fol. 181.]

[¹¹ Timotheus...præsul Ephesinus, &c.—R. Volater. Comm. Urban. Par. 1603. Lib. xx. col. 727.]

[¹² Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. i. Lib. ii. cap. x. col. 569.]

[¹³ The translation of this sentence is not in Answ. 2.]

[¹⁴ Τῷ συμπρεσβυτέρῳ Τιμοθέῳ Διονύσιος ὁ πρεσβύτερος.—Dion. Areop. Op. Antv. 1634. De Div. Nom. cap. i. Tom. I. p. 437. Conf. Pachym. Paraphr. in Cœlest. Hierarch. cap. i. l. ibid. p. 9. The works ascribed to Dionysius are not genuine.]

[¹⁵ Epiph. Op. Par. 1622. Adv. Hær. Lib. iii. Tom. i. Hær. lxxv. 5. Tom. I. p. 909. See before, pages 291, 2, note 2.]

[¹⁶ Hunc ergo jam creatum episcopum instruit per epistolam quomodo deberet ecclesiam ordinare.—Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Timoth. prim. Prolog. Tom. II. Append. col. 289.]

[¹⁷ Τίνος οὖν ἕνεκεν Τίτῳ καὶ Τιμοθέῳ γράφει μόνοις; ὅτι τοῦτοις ἤδη ἐκκλησίας ἦν ἐγκειρικῶς, ἐκείνους δὲ ἔτι μεθ’ αὐτοῦ περιῆγε.—Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Epist. i. ad Timoth. cap. i. Arg. Tom. XI. p. 547.]

Timothy,
bishop.

Ephe., speaking of pastors and doctors, useth Timothy and Titus for an example¹.

Œcumenius likewise, upon the fourth to the Ephe., calleth Timothy and Titus bishops². And upon 1 Tim. i. he saith that Paul ordained Timothy bishop of Ephesus³. And in the fifth chapter upon these words, Manus cito nemini imponas, he saith, *Mandat de ordinationibus, episcopo enim scribebat*⁴: “He giveth precepts of ordaining; for he wrote to a bishop⁵.”

Theodoret, upon the first to Timothy, affirmeth in plain words that “Timothy had cure of souls committed unto him⁶.”

But to be short, there is not one old writer which speaking of this matter doth not testify that Timothy was bishop of Ephesus.

5.
Consent of late writers.

Last of all, I prove him to be bishop there by the consent of the late writers.

Erasmus, in his Annotations, saith that Paul made him bishop; so saith he likewise in his Paraphr. 1 Tim. iv.⁷

Pellican saith the same, 1 Timoth. i.⁸

Zuinglius, in his book called Ecclesiastes, saith directly that “Timothy was a bishop⁹.”

[¹ Τί οὖν; οἱ ποιμένες καὶ οἱ διδάσκαλοι ἐλάττους; καὶ πάνν, τῶν περιούτων καὶ εὐαγγελιζομένων οἱ καθήμενοι καὶ περὶ ἓνα τόπον ἡσυχολημένοι, οἷον Τιμόθεος, Τίτος.—Id. in Epist. ad Ephes. cap. iv. Hom. xi. Tom. XI. p. 83.]

[² Τοὺς τὰς ἐκκλησίας ἐμπειπιστευμένους λέγει, τοὺς ἐπισκόπους, οἷος ὁ Τιμόθεος, οἷος ὁ Τίτος ἦν.—Œcumen. Op. Lut. Par. 1631. Comm. cap. vi. in Epist. ad Ephes. Tom. II. p. 36.]

[³ ... ἐνταῦθα δὲ [ἐν Ἐφέσῳ] αὐτὸν ἐπίσκοπον ἐκεχειροτονήκει.—Id. Comm. cap. i. in 1. Epist. ad Timoth. Tom. II. p. 210.]

[⁴ Καὶ περὶ χειροτονιῶν διαλαμβάνει. ἐπισκόπῳ γὰρ ἔγραφε.—Id. ibid. cap. xiii. p. 242.]

[⁵ The translation is not in Answ. 2.]

[⁶ Ταῦτα τοῖνυν, φησί, γράφω, διδάσκων πῶς δεῖ πολιτεύεσθαι τοὺς ψυχῶν πεπιστευμένους κηδεμονίαν.—Theod. Op. Lut. Par. 1642-84. In Epist. 1. ad Timoth. cap. iv. v. 15. Tom. III. p. 477.]

[⁷ ... feci te episcopum, &c.—Erasm. Op. L. Bat. 1703-6. Adnot. in Epist. Paul. ad Timoth. 1. cap. i. v. 18. Tom. VI. col. 931. Te non ambitus aut hominum favor, sed divinus Spiritus per ora prophetarum significans Dei voluntatem ad id muneris designavit, ac mox presbyterorum auctoritas, rite tibi impositis manibus, episcopi functionem delegavit.—Id. Paraphr. in Epist. 1. ad Timoth. cap. iv. v. 14. Tom. VII. col. 1048.]

[⁸ Cui doctorem urbi [Epheso] Paulus Timotheum præfecit, &c.—C. Pellican. Comm. in Omn. Apost. Epist. Tigur. 1539. In 1. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. i. p. 467. Conf. p. 478.]

[⁹ H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1581. Ecclesiast. Pars II. fol. 45. See below, page 309, note 3.]

Bucer saith the same, writing upon the iv. chapter of the Timothy, epistle to the Ephes.¹⁰ bishop.

Calvin upon 1 Tim. i. calleth him “pastor of the church of Ephesus¹¹.” And in the 1 Timoth. iv. expounding these words, Ne donum quod in te est &c., he saith: *Spiritus sanctus oraculo Timotheum destinaverat, ut in ordinem pastorum cooptaretur*¹²: “The Holy Ghost by oracle did appoint Timothy, that he should be chosen into the order of pastors¹³.” And in the 2 Timoth. iv. saith that he did excel *vulgares pastores*¹⁴: “common pastors,” meaning that he was an excellent pastor, endued with more singular and notable gifts, and of greater authority than the common sort of pastors be. And in the same chapter, speaking of Paul’s sending for Timothy from Ephesus to Rome, he saith that “there was no small cause why Paul sent for Timothy from that church which he ruled and governed, and that so far off: hereby we may gather (saith he) how profitable conference is with such men; for it might be profitable to all churches which Timothy might learn in a small time: so that the absence of half a year, or a whole year, is nothing in comparison of the commodity that cometh thereby¹⁵.” And, again, in the same place he saith that “Paul sent Tychicus to Ephesus, when he sent for Timothy to Rome, in the mean time to supply Timothy’s absence¹⁶.” By all these places it is manifest that Calvin taketh Timothy to be pastor and bishop of Ephesus; as I have before said¹⁷.

Bullinger, upon these words also, Ne neglexeris quod in te est donum, &c., noteth three things to be observed in the ordering of a bishop, and proveth thereby that Timothy was lawfully called to his bishopric¹⁸. And upon these words,

[¹⁰ M. Bucer. Prælect. in Epist. ad Ephes. Basil. 1562. cap. iv. p. 107. See before, page 231, note 7.]

[¹¹ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. i. ad Tim. cap. i. 3. Tom. VII. p. 438. See Vol. I. p. 508, note 1.]

[¹² Id. ibid. cap. iv. 14. p. 458. See Vol. I. page 508, note 2.]

[¹³ The translation is not given in Answ. 2.]

[¹⁴ Id. in Epist. ii. ad Tim. cap. iv. 5. p. 490. See Vol. I. page 508, note 3.]

[¹⁵ Id. ibid. 9. p. 491. See Vol. I. page 508, note 4.]

[¹⁶ Id. ibid. 10. ibid. See Vol. I. page 509, note 5.]

[¹⁷ These five words are not in Answ. 2.]

[¹⁸ Colligimus autem nos ex hoc Pauli loco tria in cujusvis episcopi ordinatione necessaria esse. Primum ut habeat donum Dei, hoc est ut sit irreprehensibilis bonarum et literarum et rerum non tam studiosus quam peritus. Deinde ut juste et sancte, hoc est secundum verbum Dei eligatur ac vocetur. Postremo ut delecto et ecclesiæ quod aiunt præsentato imponantur manus.....Certe cum ea fiunt ex

Timothy,
bishop.

2 Tim. i., Quamobrem commonefacio te ut suscites donum &c., he saith that, per donum Dei, "Paul understandeth the gift of prophesying, et functionem episcopalem: the office of a bishop; to the which the Lord called Timothy, but by the ministry of Paul¹." What can be spoken more plainer?

Illyricus, in his epistle dedicatory to the new testament, saith that "Paul praised Timothy his bishop²;" and, in his preface to the epistle written to Timothy, he calleth Timothy and Titus *præstantes doctores, multarumque ecclesiarum episcopos*³: "notable doctors, and bishops of many churches⁴."

Of the same judgment is Musculus, and all the rest of the late writers that I have read, one only excepted⁵; who notwithstanding in effect confesseth also that he was bishop at Ephesus; for in his annotations, 1 Tim. iv., upon these words, usquedum venero, &c., he saith that, "when Paul sent for the ministers of Ephesus to Miletum, Acts xx., he sent for Timothy especially." Cujus ministros (meaning of Ephesus), *ac proinde Timotheum inprimis Miletum accersivit*⁶. But it is manifest, Acts xx., that they were all pastors and bishops; therefore Timothy was a bishop. The same author, upon these words, 1 Tim. v., Adversus presbyterum &c., saith: *Timotheum in Ephesino presbyterio tum fuisse τὸν προεστῶτα, i. antistitem, ut vocat Justinus*⁷. And addeth that "it is manifest by Cyprian, that the bishop did rule in the college of seniors." Then, if he that was chief in the college of seniors was a bishop, and Timothy was chief in the college of seniors, it must needs follow that Timothy was a bishop.

institutione Domini fiunt. Et apostolus hinc magna petiit argumenta quibus Timotheum sui admoneret officii.—H. Bullinger. Comm. in Omn. Apost. Epist. Tigur. 1539. In i. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. iv. p. 585.]

[¹ Paulus in præsentī per donum Dei prophetiæ donum intellexit et functionem episcopalem, ad quam vocarat Timotheum Dominus, sed per ministerium Pauli, &c.—Id. Comm. in ii. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. i. p. 603.]

[² Sic etiam idem [Paulus] laudat suum episcopum Timotheum, &c.—Nov. Test. ex Vers. Erasm. cum Gloss. Comp. Flac. Illyr. Basil. 1570. Epist. Dedic. fol. * 3.]

[³ Ibid. In Quat. Epist. Timoth. &c. inser. Præf. p. 1036; where plurimarumque.]

[⁴ The translation is not in Answ. 2.]

[⁵ ... voluit eum [Timotheum] Paulus Ephesi subsistere, non ut illi ecclesiæ, tanquam episcopus, addictus esset: sed ut ecclesia constituta, pseudapostolis occurreret: &c.—Nov. Test. cum Th. Bezae Annot. H. Steph. 1565. In Epist. ad Timoth. i. cap. i. v. 3. p. 454.]

[⁶ ... præter expectationem coactus est, mutato consilio, Ephesum prætervehi: cujus tamen ministros &c.—Ibid. cap. iv. v. 13. p. 467.]

[⁷ Ibid. cap. v. v. 19. p. 470; where fuisse προεστῶτα (id est antistitem).]

But it may appear how little learning and learned men be esteemed of those, which, to maintain contention, are not ashamed to deny that which all learned men agree upon. Timothy, bishop.

Their reasons, as in number they be not many, so in substance they be nothing: I will recite the chief, and leave the rest to children to be discussed.

The first is taken out of the 2 Tim. iv.; where Paul saith to Timothy, Opus perage evangelistæ: "Do the work of an evangelist." Their reason is this: Paul biddeth Timothy do the work of an evangelist; ergo, Timothy was not bishop. The chief reasons to the contrary answered.

First therefore we must search out what opus evangelistæ is, and then try whether it be incident to the office of a bishop, or no. 1.
The place
2 Tim. iv. answered.

Bullinger upon that place saith that "he doth the work of an evangelist, which preacheth the gospel purely, and is not by any persecutions or adversity driven from his calling⁸." The work of an evangelist.

Hemingius saith that opus evangelistæ, generally taken, is "to preach the gospel⁹."

Musculus, in Locis Commun. titulo de verbi ministris, saith that "he is evangelista either that preacheth or that writeth the gospel; and that Paul in the first sense speaketh to Timothy, saying, *Opus fac evangelistæ*¹⁰."

And in the same place, among other things that Paul requireth of a bishop, he affirmeth this to be one, *ut opus peragat evangelistæ*¹¹. So saith Illyricus likewise¹².

Zuinglius also is of the same judgment in his book called Ecclesiastes, and proveth by that text of Paul, that "the work of an evangelist and of a bishop is all one¹³." Now how

[⁸ Opus evangelistæ peragit qui evangelium pure prædicat nec ullis persecutionibus aut adversitatum fluctibus depulsus clavum abjicit.—H. Bullinger. Comm. in Omn. Apost. Epist. In II. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. iv. p. 617.]

[⁹ ... Timothy, whom St Paul exhorteth to do the work of an "evangelist:" which work appeareth to have been enjoined to the apostles, in bestowing their travail in preaching the gospel everywhere.—N. Hemming, The Epistle to the Ephesians expounded, transl. by A. Fleming, Lond. 1581. chap. iv. vv. 11, 12, 13. p. 137.]

[¹⁰ Evangelistam esse quid sit, varie exponitur. Breviter, vel est qui prædicat, vel qui literis mandat historias et doctrinam evangelii. Priore sensu Timotheo dicit apostolus: Opus fac evangelistæ, 2 Tim. 4.—Wolfg. Muscul. Loc. Comm. Theolog. Basil. 1599. De Ministr. Verb. Dei, p. 194.]

[¹¹ Id. ibid. p. 196.]

[¹² Tertio jubet, eum facere opus evangelistæ, quod pertinet potissimum ad doctrinam.—Nov. Test. ex Vers. Erasm. cum Gloss. Comp. Flac. Illyr. sup. II. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. iv. p. 1085.]

[¹³ See below, page 300, note 3.]

Timothy,
bishop.

this reason doth follow: Paul did bid Timothy preach the gospel purely and constantly; ergo, Timothy was not a bishop, let every man judge.

2.
The place
Ephes. iv.
answered.

The second reason is taken out of the fourth to the Ephe.: Et ipse dedit alios quidem apostolos, alios vero prophetas, alios autem evangelistas, alios autem pastores ac doctores: "He therefore gave some to be apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers." The reason is framed on this sort: an evangelist and a bishop were distinct offices, and could not be both joined in one. But Timothy was an evangelist; ergo, he was not a bishop. This argument is very feeble in every part. For first the major is utterly false; for those offices named by Paul were not so distinct but that divers of them may concur in one man; as may easily be proved. Paul was an apostle and also a doctor, 2 Timoth. i. Matthew and John being apostles were also evangelists; as the consent of all writers doth testify.

The major false.

Timothy was according to M. Beza his judgment both an evangelist and also a prophet: look his notes in the iv. chapter of the first to Timothy¹.

Zuinglius, in his book called Ecclesiastes, saith that "an evangelist is nothing else but a bishop or a pastor, as it is manifest (saith he) by the words of Paul which he speaketh to Timothy, saying, Opus fac evangelistæ; and Timothy, at that time when Paul writ his² epistle unto him, was a bishop; and therefore it is certain that according to Paul his sentence the office of an evangelist and of a bishop is all one³." These be the very words of Zuinglius.

Bullinger, expounding this place in the fourth to the Ephe., hath these words: "There is no man which seeth not these names to be confounded, and one to be taken for another; for an apostle is also a prophet, a doctor, an evangelist, a minister, and a bishop; and a bishop is an evangelist and a prophet: a prophet is a doctor, a minister, and an evangelist. Therefore the apostle Paul by these sundry names doth signify these divers gifts which God hath bestowed upon his church to salvation. And, in that he so often useth this disjunction, alios atque alios, he hath signified that all gifts are not given to one man, but that divers men have divers gifts of the Spirit; whereof he hath spoken more in the xii. to the Rom., and the 1. to the Corinth. xii. chapter⁴. Hitherto Bullinger.

[¹ Nam probabilis est, quum jam haberet insigne prophetiæ donum, fuisse ex Spiritus sancti mandato illi impositas manus a presbyteris Ephesinis, id est ad prophetandum in illa ecclesia fuisse delectum, tantisper dum alio vocaretur a Domino: erat enim evangelista.—Nov. Test. cum Th. Bezae Annot. II. Steph. 1565. Ad Timoth. i. cap. iv. v. 14. p. 467.]

[² This, Answ. 2, and Def. A.]

[³ Nec etiam evangelistam alium, quam episcopum vel pastorem esse dicere possumus, quemadmodum ex Pauli verbis certo colligere licet, quibus Timotheum suum compellens ait, ...opus perage evangelistæ... Atqui Timotheus tunc temporis, cum hæc illi Paulus scriberet, episcopum agebat. Unde constat juxta Pauli sententiam idem esse episcopi et evangelistæ officium.—II. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1581. Ecclesiast. Pars II. fol. 45.]

Timothy,
bishop.

Pellican in the same place is of the same judgment⁵.

These offices therefore, or gifts, may well concur in one man; so that the major is false; and this conclusion followeth not: Timothy was an evangelist; ergo, he was no bishop.

The minor (which is this: Timothy was an evangelist) is very doubtful. For first it may be doubted what an evangelist is. The common opinion of old writers, and also of divers late writers, is that those were properly called evangelists which writ the gospels. Other say that he is an evangelist which preacheth the gospel. Some say that he was an evangelist that was occupied in teaching the people plainly and simply. Calvin and some other think that they were next unto the apostles in degree, and helpers of them, and such as supplied their office oftentimes⁶. Divers other opinions there are of⁷ evangelists, and scarce two agree in one opinion touching the office of an evangelist. The most say (which also the etymo-

The minor doubtful.

[⁴ Nemo autem est qui non videat hæc vocabula invicem confundi et alterum accipi pro altero. Nam apostolus etiam propheta, doctor, evangelista, presbyter atque episcopus est. Et episcopus evangelista et propheta est. Propheta doctor, presbyter, et evangelista. Proinde apostolus Paulus variis hisce vocabulis varia illa dona significavit quæ Dominus ecclesiæ suæ impertiit ad salutem. Quod vero dirimente particula subinde repetiit alios atque alios, significavit non uni data esse omnia, sed alios aliis insignitos esse ornamentis Spiritus, non ut quæstum faciant aut cæteris se præferant, sed dona sua in commune conferant. De qua re pluribus disputavit in 12. capite ad Romanos, item in 1. ad Corinth. cap. 12.—II. Bullinger. Comm. in Omn. Apost. Epist. Tigur. 1539. In Epist. ad Ephes. cap. iv. p. 431.]

[⁵ C. Pellican. Comm. in Omn. Apost. Epist. Tigur. 1539. In Epist. ad Ephes. cap. iv. v. 7. p. 383.]

[⁶ Iis [apostolis] proximi erant evangelistæ, et munus affine habebant: tantum gradu dignitatis erant dispares...Ergo secundum apostolos istorum subsidiaria opera usus est Dominus.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. ad Ephes. cap. iv. 11. Tom. VII. p. 340.]

[⁷ There is of, Answ. 2.]

Timothy,
bishop.

logy of the name doth import) that those were evangelists which either preached or writ the gospel.

St Augustine, in his second book *contra Faustum Manichæum*¹, writeth hereof on this sort: *Narratores ... originis, factorum, dictorum, passionum Domini nostri Jesu Christi proprie² dicti sunt evangelistæ*³: "They are properly called evangelists which are the declarers of the birth, deeds, sayings, and sufferings of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Which may be done both by preaching and writing the gospel; as I said before.

Now, if Timothy be an evangelist because he preached the gospel, there is no cause why he may not be a bishop also. And it is certain that, when Paul said unto him, "Do the work of an evangelist," he meant the preaching of the gospel.

If an evangelist be taken in any other signification, how can it be proved that Timothy was an evangelist? For this proveth it not, Fac opus evangelistæ: a man may do the work of an evangelist, though he be not an evangelist: a man may do the work of a pastor, though he be not a pastor.

The conclusion not necessary.

To be short, the conclusion is not necessary, howsoever the premises be true; for, although it should be granted that both the major and minor were true, yet the conclusion doth not follow; for Timothy might first be an evangelist, and after a bishop; as Zuinglius, in his book called Ecclesiastes, saith that "Philip the evangelist, being a deacon, was afterward bishop and pastor of Cesarea: James the younger being an apostle, as Hierome and all the old fathers do testify, was after bishop of Jerusalem, and there remained; and divers of the apostles, when they left off going from place to place, became in the end bishops, and remained in one place; as it appeareth in old histories⁴."

[¹ Manichæ, Answ. 2, and Def. A.]

[² Propriæ, Answ. 2.]

[³ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Contr. Faust. Manich. Lib. II. cap. ii. Tom. VIII. col. 185.]

[⁴ Quo in loco (Act. xxi.) illud nobis primo notandum est, Philippum hunc Cæsariensis ecclesiæ evangelistam, episcopum vel pastorem fuisse, nec apostolum a Luca dici, quamvis unus e septem illis esset, qui antea diaconi constituti erant.... Simul etiam illud notari debet, quod apostolorum nomen deposuerunt, ut primum uni alicui ecclesiæ affixi, illius curam continuam habuerunt: cum nimirum vel senecta impediti, vel morbis afflicti peregrinationum molestiis et periculis amplius sufficere non potuerunt. Tunc enim non apostoli amplius, sed episcopi dicti sunt. Possumus autem hujus rei exemplum, imo testem adducere divum Jacobum, quem nos Minorem ab ætate dicimus. Hunc enim Hieronymus

So that, although one man could not be both an evangelist and a bishop at one time, and if it be granted that Timothy was an evangelist, yet doth it not prove but that he was a bishop also.

Timothy,
bishop.

But certain it is that one man at one time might be both an evangelist and a bishop; and most certain it is that Timothy was a bishop, how certain soever it be whether⁵ he were an evangelist or no.

But here it may be said that Timothy no more returned to Ephesus after he had been the second time with Paul at Rome, and therefore not to be like that he was bishop there. This argument is only conjectural, and of no force to prove any such matter. Howbeit, if we will credit stories, whereby in such cases we must be directed, it is certain that Timothy returned to Ephesus, and there died.

Dorotheus saith that he died at Ephesus, and was there buried⁶.

Polycrates testifieth that he was stoned to death at Ephesus⁷.

Isidorus, in his book De Patribus Novi Testamenti, writeth that he was buried at Ephesus in the mount Pyon⁸.

Symeon Metaphrastes testifieth the same⁹.

Nicephorus, Lib. v. cap. 11, testifieth that "Julian the apostata did torment one Artemius for translating the bones of Andrew, Luke, and Timothy from Patra, Achaia, and Ephesus, to Constantinople¹⁰." But it is certain that Andrew was crucified at Patra by Ægeas the proconsul; and ancient [Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Catalog. Script. Eccles. 2. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 101.], et omnes simul vetusti patres, Hierosolymitanorum episcopum nominant, non aliam ob causam, quam quod ea in urbe sedem fixam posuisset.—H. Zvingli. Op. Tigur. Ecclesiast. Pars II. fol. 48.]

[⁵ It is whether, Answ. 2.]

[⁶ Dorothe. de Vit. et Mort. Proph. et Apost. Synops. in Magn. Biblioth. Vet. Patr. Col. Agrip. 1618-22. Tom. III. p. 148. See before, page 294, note 4.]

[⁷ Polycr. in Antonin. Chronic. Op. Lugd. 1586. Pars I. Tit. vi. cap. xxviii. 6. p. 448. See before, page 295, note 9.]

[⁸ Isidor. Hisp. Op. Col. Agrip. 1617. De Vit. et Mort. Sanct. 86. p. 366. See before, page 294, note 7.]

[⁹ Sim. Metaphrast. Vit. Timoth. cap. ii. 10. in Bolland. Act. Sanct. Antv. 1643. Jan. xxiv. Tom. II. p. 568.]

[¹⁰ ... Ἀρτέμιον δὲ τὸν γενναῖον τῆς εὐσεβείας ἀγωνιστὴν... δι' ἑαυτοῦ ἐκόλασατο... ὅτι περ τὰ τῶν θείων ἀποστόλων ὁστώ, ἐκ Πατρῶν καὶ Ἀχάϊας καὶ Ἐφέσου, Ἀνδρέου τε καὶ Λουκᾶ καὶ Τιμοθέου, ἀνήγαγεν ἐν τῇ Κωνσταντίνου.—Niceph. Call. Eccles. Hist. Lut. Par. 1630. Lib. x. cap. xi. Tom. II. p. 29. Conf. Lib. II. capp. xxxix. xliii. Tom. I. pp. 199, 200, 210.]

writers testify that Luke was buried in Achaia; therefore the bones that were brought from Ephesus must needs be Timothy's.

Hereby it may appear that Timothy not only returned from Rome to Ephesus, but also continued there even to his death. And therefore certain it is that he was bishop at Ephesus. But now to my purpose.

Chapter iii. The Sixty-first Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 72, Sect. ult.

Ignatius.

The bishops' authority².

Ignatius, who was St John his scholar, and lived in Christ's time, in his epistle ad Trallianos, speaketh thus of the authority of a bishop over the rest: *Quid aliud est episcopus quam quidam obtinens principatum et potestatem supra omnes*¹? "What is a bishop but one having power and rule over all?" And, in his epistle ad Smyrnenses, he writeth on this sort: *Honora quidem Deum ut auctorem universorum et Dominum; episcopum autem, ut sacerdotum principem, imaginem Dei ferentem; Dei quidem per principatum; Christi vero per sacerdotium*³: "Honour God as the author and Lord of all things, and a bishop as the chief of priests, bearing the image of God; of God, because of his superiority; of Christ, by reason of his priesthood." And a little after: "Let laymen be subject to deacons, deacons to priests, and priests to bishops, the bishop to Christ⁴." And again: "Let no man do anything which pertaineth to the church without the consent of the bishop⁵." And again: "He, that attempteth to do anything without the bishop, breaketh peace, and confoundeth good order⁶." The

[¹ Ignat. Interp. Epist. ad Trall. 7. in Cotelier. Patr. Apost. Amst. 1724. Vol. II. p. 63.]

[² The authority of bishops, Answ. 2.]

[³ Id. Interp. Epist. ad Smyrn. 9. ibid. p. 87. See before, page 171, note 7.]

[⁴ Οἱ λαϊκοὶ τοῖς διακόνοις ὑποτασσέσθωσαν. οἱ διάκονοι τοῖς πρεσβυτέροις· οἱ πρεσβύτεροι τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ· ὁ ἐπίσκοπος τῷ Χριστῷ, ὡς αὐτὸς τῷ Πατρὶ.—Id. ibid.]

[⁵ Μηδεὶς χωρὶς τοῦ ἐπισκόπου τι πρᾶσσει τῶν ἀνηκόντων εἰς τὴν ἐκκλησίαν.—Id. Gen. Epist. ad Smyrn. 8. p. 36.]

[⁶ ... πόσῳ δοκεῖτε χείρονος ἀξιοθήσεται τιμωρίας, ὁ ἄνευ ἐπισκόπου τι ποιεῖν προαιρούμενος, καὶ τὴν ὁμόνοιαν διασπᾶν, καὶ τὴν εὐταξίαν συγχέων;—Id. Interp. Epist. ad Smyrn. 9. ibid. p. 87.]

like saying he hath in his epistle *ad Magnesianos*⁷. These three epistles doth Eusebius make mention of Lib. iii. cap. 35 & 36,⁸ and Hiero. *De Viris Illustribus*⁹.

T. C. Page 87, Sect. 4.

It is no marvel, although you take up the authors of the Admonition for want of logic, for you utter great skill yourself in writing, which keep no order, but confound your reader, in that thing which even the common logic of the country, which is reason, might have directed you in; for what a confusion of times is this, to begin with Cyprian, and then come to Jerome and Chrysostom, and after to the scripture, and back again to Ignatius that was before Cyprian! which times are ill disposed of you, and that in a matter wherein it stood you upon to have observed the order of the times.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Be patient awhile: the matter is not great, the authors be known, and the antiquity of them: my mind is of the matter; and there is reason why I should thus place them. Cyprian telleth the necessity of such superiority; and so doth Chrysostom; Hierome, the cause and the original: Paul, Timothy, and Titus be examples hereof: Ignatius and the rest are brought in as witnesses of the continuance of such offices and superiority in the church, even from the apostles. Now, first to prove the name of these offices not to be antichristian, then to shew the necessity of the offices, thirdly the cause, and last of all to declare the use of the same to have been in the church even from St Paul's time to this hour, is to keep a better order than you shall be able to disorder, with all the logic, rhetoric, and hot eloquence you have.

The order observed in placing the authorities in the Answer.

Chapter iii. The Sixty-second Division.

T. C. Page 87, Sect. 4.

But as for Ignatius' place, it is sufficiently answered before, in that which was answered to Cyprian his place¹⁰; for, when he saith "the bishop hath rule over all," he meaneth no more all in the province, than in all the world; but meaneth that flock and congregation whereof he is bishop or minister. And, when he calleth him "prince of the priests," although the

[⁷ Id. Interp. Epist. ad Magnes. 4. ibid. pp. 54, 5.]

[⁸ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. xxxvi. p. 86.]

[⁹ Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Catalog. Script. Eccles. 16. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 108.]

[¹⁰ See before, pages 201, &c.]

title be too excessive and big, condemned by Cyprian and the council of Carthage¹, yet he meaneth no more the prince of all in the diocese as we take it, or of the province, than he meaneth the prince of all the priests in the world, but he meaneth those fellow-ministers² and elders that had the rule and government of that particular church and congregation whereof he is a bishop³; as the great churches have for the most part both elders which govern only, and ministers also to aid one another; and the principality, that he which they called the bishop had over the rest, hath been before at large declared.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You very lightly shake off Ignatius' words; but they have more pith in them, if it please you better to consider of them. For he maketh degrees of ministers, and the bishop to be the chief: he placeth deacons under priests, and priests under bishops, so that he giveth to the bishop superiority and government over both priests and deacons; which is the ground of this cause; and, it being granted (as it must needs, neither can this authority of Ignatius be avoided) Aerius' heresy falleth; and so doth your whole assertion.

What is meant by "prince of priests," Ignatius himself declareth, saying: *obtinens principatum et potestatem supra omnes*⁴: "having chieftly and power over all."

How this name may be well used, I have shewed before, where I have also declared the meaning of Cyprian's words, uttered in the heretical council of Carthage, and therefore not counted in the number of those councils.

Chapter iii. The Sixty-third Division.

T. C. Page 88, Sect. 1, 2.

But M. Doctor doth not remember that, whilst he thus reasoneth for the authority of the bishop, he overthroweth his archbishop quite and clean. For Ignatius will have none above the bishop but Christ; and he will have an archbishop.

I see a man cannot well serve two masters, but either he must displease the one and please the other, or by pleasing of one offend the other. For M. Doctor would fain please and uphold both; and yet his proofs are such, that every prop that he setteth under one is an axe to strike at the other.

[¹ Concil. Carthag. in Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. p. 229. See before, page 203, note 3.]

[² But those fellow-ministers, Repl. 2.]

[³ He was bishop, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Ignat. Interp. Epist. ad Trall. 7. in Coteler. Patr. Apost. Amst. 1724. Vol. II. p. 63. See before, page 304.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

I remember it very well ; and I know that an archbishop is a bishop, and that therefore there may be superiority among bishops, and yet nothing detracted from the words of Ignatius⁵. I know likewise that as well the one as the other is condemned by you, and I am well assured that the proof of the one is the proof of the other ; and therefore M. Doctor may “ well serve two masters ;” but they be such as be not only not contrary one to the other, but so nearly linked and joined together, that whatsoever pleaseth the one doth also please the other. “ M. Doctor’s props and proofs ” are such, as M. T. C. is compelled to use railing and flouting, instead of answering ; which is a shift, but how honest and christian let the world judge.

Chapter iii. The Sixty-fourth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 73, Sect. 1.

Justinus Martyr, one of the most ancient writers of the Greeks, in his second Apology ad Antoninum Pium, alloweth this superiority, and calleth him that bare rule over the other ministers *προεστῶτα*⁷. Justin⁶ Martyr.

T. C. Page 88, Sect. 2.

But that M. Doctor delighteth always, where he might fetch at the fountain, to be raking in ditches, he needed not to have gone to Justin⁶ Martyr for προεστῶς, when as St Paul calleth the ministers and elders by this title. And, if this place of Justin make for an archbishop, then instead of an archbishop in every province we shall have one in every congregation. For Justin declareth there the liturgy or manner of serving God that was in every church used of the Christians. And I pray you let it be considered what is the office of that προεστῶς, and see whether there be any resemblance in the world between him and an archbishop. For he placeth his office to be in preaching, in conceiving prayers, in ministering of the sacraments: of any commandment which he had over the rest of the ministers, or of any such privileges as the archbishop hath, he maketh not one word. It may be that the same might have the pre-

[⁵ “... thereby he affirmeth that, albeit the bishop of the diocese were the highest bishop that could be upon earth, yet there might be another higher than he.”—Sec. Repl. p. 620.]

[⁶ Justinus, Answ. 2.]

[⁷ Just. Mart. Op. Par. 1742. Apol. i. 65. p. 82.]

[⁸ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

eminence of calling the rest together, and propounding the matter to the rest of the company, and such like, as is before declared¹. As soon as ever you found προεστώς, you snatched that by and bye, and went your ways, and so deceive yourself and others. But, if you had read the whole treatise, you should have found that he was προεστώς of the people; for thus it is written in the same Apology: ἔπειτα προσφέρεται τῷ προεστῶτι τῶν ἀδελφῶν ἄρτος: "Afterward bread is brought to the president of the brethren," calling the people, as St Paul doth continually, brethren. And therefore these are M. Doctor's arguments out of Martyr's place: There was a minister which did stand before or was president of the rest in every particular church and congregation; therefore there was an archbishop over all the province. And again: There was one which ruled the people in every congregation; therefore there was one that ruled all the ministers throughout the whole province. And, albeit things were in great purity in the days that Justin lived, in respect of the times which followed; yet, as there was in other things which appear in his works, and even in the ministration of the sacraments spoken of in that place, corruption, in that they mingled water and wine together; so even in the ministry there began to peep out something which went from the simplicity of the gospel, as that the name of προεστώς, which was common to the elders with the ministers of the word, was (as it seemeth) appropriated unto one.

Nay, they are yours, and like to the rest.

Antiquum
obtinet.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Though notable and famous doctors be "ditches" with T. C., yet are they pleasant and clear rivers with men of more liberal sciences. St Paul, 1 Tim. v., hath these words, οἱ καλῶς προεστῶτες πρεσβύτεροι, &c., which derogate nothing from anything that I have alleged, but justifieth the same; for there it signifieth rule and government; but yet in Justin it signifieth some one that had the chief rule and government over the rest; as M. Beza noteth upon these words, 1 Tim. v., *Adversus presbyterum &c. Præterea notandum est ex hoc loco Timotheum in Ephesino presbyterio tum fuisse προεστῶτα, id est, antistitem, ut vocat Justinus*²: "Furthermore, it is to be noted out of this place, that Timothy, in the presbytery or college of ministers at Ephesus, was προεστώς, that is to say, the prelate or bishop; as Justinus³ calleth it." You may say unto him as well as to me, that he "delighteth, where he might search at the fountain, to be raking in ditches," because he might have had the same words spoken of all ministers in the same chapter of that epistle to Timothy.

Beza.

[¹ See before, pages 269, 278.]

[² Nov. Test. cum Th. Bezae Annot. II. Steph. 1565. In Epist. ad Timoth. I. cap. v. v. 19. p. 470.]

[³ Justines, Def. B.]

Furthermore, that Justinus Martyr doth use this word for him that hath authority over the rest, not only of the people, but of such also as be presbyteri, the same M. Beza testifieth upon the first to the Philip. saying: *Hæc igitur olim erat episcoporum appellatio, donec qui politiæ causa reliquis fratribus in cætu præerat, quem Justinus προεστῶτα vocat, peculiariter dici episcopus cæpit*⁴: "This therefore was the common name of bishops, until he, which for policy' sake did govern the rest in the company, whom Justin calleth προεστῶτα, began to be called peculiarly a bishop." In which words M. Beza testifieth that he whom Justinus called προεστῶτα did govern as well the other ministers as he did the people. And, whosoever doth duly consider Justin's words, and peruse that whole place, he shall easily understand that those whom he there calleth "brethren" were ministers and deacons; for afterward, speaking of the people, he calleth them by the name of people, as it is there to be seen.

I know that Justin speaketh of their "manner of liturgy," but that doth not improve anything that I have affirmed; for I speak of the name προεστῶς in that signification that Justin doth use it, which is for one that doth govern the rest. Wherefore this is my argument: There was one among the ministers in Justin's time that did rule and govern the rest; ergo, there was then superiority among the ministers of the church, and one was above another; which is the overthrow of your ground of equality, at the which I shoot; and, the which being overthrown, the superiority of bishops and archbishops is soon proved. And, again, I say that in Justin's time there was one that governed the rest of the ministers; ergo, there may be one to do the same now in like manner. These be my reasons; as for yours, they be like to the rest of your own. But your best refuge is to discredit the author, which you do in Justin, as you have done in the rest. There is no antiquity of any credit with you, no, not in a matter of history, as this is. For Justinus doth but declare the manner used in the church in his time. It is well that in the end you confess this name προεστῶς to signify in Justin the authority of one minister: this because you are constrained to acknowledge, you will do it with nipping and biting the author, after your manner. Ignatius, who was before Justin¹, as you have heard, useth a more lofty word; for he doth call him, *princeps sacerdotum*²: “the prince or chief of priests.”

[⁴ Ibid. In Epist. ad Philip. cap. i. v. 1. p. 404; where τὸν προεστῶτα.]

Chapter iii. The Sixty-fifth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 73, Sect. 1.

Cyrril.⁴

Cyrrillus calleth him ἀρχιερέα³. [Tertullian in his book De Baptis. saith that a bishop is *summus sacerdos*⁵.]⁶

T. C. Page 88, Sect. 3.

Another of M. Doctor's reasons for to prove the archbishop is that Cyril maketh mention of an high priest; whereunto I answer that he that bringeth in a priest into the church goeth about to bury our Saviour Christ; for, although it might be proved that the word “priest” were the same with the Greeks' πρεσβύτερος, yet (as shall appear in his place) is the use of this word “priest” for a minister of the gospel very dangerous. And, as for him that bringeth in an high priest into the church, he goeth about to put our Saviour Christ out of his office, who is proved, in the Hebr. vii. epistle to the Hebrews, to be the only high priest, and that there can be no more as long as the world endureth. And yet, if all this were granted, you are not yet come to that which you desire to prove, that is, an archbishop. For, if you look in Theodoret you shall find this word, ἀρχιερωσύνη, which signifieth the high priesthood, to be nothing else but a bishopric⁸; and in the seventh chapter of that book, and so forth divers times, you shall have ἀρχιερεὺς taken for a bishop, as, i Lib. 3. cap. 7 speaking of the council of Nice, he saith that there was 318.

In what book?

[¹ Cartwright, after calling Whitgift's arguments “pitiful” and “childish,” proceeds: “Justin's writings, compared as I compared them with the holy scripture, are as I said a ditch: I added the reason, that there was in them not a little mud of errors, which the D. could not answer.” Of the assertion that Ignatius was before Justin, he says: “If he were the true Ignatius, he should indeed be ‘before Justin;’ but, to let pass other exceptions, with M. Calvin's sharp censure of him, it is absurd to ascribe to Ignatius, St John's scholar, that vain boast of being able to expound [Ignat. Interp. Epist. ad Trall. 5. in Cotel. Patr. Apostol. Amst. 1724. Vol. II. p. 23.] the orders of angels, &c.”—Sec. Repl. pp. 621, 2.]

[² Ignat. Interp. Epist. ad Smyrn. 9. in Cotel. Patr. Apost. Vol. II. p. 87. See before, page 304.]

[³ The editor has not been able to find the passage intended.]

[⁴ This is not in Answ.]

[⁵ Dandi [baptismum] quidem habet jus summus sacerdos, qui est episcopus.—Tertull. Op. Lut. 1641. De Bapt. 17. p. 263.]

[⁶ This sentence is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[⁷ These marginal references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁸ Κατὰ τοῦτον δὲ τὸν χρόνον, τῆς μὲν Ῥωμαίων ἐκκλησίας Σίλβεστρος κατέχευε τὰς ἡνίας, Μιλτιάδην διαδεχόμενος, ὅς... τὴν τῆς αὐτῆς ἀρχιερωσύνης χειροτονίαν ἐδέξατο.—Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. i. cap. iii. p. 8.]

ἀρχιερεῖς: high priests⁹. Now I think you will not say there were 318. archbishops; if you do, you are confuted by all ecclesiastical writers that ever I read, which, speaking of them, calleth¹⁰ them bishops.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This name “priest” is usually applied to the minister of the gospel, in all histories, fathers, and writers of antiquity. And the most of the latest writers do use it, and make no great scrupulosity in it; neither doth the name “priest” “bury our Saviour Christ,” as long as it is used for a minister of the gospel; neither is there any danger in it at all, as long as the office is lawful.

Not only Cyril useth this name “high priest,” but Tertull. Tertull. also in his book De Baptismo, where he saith that episcopus is *summus sacerdos*¹¹: “The bishop is the high priest;” and in like manner Theodoret, as you here say; and yet none of them meant to derogate anything from the office of Christ.

I told you before how names proper to Christ may be also attributed to men¹²: this being granted, I have as much as I desire; for, as the bishop is called ἀρχιερεὺς, in the respect of other priests that be inferior unto him, so is the chief bishop called archiepiscopus, in respect of other bishops that be governed and directed by him. And, as among the ministers there is one chief which is called a bishop, so among the bishops there is one chief also that is called an archbishop; and this is that ordo that Augustine speaketh of¹³; as I have said in my Answer to the Admonition, in the words of M. Fox.

Chapter iii. The Sixty-sixth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 73, Sect. 2.

Theodoretus, Lib. v. c. 28, writeth that Chrysostom, Theodoret of Chrysostom¹⁴. being the bishop of Constantinople, did not only rule that church, but the churches also in Thracia, in Asia, and in Pontus¹⁵.

[⁹ Ὁκτωκαίδεκα δὲ καὶ τριακόσιοι συνήλθον ἀρχιερεῖς.—Id. ibid. cap. vii. p. 24.]

[¹⁰ Call, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[¹¹ See above, note 5.]

[¹² “... absurd, and before confuted.”—Sec. Repl. p. 622.]

[¹³ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. De Civ. Dei, Lib. xix. cap. xiii. l. Tom. VII. col. 557. See below, page 334.]

[¹⁴ Answ. 2 has simply Theodoretus, and does not repeat the word in the margin of the next paragraph, page 318.]

[¹⁵ Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. v. cap. xxviii. pp. 235, 6. See below, page 313, note 5.]

T. C. Page 88, Sect. 4.

Chrysostom followeth, which, as M. Doctor saith, "ruled not only the church of Constantinople, but the churches of Thracia, Asia, and Pontus;" and he saith it out of Theodoret. But herein it may appear that either M. Doctor hath a very evil conscience in falsifying writers, and that in the points which lie in controversy, or else he hath taken his stuff of certain at the second hand, without any examination of it at all. For here he hath set down, instead of "had care of the churches of¹ Thracia, &c.,"

Or else you pluck yourself by the nose.

The words of Theodoret clipped.

"ruled the churches:" the Greek is ἐποιεῖτο τὴν προμήθειαν: it is translated also prospexit; so that it appeareth he fetched it neither from Theodoret in Greek nor in Latin. And what is this to prove an archbishop, that he had care of these churches? there is no minister but ought to have care over all the churches through Christendom, and to shew that care for them in comforting or admonishing of them by writing or by visiting them, if the necessity so require, and it is thought² good by the churches, and leave obtained of the place where he is minister, upon some notable and especial cause, being some man of singular gifts, whose learning and credit may profit much to the bringing to pass of that thing for the which he is to be sent. After this sort St Cyprian,

What scripture expresseth these conditions and cautions?

As it appeareth by divers epistles of his. being in Afric, had care over Rome in Europe, and wrote unto the church there³. After this sort also was Irenæus, Euseb. Lib. v. cap. 3. & 4. bishop of Lyons, sent by the French churches unto the churches in Phrygia⁴; and after this sort have M. Calvin and M. Beza been sent from Geneva in Savoy to the churches of France.

Untrue.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It shall appear, God willing, whether M. Doctor's memory or yours be worse; whether "he hath an evil conscience in falsifying writers," or you in slandering of him; whether "he taketh his stuff at the second hand," or you rather that have borrowed of other men's collections almost whatsoever you have heaped together in your book. All this I say shall appear, even to try your corrupt and untrue dealing in this place; and certainly I cannot but marvel what affection hath so gotten the upper hand of you, that it provoketh you to such outrageous speeches in a matter so manifestly counterfeit. If you have not seen the author, I will ascribe it to negligent ignorance; but, if you have seen him, I cannot ascribe it to any other thing than to unshamefast malice. The whole story as it is in Theodoret is this: 'Ο δὲ μέγας Ἰωάννης τοῦς

The falsifying of Theodoret returned upon the Replier.

Theodor Lib. v. cap. 29.

[¹ In, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² It be thought, Repl. 2.]

[³ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Presb. et Diac. Rom. Epistt. ix. xx. xxvii. xxxv. pp. 18, 19, 42, &c. 52, 3, 69.]

[⁴ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. v. capp. iii. iv. pp. 136, 7. See below page 314, note 1.]

ἐκκλησίας δεξάμενος οἶακας, τὰς τε παρά τινων γινομένας ἀδικίας σὺν παρρησίᾳ διήλεγχε, καὶ βασιλεῖ καὶ βασιλίδι παρήνει τὰ πρόσφορα, καὶ τοὺς ἱερεῖς ἡξίου κατὰ τοὺς κειμένους πολιτεύσθαι νόμους· τοὺς δὲ τούτους παραβαίνειν τολμῶντας ἐπιβαίνειν τῶν ἀνακτόρων ἐκώλυνεν, οὐ χρῆναι λέγων τῆς μὲν τῶν ἱερέων ἀπολαύειν τιμῆς, τὴν δὲ τῶν ἀληθῶν ἱερέων μὴ ζηλοῦν βιοτήν. καὶ ταύτην ἐποιεῖτο τὴν προμήθειαν οὐ μόνον ἐκείνης τῆς πόλεως, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς Θράκης ἀπάσης, εἰς ἧς αὐτὴ ἡγεμονίας διήρηται, καὶ τῆς Ἀσίας ὅλης, ὑπὸ ἑνδεκα δὲ καὶ αὐτὴ ἀρχόντων ἰθύνεται, καὶ μέντοι καὶ τὴν Ποντικὴν τούτοις κατεκόσμει τοῖς νόμοις, ἰσαρίθμους δὲ καὶ αὐτὴ ἔχει τῆς Ἀσίας τοὺς ἡγουμένους⁵: “John the great, having received the stern of the church, reprov'd the injuries of certain boldly, and counselled the king and the queen things convenient, and exhorted the priests to walk according to the laws appointed. But such as were not afraid to break them he suffered not to come to the table, saying it was not meet that those should enjoy the honour of priests, which would not follow the conversation of true priests. And this care he used not only over that city, but also over whole Thracia, which containeth six provinces, and over all Asia, which is governed under eleven rulers; and moreover he governed the church of Pontus with these laws, in which country are as many rulers as in Asia.” First he saith that “Chrysostom took the stern or government of the church;” then that “he did freely reprehend vice;” thirdly, that “he commanded the priests to live according to the laws;” fourthly, that he did excommunicate and deprive of their priestly honour such as durst transgress. Is not this “to rule?” what archbishop in England doth execute greater jurisdiction? Then it followeth immediately in Theodor.: “and with this care he did provide for or embrace not only his city, but the churches of Thracia, &c.” Where it is to be noted that Theodoret saith, “with this care, &c.,” meaning that, as he had the government of the church of Constantinople, and did there reprehend vice, commanded the priests to live according to the laws, excommunicate them that did not, and put them from their office, so did he also “in the churches of Thracia, Asia, and Pontus.” Theodoret’s words be καὶ ταύτην ἐποιεῖτο τὴν προμήθειαν, &c.; and you have craftily left out ταύτην that you might the rather cloke Theodoret's plain meaning. Besides this, Theodoret saith in plain words, that "he governed the churches in Pontus with these laws:" the Greek word is κατεκόσμει τοῖς νόμοις.

[⁵ Theod. in eod. Lib. v. cap. xxviii. pp. 235, 6; where τοὺς τῆς ἐκκλησίας, and οὐ μόνως ἐκείνης.]

I shall most heartily desire the reader to consider this dealing of yours: surely I think few papists would have dealt in like manner. And, if the words of themselves were not plain (as they be most plain), yet very reason might have taught you that this was Theodoret's meaning; for, if he should not have meant some special care of these churches, wherefore should he rather make particular mention of them than of other churches? Do you not think that wise men can easily espy your gross shifts?

Cyprian's "care over Rome" was not like the care that he had over his own churches: it could not be said that he embraced Rome with the same care of government, of re-proving, of excommunicating such as durst offend, &c., that he did Carthage and other places committed unto him, as it is here said of Chrysostom.

I omit your oversight in saying that Irenæus was sent to the churches in Phrygia; for Eusebius, *Lib. v. cap. 3, § 4.*¹ (which places you quote in your margent to prove it) hath no such thing: only he saith that Irenæus was sent to Rome to Eleutherius².

Chapter iii. The Sixty-seventh Division.

T. C. Page 89, Sect. 1.

Now, if you will conclude hereupon that Cyprian ruled the church of Rome, or Irenæus the church³ of Phrygia, or M. Calvin or M. Beza the churches of France, or that they were bishops or archbishops of those places, you shall but conclude as you were wont to do; but yet all men understand

[¹ Euseb. in eod. Lib. v. capp. iii. iv. pp. 136, 7. It was only a letter that was sent to the churches in Asia and Phrygia.]

[² Cartwright answers this division at length, contending that "care doth not necessarily draw jurisdiction or rule over that cared for," maintaining that he had not corrupted or misalleged Theodoret, and adding: "Touching Irenæus' ambassage into Phrygia, the D. eye is not simple. For, after Euseb. had shewed that there were ambassadors sent by the French churches to those of Phrygia, he addeth, as an augmentation, that they were also sent to the bishop of Rome. &c."—Sec. Repl. pp. 622, &c.]

[³ Churches, Repl. 1 and 2.]

that here is nothing less than an archbishop, or any such bishop as we have and use in our church. And, if so be that Chrysostom should be bishop or archbishop of all these churches which were in all Asia, Pontus, Thracia, as you would give the reader to understand, you make him bishop of more churches than ever the pope of Rome was when he was in his greatest pride and his empire largest. For there were six presidentships in Thracia, and in Asia there were an⁴ eleven princes, and had several regions or governments, and in Pontus as many; and, if he were bishop or archbishop of all the churches within these dominions, he had need of a long spoon to feed withal. It is certain therefore that he was bishop only of the church in Constantinople, and had an eye and a care to those other churches. And that he was bishop of one city or of one church, it may appear by that which I have before alleged out of the Greek scholiast upon Titus, who citeth there Chrysostom, where it is said that St Paul “did not mean to make one over the whole isle, but that every one should have his proper congregation, &c.⁵” And in another place he sheweth the difference between the emperor and the bishop, that the one is over the world, and the other, that is the bishop, is over one city⁷.

Or else you are deceived.

An untruth, as will appear.

The words of the scholiast perverted.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Your examples prove nothing, neither be they anything like to this of Chrysostom; for Theodoret doth mention these churches as places annexed to the bishopric of Constantinople, and properly appertaining to the care and charge of Chrysostom, the bishop of that city. Socrates, speaking of a council assembled at Constantinople, saith thus: “They do again establish the faith of the council of Nice; and dividing provinces they appoint patriarchs; there was therefore allotted unto Nectarius the great and ample city of Constantinople and Thracia, &c.⁸” And this Nectarius was patriarch of Constantinople next before Chrysostom; so that it is manifest that Chrysostom was patriarch, or archbishop, both of Constantinople and also of Thracia, &c. Sozomenus sheweth evidently that Chrysostom had jurisdiction over all Asia, and of other places also, and that he executed jurisdiction there accordingly: “For he deposed to the number of 13. bishops, some in Lycia, some in Phrygia, some in Asia; because they sold Thracia, &c. annexed to the bishopric of Constantinople.

Socrates, Lib. v. cap. 8.

Sozom. Lib. viii. cap. 6.

Chrysostom exerciseth archiepiscopal jurisdiction in Asia.

[⁴ A, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ Œcumen. Op. Lut. Par. 1631. Comm. cap. i. in Epist. ad Tit. Tom. I. p. 289. See before, pages 283, 4, note 8.]

[⁶ Repl. 2 adds here vi.]

[⁷ Οὐχὶ τῆς οἰκουμένης ὁ βασιλεύων κρατεῖ, οὗτος δὲ πόλεως μόνος;—Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Act. Apost. Hom. iii. Tom. IX. p. 29.]

[⁸ Socr. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. v. cap. viii. pp. 217, 8. See before, page 163, note 9.]

benefices, and bestowed them for favour and for reward¹." And, if you were not either very ignorant or wilfully bent, you might have read in ecclesiastical histories that one bishop had authority and charge over divers churches, long before Chrysostom's time; the which thing I have also before proved by divers examples.

That Chrysostom was archbishop of all those churches (although it be sufficiently proved by the testimony of Theodoret, a worthy writer and notable divine, and by Sozomen also), yet will I add (as a full confutation of all your fancies in this matter) the judgment of the writers and collectors of the Centuries, who, being many, learned, and travelling especially in such matters, deserve great credit. In their v. Century, cap. x. they write thus of Chrysostom: *Non autem tantum istius ecclesie pastorem egit, &c.*²: "But he was not only pastor of this church (meaning Constantinople), but was archbishop also, or overseer, of other churches in Thracia, which was divided into six presidentships; in Asia, which was ruled of eleven prætors; and in the region of Pontus, which is likewise divided into eleven presidentships." If no report of any historiographer will please you, what remedy? though you remain wilful still, yet I trust the tractable reader may here find sufficient to satisfy him. For a further proof that the bishops of Constantinople were called archbishops, I could refer you to the general council of Chalcedon, which was anno 453, where Flavianus is called archbishop of Constantinople sundry times³. Where also it appeareth that the archbishop of Constantinople had the ordaining, allowing, and disallowing of the bishops in Pontus, Asia, and Thracia⁴. You are greatly deceived in saying that, "if he were archbishop Cent. v. cap.

10.
Chrysostom,
archbishop of Thracia,
Asia, &c.

Act. xvi.

[¹ 'Ο δὲ Ἰωάννης πυνθόμενος... τοὺς μὲν, λήμμασι καὶ δωροδοκίαις, τοὺς δὲ χάριτι ὑπαγομένους τὰς ἱερωσύνας ἀπεμπωλεῖν, ἦκεν εἰς Ἐφεσον καθελών τε δέκα καὶ τρεῖς ἐπισκόπους, τοὺς μὲν ἐν Λυκίᾳ καὶ Φρυγίᾳ, τοὺς δὲ ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ Ἀσίᾳ, ἑτέροισι ἀντ' αὐτῶν κατέστησε.—Soz. in eod. Lib. viii. cap. vi. p. 618.]

[² Non &c. egit, sed et archiepiscopum seu inspectorem aliarum per Thraciam, quæ in sex præfecturas erat divisa: et per Asiam, quæ ab undecim prætoribus regebatur: et per regionem Ponti, itidem in undecim præfecturas distributam.—Centur. Eccles. Hist. 1560, &c. Cent. v. cap. x. col. 1171.]

[³ Concil. Calched. Act. i. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2, Tom. IV. cols. 177, &c.]

[⁴ ... χρῆναι δὲ τὸν ὁσιώτατον ἀρχιεπίσκοπον τῆς βασιλίδος Κωνσταντινουπόλεως νέας Ῥώμης... ἐξουσίαν ἔχειν τοῦ χειροτονεῖν τοὺς μητροπολίτας ἐν τε τῇ Ἀσιανῇ, καὶ Ποντικῇ καὶ Θρακικῇ ταῖς διοικήσεσι, κ. τ. λ.—Act. xvi. ibid. col. 818. Conf. cols. 795, 8. See before, page 168, note 4.]

of all these churches, he was bishop of more churches than ever the pope was in his greatest pride;" for even all these churches, and all other churches, were made subject to him, when by Phocas he was made the head of the church and universal bishop; and, though he had not possession of all, yet did he claim interest in all, and jurisdiction over all, or, at the least, over so many of them as professed Christianity.

You say, "it is certain therefore that he was bishop only of the church in Constantinople, and had an eye and care to those other churches;" and against this your own certainty, without any ground or authority, I have brought in Theodoret, Sozomen, the council of Chalcedon, and the Centuries; although in effect you confess as much as I desire; for there is neither archbishop nor bishop in this church but he hath his peculiar see and church, and yet care of government over other also; even as Chrysostom had.

You have alleged nothing, neither can you, to prove that Chrysostom had not government over more churches than one. The Greek scholiast (whom I have answered) hath not one word to that purpose; for every several parish hath a pastor, notwithstanding the bishop hath the care of government of them; even as Titus had in Creta. The words of the author be: *Sed singulas civitates suum habere pastorem*⁵: "but every city should have her pastor." And you have translated it, that "every one should have his proper congregation;" whereby you mean scant good faith, but covertly go about to make your reader believe that the scholiast would have no ministers without a proper congregation. But of this and many other of your like corruptions I trust the reader is already sufficiently instructed.

The scholiast falsified by T. C., and to what purpose.

The words of Chrysostom be, Hom. iii. in Act., these: *Nonne imperium orbis terrarum tenet imperator? Hic autem unius civitatis episcopus est*⁶: "Doth not the emperor govern the world? but this man is bishop of one city." The which words are spoken of Chrysostom in this sense, that he which is but bishop of one city is as much subject to afflictions and troubles as the emperor is that governeth the whole world. This to be Chrysostom's meaning the words following

[⁵ Œcumen. Op. Lut. Par. 1631. Comm. cap. i. in Epist. ad Tit. Tom. II. p. 289. See before, pages 283, 4, note 8.]

[⁶ Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Act. Apost. Hom. iii. Tom. IX. p. 29.]

do declare; wherefore he doth not in that place “shew any difference betwixt the emperor and a bishop,” in the largeness or straitness of their charges and places of government (as you say), but in the troubles, in the opprobries and slanders that they be subject unto, wherewith the bishop of one city is more tossed than the emperor of the whole world; which Chrysostom speaketh hyperbolically; for there was not one emperor over the whole world at any time, and he himself being bishop had the care and charge of divers cities; wherefore he must be understood secundum subjectam materiam: “as the matter in hand requireth.”

Chapter iii. The Sixty-eighth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 73, Sect. 3.

Theodoret.

Theodoretus, episcopus Cyri, in an epistle that he wrote¹ to Leo, saith of himself, that he had government over 800. churches².

T. C. Page 89, Sect. 2.

You nip those that are against you.

Touching Theodoret, bishop of Cyrus, to let pass that which the bishops of Egypt cried in the council of Chalcedon, that he was no bishop³, In the 1. Act. it is to be observed that which the emperors Theodosius and Valentinian write unto Dioscorus, bishop of Alexandria, that he had commanded Theodoret, bishop of Cyrus, that he should

An untruth and foul oversight.

In the same Act. keep himself unto his own church only⁴; whereby it appeareth that he meddled in more churches than was meet he should. Besides, that wanteth not suspicion that he speaketh this of himself, especially when he saith that there was not in all those 800. churches one tare, that is, one hypocrite or evil man.

Untrue interpretation.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Theodoret can have no credit either with the papists or with the Replier.

In the convocation holden in the first year of queen Mary, the testimony of this Theodoret being alleged against transubstantiation, D. Watson, because he could not answer the authority, denied the author, accusing him to be a Nestorian. To whom reply was made, that it was but a lewd refuge,

[¹ Writ, Answ. and Def. A.]

[² Theod. Op. Lut. Par. 1642-84. Ad Leon. Episc. Rom. Epist. cxiii. Tom. III. pp. 986, 7. See below, page 320, note 5.]

[³ Concil. Calched. Act. I. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. IV. col. 101.]

[⁴ Ibid. cols. 100, 1. See below, note 10.]

when he could not answer, to deny the author⁵. The same may be said to you, dealing in the self-same manner. For this Theodoret, as he is a notable historiographer, and of great credit in the reporting of things done by other, and before his time, so is there no cause at all why he should be suspected speaking of himself. And he himself doth report of himself in that epistle written by him to Leo, that he had not only governed these 800. churches, but “so governed them by the space of 26. years, that he sustained no reproach or blame of the bishops of Antioch⁶,” whereof I might also truly gather that the bishop of Antioch was as it were his archbishop or metropolitan. This authority, or rather example, of Theodoret is so plain, that you are driven to⁷ seek unlawful shifts⁸ to deface a worthy writer; but let us see how justly.

You say that “the bishops of Egypt cried in the council of Chalcedon, that he was no bishop,” and you note in the margent the first act. of that council; and I say unto you again, that the whole council of the 8. action cried out and said, *Theodoretus dignus est sede ecclesiæ: orthodoxum ecclesia pastorem recipiat*⁹: “Theodoret is worthy the seat of the church (that is the bishopric): let the church receive him as a catholic pastor.”

Act. viii.
Conc.
Chalced.

You add that “Theodosius and Valentinian writ unto Dioscorus, bishop of Alexandria, that he had commanded Theodoret, bishop of Cyrus, that he should keep himself to his own church only, &c.” To this I answer, that you have here dealt as commonly you do, that is, very corruptly; for the words that follow in the same epistle do evidently declare that the emperors’ meaning was, that Theodoret should keep himself at home, and not come to the synod, unless it should please the whole synod to accept of him, and to admit him¹⁰.

The corrupt dealing of
T. C.

[⁵ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. III. p. 21. Conf. Philpot’s Works, Park. Soc. Edit. p. 202.]

[⁶ See below, page 320, note 5.]

[⁷ So, Def. B.]

[⁸ “I could not here be ‘put to shift,’ seeing where our question is of 300. you fetch your proofs of 400.”—Sec. Repl. p. 627.]

[⁹ Concil. Calched. Act. VIII. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Tom. IV. col. 622.]

[¹⁰ Θεοδώρητον μέντοι τὸν ἐπίσκοπον Κύρου τῆς πόλεως, ὃν ἤδη ἐκελεύσαμεν τῇ ἰδίᾳ αὐτοῦ μόνῃ ἐκκλησίᾳ σχολάζειν, θεσπίζομεν μὴ πρότερον ἐλθεῖν εἰς τὴν ἁγίαν σύνοδον, ἐὰν μὴ πάσῃ τῇ ἁγίᾳ συνόδῳ συνελθούσῃ δόξῃ καὶ αὐτὸν παραγενέσθαι τῆς αὐτῆς ἁγίας συνόδου.—Impp. Theod. et Valent. ad Diosc. Epist. ibid. Act. i. ibid. cols. 100, 1.]

The which also appeareth in another epistle of the emperor's to Dioscorus, in that first act of the council of Chalcedon (in the which epistle the emperor calleth the bishop of Jerusalem archbishop)¹. It appeareth that Theodoret was first by the emperors' commandment inhibited from coming to that synod, which was called the second council of Ephesus, and afterward that he was condemned in the same synod in his absence, and not called to answer for himself; as he declareth in² his epistle written to Leo³. But he was restored in this general council of Chalcedon; and that second council of Ephesus was afterward condemned; so that all this that you speak to the discredit of Theodoret is but a frivolous, and yet a corrupt shift.

You do but as you are wont, when you expound that which Theodoret speaketh of his 800. churches being without tares, "of hypocrites and evil men." If you had read the author yourself, I think you would not so grossly have erred⁴: his words be these: "By God's help I delivered more than a thousand souls from Marcion's heresy, and I converted many to Christ the Lord from the sect of Arius and Eunomius, et ut in octingentis ecclesiis pastor essem, mihi sortito obtigit: tot enim paræcias habet Cyrus: and it was allotted to me to be pastor in 800. churches; for Cyrus hath so many parishes: in the which through your prayers there did not remain one tare; sed ab omni errore hæretico liberatus fuit grex noster: but our flock was delivered from all heretical error⁵." Theodoret therefore meaneth "heresy," he meaneth not

Theod. in Epist. ad
Leonem.

How Theo-doret left no tares in his
800. churches.

[¹ Imp. ad Diosc. Epist. ibid. col. 109.]

[² Is, Def. B.]

[³ 'Ο γὰρ τῆς Ἀλεξανδρείας δικαιοτάτος προέδρος... καὶ μὲ τὸν ἀπόντα ὁμοίως καλᾶμψ κατέσφαξεν, οὔτε καλέσας εἰς κριτήριον, οὔτε παρόντα κρίνας, κ.τ.λ.—Theod. Op. Lut. Par. 1642-84. Ad Leon. Episc. Rom. Epist. cxiii. Tom. III. p. 986.]

[⁴ "When I expounded 'tares,' hypocrites, I had not the book before me, but, trusting therein to Theodoret's knowledge in the scripture, esteemed that he meant them of whom the parable is understood: &c."—Sec. Repl. p. 628.]

[⁵ ΕΞ γὰρ καὶ εἴκοσι ἔτη τὴν ἐγχειρισθεῖσάν μοι παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ τῶν ὅλων ἐκκλησίαν ἰθύνas διὰ τὰς ὑμετέρας εὐχὰς, οὐκ ἐπὶ τοῦ μακαριωτάτου Θεοδότου τοῦ τῆς ἀνατολῆς προέδρου, οὐκ ἐπὶ τῶν μετὰ ἐκείνον τῶν τὸν Ἀντιοχείων διαδεξαμένων θρόνον, τὴν τυχοῦσαν μέμψιν ὑπέμεινα, ἀλλὰ τῆς θείας μοι χάριτος συνεργησάσης πλείους μὲν ἢ χιλίας ψυχὰς ἡλευθέρωσα τῆς Μαρκίωνος νόσου, πολλοὺς δὲ ἄλλους ἐκ τῆς Ἀρείου καὶ Εὐνομίου συμμορίας προσήγαγον τῷ δεσπότην Χριστῷ. καὶ ἐν ὀκτακοσίαις ἐκκλησίαις ἔλαχον ποιμαίνειν· τοσαύτας γὰρ ἡ Κύρρος παροικίας ἔχει, ἐν αἷς οὐδὲ ἐν διὰ τὰς ὑμετέρας εὐχὰς μεμένηκε ζιζάνιον· ἀλλὰ πάσης αἰρετικῆς ἡλευθέρωται πλάνης τὸ ἡμέτερον ποίμνιον.—Theod. Op. Ad Leon. Episc. Rom. Epist. cxiii. Tom. III. pp. 986, 7.]

“hypocrisy:” there was not one heretic in all his bishopric, he doth not say “one hypocrite or evil man;” so that you are far wide, and do Theodoret double injury; for you do both slander him and misconstrue him.

Chapter iii. The Sixty-ninth Division.

T. C. Page 89, Sect. 3.

Now, that it may appear what great likelihood there is between this Theodoret and our lord bishops and archbishops, it is to be considered which he writeth of himself in the epistle unto Leo, that is, that he, having been 26. years bishop, was known of all those that⁶ dwell in those parts, that he had never house of his own, nor field, nor halfpenny, not so much as a place to be buried in, but had willingly contented himself with a poor estate⁷: belike he had a very lean archbishopric; and, if the fat morsels of our bishoprics and archbishoprics were taken and employed to their uses of maintenance of the poor, and of the ministers, and of the universities, which are the seed of the ministry, I think the heat of the disputation and contention for archbishops and bishops would be well cooled.

JO. WHITGIFT.

We speak of the office and authority, not of the living; to the spoil of the which you and most of your fautors have more respect, than you have to the office, though you pretend the contrary; and yet it followeth not but that Theodoret had living sufficient, and might have been more wealthy; but as it seemeth he professed voluntary poverty of purpose, for he gave away that also which was left unto him of his parents, as he in that epistle testifieth, saying, Sed sponte electam amplexus sum paupertatem: “but I embraced poverty, which I chose willingly.” His bishopric might be of large revenues, and yet he poor, seeing that he had chosen a professed poverty⁸. But, if bishops be better now provided for than they were then, it is their parts to be thankful unto God and the prince for it, and to use it well. It is not your

Comparison made in office, not in riches.

[⁶ All that, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ ... ὅτι τοσούτον χρόνον ἐπισκοπεύσας, οὐκ οἰκίαν ἐκτησάμην, οὐκ ἀγρόν, οὐκ ὄβολόν, οὐ τάφον, ἀλλὰ τὴν αὐθαισάμην πενίαν, καὶ τὰ παρὰ τῶν πατέρων εἰς ἡμᾶς ἐλθόντα μετὰ τὴν ἐκείνων τελευτήν εὐθὺς διανείμας, ὥς ἴσασιν ἅπαντες οἱ τὴν ἐψᾶν οἰκοῦντες.—Id. ibid. pp. 987, 8.]

[⁸ “Whereto I have little to reply, but that the D. for advantage spareth not the honour of his authors: it being a great reproach in so great wealth, as the D. supposeth he might lawfully have had, to be so beggarly.”—Sec. Repl. p. 629.]

duty to envy their prosperity, because you are not in case yourself.

Chapter iii. The Seventieth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 73, Sect. ult.

But what shall I need to use such proofs in a matter so plain and evident to all such as have read anything of antiquity? The best-learned men of our days, and diligentest preferers of the gospel of Christ do with one consent (one or two of the latest writers excepted) acknowledge and confess that this distinction of degrees, and superiority in the government of the church, is a thing most convenient and necessary.

T. C. Page 89, Sect. 4.

Now, good reader, thou hearest what M. Doctor hath been able to rake together out of the old fathers, which he saith are so plain in this matter, and yet can shew nothing to the purpose. Hear also what he saith out of the writers of our age, all which he saith (except one or two) are of his judgment, and allow well of this distinction of degrees.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Well, what I have “raked together,” and how you have carted these rakings away, I commit to the judgment of the learned. These raking terms, in my opinion, are not seemly in him that would seem so much to justify himself, and to condemn other of immodesty.

Chapter iii. The Seventy-first Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 74, Sect. 1.

Calvin in his Institutions saith on this sort: “That every province had among their bishops an archbishop, and that the council of Nice did appoint patriarchs which should be in order and dignity above archbishops, it was for the preservation of discipline. Therefore for this cause especially were those degrees appointed, that, if anything should happen in any particular church which could not there be decided, it might be removed Calvin. cap.

viii. sect. 54.1

[¹ Sect. 54 is not in Answ.]

to a provincial synod: if the greatness or difficulty of the cause required greater consultation, then was there added patriarchs together with the synods, from whom there was no appeal but unto a general council. This kind of government some called hierarchiam, an improper name, and not used in the scriptures; for the Spirit of God will not have us to dream of dominion and rule in the government of the church; but, if (omitting the name) we shall consider the thing itself, we shall find that these old bishops did not frame any other kind of government in the church, from that which the Lord hath prescribed in his word²." Calvin here misliketh this name hierarchia, but he alloweth the names and authority of patriarchs and archbishops, and thinketh the government of the church then used not to differ from that which God in his word prescribeth.

T. C. Page 89, Sect. ult. and Page 90, Sect. 1, 2.

M. Calvin first is cited to prove those offices of archbishop, primate, patriarch; the names whereof he cannot abide, and as for him he approveth only that there should be some which, when difficult causes arise which cannot be ended in the particular churches, might refer the matters to synods and provincial councils, and which might do the offices which I have spoken of before of gathering voices, &c.

But that he liketh not of those dominations and large jurisdictions, or at all of the bishops or archbishops, which we have now, it may appear plainly enough both in that place, when as he will have his words drawn to no other than the old bishops, shutting out thereby the bishops that now are, as also in other places, and, namely, upon the Philippians, where, reasoning against this distinction between pastor and bishop, and shewing that giving the name of bishop to one man only in a church was the occasion why he afterward usurped domination over the rest, he saith after this sort: "Indeed I grant," saith he, "as the dispositions and manners of men are, order cannot stand amongst the ministers of the word unless one be over the rest; I mean," saith he, "of every several and singular body, not of a whole province, much less of the whole world."

^{[2} Quod autem singulæ provinciæ unum habebant inter episcopos archiepiscopum: quod item in Nicena synodo constituti sunt patriarchæ, qui essent ordine et dignitate archiepiscopis superiores: id ad disciplinæ conservationem pertinebat. Quanquam in hac disputatione præteriri non potest quod rarissimi erat usus. Ob hanc igitur causam potissimum instituti sunt illi gradus, ut siquid in ecclesia qualibet incideret quod non posset bene a paucis expediri, ad synodum provincialem referretur. Si magnitudo aut difficultas causæ majorem quoque discussionem postularet, adhibebantur patriarchæ una cum synodis, a quibus non esset provocatio nisi ad universale concilium. Gubernationem sic constitutam nonnulli hierarchiam vocarunt, nomine (ut mihi videtur) improprio: certe scripturis inusitato. Cavere enim voluit Spiritus sanctus nequis principatum aut dominationem somniaret, quum de ecclesiæ gubernatione agitur. Verum si rem omisso vocabulo intuemur, reperiemus veteres episcopos non aliam regendæ ecclesiæ formam voluisse fingere ab ea quam Deus verbo suo præscripsit.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. iv. 4. Tom. IX. p. 286.]

Now, if you will needs have M. Calvin's archbishop, you must not have him neither over a province nor diocese, but only over one singular and particular congregation. How much better therefore were it for you to seek some other shelter against the storm than M. Calvin's, which will not suffer you by any means to cover yourself under his wings, but thrusteth you out always as soon as you enter upon him forcibly!

JO. WHITGIFT.

Calvin acknowledgeth the names, and the end of them, and alloweth the kind of government.

M. Calvin affirmeth directly that "every province among their bishops had an archbishop, and that the council of Nice did appoint patriarchs;" he saith that these degrees were appointed "for the preservation of discipline," and by calling of synods to end controversies that arise in particular churches: he well liketh this kind of government; only he misliketh the name hierarchia: what can be plainlier spoken both of the name and office of the archbishop? As for your fond device that it should be his office only "to gather voices, &c.," it is singular to yourself; you have not one learned writer (that I can read) with you.

The bishops that now are in this church neither have, nor challenge to have, more jurisdiction than the old bishops had; nay, they have not so much, as it is evidently to be seen in the old canons; and therefore M. Calvin, allowing of them, doth allow of ours also.

His place to the Philippians maketh against you; for he alloweth one to be superior amongst the ministers, and to rule the rest, and saith that, "as the nature and disposition of men now is, there could be no order except it were so;" which doth utterly overthrow the equality that you and the Admonition dream of. He saith that he speaketh de singulis corporibus; which he cannot understand of particular parishes; for every particular parish hath not many ministers; so that of necessity he must have many several churches to make the body he speaketh of; and therefore a diocese or a province. I think M. Calvin did think Geneva, and the towns thereunto adjoining and belonging, to be but one body; so do I think London, and the diocese thereunto pertaining, to be but one particular body. And likewise the province of Canterbury, distinguished into divers parts and members, to be but one body in like manner. Neither do I think that Master Calvin ever shewed his misliking of these degrees in this church as they be now used; for (as I said before) the great abuse of them under the pope made him more to dislike of them than he would have done; but in these words that I have repeated of his he testifieth as much as I desire, that is, the antiquity, and the cause, and use of those offices, and (that which you omit and skip over) that "herein the old bishops did frame no kind of government in the church diverse from that which the Lord hath prescribed in his word;" which neither you nor your adherents can abide to hear. of².

[¹ Postea invaluit usus, ut quem suo collegio præficiebant in singulis ecclesiis presbyteri, episcopus vocaretur solus. id tamen ex hominum consuetudine natum est, scripturæ auctoritate minime nititur. Fateor quidem, ut sunt hominum ingenia et mores, non posse ordinem stare inter verbi ministros, quin reliquis præsit unus. De singulis corporibus loquor: non de totis provinciis, multo autem minus de orbe universo.—Id. Comm. in Epist. ad Philip. cap. i. 1. Tom. VII. p. 358.]

T. C. letteth that slip that maketh
against him.

Chapter iii. The Seventy-second Division.

T. C. Page 90, Sect. 3.

But here I cannot let pass M. Doctor's ill dealing, which, reciting so much of Master Calvin, cutteth him off in the waist, and leaveth quite out that which made against him, that is, which M. Calvin saith in these words: "Although," saith he, "in this disputation it may not be passed over that this office of archbishop, or patriarch, was most rarely and seldom used;" which dealing seemeth to proceed of a very evil conscience.

Unjust accusation.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I know not what perfection is in your book more than in mine, but I am sure that I have followed mine own book faithfully and truly, neither have I omitted one word that maketh either with me or against me; and therefore you have unjustly charged me. The book that I follow was printed anno 1553.; wherein there are no such words, "that this office of archbishop, or patriarch, was most rarely and seldom used¹." Neither is there cause why M. Calvin should so say; for he could not but know that these offices have had continuance in the church, at the least, since before the council of Nice; for there are these words, *Mos antiquus perduret &c.*², and that they were continually affixed to the bishoprics of certain cities, as Rome, Antioch, &c.

[² Cartwright insists that Calvin did dislike of these degrees in the church, and says: "If I should use the advantage of that he spake, and I heard of undoubted witnesses, that, although he had no pre-eminence before the lowest minister, but only to propound the causes, gather the voices, &c. and was chosen thereunto every two year, yet he disliked that that small pre-eminence should so long remain with one, as which in time might breed inconvenience: &c."—Sec. Repl. pp. 629, &c.]

Indeed in the last edition of his Institutions he hath these words: Quanquam in hac disputatione præteriri non potest, quod rarissimi erat usus; which words he referreth to the office of a "patriarch," whom he saith the Nicene council did place in dignity and order above archbishops, for the preservation of discipline. Neither doth he say that the office of a patriarch was moveable, or chosen at every action (for then should he affirm that which is repugnant to all histories, councils, and ancient writers that speak of patriarchs); but his meaning is, that there was but seldom times occasion offered for patriarchs to exercise the authority they had over archbishops; which is the occasion that the most authors do confound them, and think them to be all one. Other meaning than this his words neither can nor do admit³.

The use of the patriarch rare, in what sense.

Chapter iii. The Seventy-third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 74, Sect. ult.

Hemingius.

Hemingius, in his Enchirid., sheweth that these degrees in the church be necessary, and that discipline cannot be kept without them. And he addeth that their church keepeth this form: Nec movetur (saith he)

[¹ The editor has not succeeded in finding an edition of the date mentioned by Whitgift; but in another printed about the same time his reading appears: e. g. ...id ad disciplinæ conservationem pertinebat. Quanquam in hac disputatione præteriri non potest. Ob hanc igitur &c.—Inst. tot. Christ. Relig. J. Calvin. Auth. Genev. 1550. cap. viii. De Fide, 54, p. 242.]

[² Concil. Nic. can. 6. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 32. See before, page 144, note 1.]

[³ Cartwright declares that in the edition Whitgift used the former part of the sentence appeared, and that he ought to have seen that it was an omission of the printer; so that, "if there had been any love of the truth in him," he would have consulted a later edition.—Sec. Repl. p. 632.]

*anabaptistarum ac libertinorum effreni libidine, qui ecclesiam Christi barbaricum quendam hominum cœtum, sine ordine fingunt, ... cum habeat*⁴ *nostra ecclesia non solum exemplum apostolicæ [et] purioris ecclesiæ, verum etiam mandatum Spiritus sancti omnia ordinate et decenter ad ædificationem faciendi*⁵: “Neither is our church moved with the licentious liberty of anabaptists and libertines, which feign the church of Christ to be a barbarous confused society without order; seeing that our church hath not only the example of the apostolical and most pure church, but also the commandment of the Spirit of God, to do all things orderly and decently to edify.”

T. C. Page 90, Sect. 4.

Then followeth Hemmingius, who, you say, approveth these degrees of archbishop, metropolitan, bishop, archdeacon; for so you must needs mean when you say he approveth these degrees, or else you say nothing; for thereupon is the question. Now how untruly

Cap. x.
3. Class. Lib.
Enchirid.;
where also among the popish orders
he reckoneth
the archb.

you speak let it be judged by that which followeth. First, he saith that our “Saviour Christ, in St Luke, distinguisheth and putteth a difference between the office of a prince and the office of a⁶ minister of the church, leaving dominion to the princes, and taking it altogether from the ministers⁷.” Here you see, not only how he is against you in your exposition in the place of St Luke, which would have it nothing else but a prohibition of ambition, but also how at a word he cutteth the throat of your archbishop and bishop as it is now used. And afterward, speaking of the churches of Denmark, he saith, “they have Christ for their head, and for the outward discipline they have magistrates to punish with the sword,” and for to exercise the ecclesiastical discipline they have “bishops, pastors, doctors, which may keep men under with the word, without using any corporal punishment.” Here is no mention of archbishops, primates, metropolitans. And, although he sheweth that they keep the distinction between bishops and ministers, against which there hath been before spoken, yet he saith that the authority which they have is “as the authority of a father, not as the power of a master;” which is far otherwise here. For the condition of many servants under their masters is much more free than the condition of a minister under his bishop. And afterward he sheweth wherein that authority or dignity of the bishop over the minister lieth, that is, in exhorting of him, in chiding of

So is the condition of a good servant under a good master much better than the condition of an unruly son under a wise father.

[⁴ Habet, Answ. 2.]

[⁵ N. Hemming. Opusc. Theolog. 1586. Enchir. Class. III. cap. x. col. 462.]

[⁶ The, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁷ Huc accedit, quod Dominus apud Lucam ministerium verbi ab officio principum separat: huic dominationem relinquens, illi prorsus adimens: Reges, inquit gentium dominantur ipsis, vos autem non sic.—Id. ibid. col. 460.]

him, as he doth the lay-people; and yet he will have also the minister, although not with such authority, after a modest sort to do the same unto the bishop. And so he concludeth that they retain these orders, notwithstanding the anabaptists. Now let the reader judge whether Hemingius be truly or faithfully alleged or no, or whether Hemingius do say that they have in their church archbishops, primates, metropolitans, archdeacons, or whether the bishops in the churches of Denmark are anything like ours. For I will omit that he speaketh there against all pomp in the ministry, all worldly superiority or highness, because I love not to write out whole pages, as M. Doctor doth, out of other men's writings, to help to make up a book.

And therefore you cut short and clip sentences.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Hemin. in that very place quoted in your margent hath first these words: *Præterea cum hic cætus &c.*¹: "Furthermore, seeing this society is ruled by the word of God, there are in it two sorts of men, that is to say, the preachers of the word and their hearers, which do reverence and love one another as fathers and children. But in the ministers there is great diversity; for, although the authority of all ministers in respect of spiritual regiment is all one (for of external discipline shall be spoken in the proper place), yet there are divers orders and degrees of honour and dignity; and that partly by the word of God, partly by the approbation and allowance of the church." Where first he alloweth this distinction which you so greatly mislike, that all ministers be equal touching spiritual jurisdiction, that is, their ministry, but not concerning external discipline; then doth he allow degrees of dignity and superiority among the clergy; the which after that he hath proved by the scripture, as namely, the iv. to the Ephesians, and by the examples of Paul, Timothy, and Titus, he proceedeth and goeth on forward, and saith: *Ecclesia, &c.*²: "The church, to whom the Lord hath given Hemingius alloweth distinction of degrees in the ministry.

Hemingius acknowledges-

[¹ Præterea cum hic cætus verbo Dei regitur, duo sunt in eo genera hominum: nimirum verbi præcones, et eorum auditores, qui non secus atque patres et filii se invicem venerantur et colunt; verum in ministris magna est diversitas. Quamquam enim potestas omnium eadem est ministrorum, quantum ad spirituales jurisdictionem attinet (de externa enim disciplina suo loco dicendum est) tamen dispares dignitatis ordines et gradus sunt. Idque partim jure divino, partim ecclesiæ approbatione.—Id. ibid. col. 459.]

[² Ecclesia, cui Dominus potestatem dedit in ædificationem, ordinem ministeriorum instituit pro commodo suo, ut omnia sint rite ordinata ad instaurationem corporis Christi. Hinc ecclesia purior secuta tempora apostolorum, fecit alios patriarchas, quorum erat curare, ut episcopi cujusque diœcesios rite eligerentur, et ordinarentur, ut suum munus episcopi singuli probe administrarent: ut cuique

power unto edification, hath ordained an order of ministers for her profit, that all things might be rightly ordained for the re-edifying of the body of Christ. Hereof the primitive church, following the times of the apostles, did appoint some patriarchs, whose office it was to provide that the bishops of every diocese should be rightly ordained and elected; that the bishops should do their duty truly; and that the clergy and people should obey them in those things that pertained to the Lord: it appointed also chorepiscopos (that is, coadjutors of bishops, whom we now call provosts), some pastors, and catechists. This was the ordination of the primitive church." Wherein he plainly declareth these degrees that I speak of (for under the name of patriarchs it is evident that he comprehendeth archbishops or metropolitans) to have been in the primitive church immediately after the apostles' time, and in the purest time of the church; than the which what can be spoken more directly for my purpose, whose chief intent is to prove the antiquity of these names and offices?

eth patriarchs in the primitive church.

The office of patriarchs in the primitive church.

After this he sheweth the abuses of these offices in the corruption of doctrine under the pope, and he doth not only name archbishops, but bishops also, curates, and other³; and therefore the note in your margent is but a note of a special spite against the archbishops. In the end, speaking of bishops, pastors, and doctors, he saith thus: *Inter hos ministros &c.*⁴:

suus clerus et sua plebs in his, quæ Domini sunt, pie obsequerentur. Alios chorepiscopos (coadjutores nimirum episcoporum, quos hodie præpositos appellamus) alios pastores et catechetas. Hæc fuit purioris ecclesiæ ordinatio.—Id. ibid. cols. 459, 60.]

[³ Nam in regno papæ post corruptionem doctrinæ, monstrosa quædam ecclesiæ æconomia inventa est,...tum ordines ecclesiasticos septem numerant,...7. Presbyterorum, quorum plures gradus fecerunt. Alios enim vocarunt episcopos; alios archiepiscopos, metropolitanos, parochos, antistites et præsides. &c.—Id. ibid. col. 460.]

[⁴ ... ecclesia nostra Danica non est ἀκέφαλος sed agnoscit cum ecclesia catholica unum Christum regem et sacerdotem. Deinde quantum ad disciplinam externam attinet, agnoscit magistratum civilem jus gladii habere, quod exercere debet secundum suas leges in reos. Agnoscit etiam ecclesiasticam disciplinam, qua superiores legitime vocati ad ministerium, ut episcopi, pastores, doctores in scholis, uti possunt ad coercendos contumaces verbo, sine vi corporali....Inter hos ministros agnoscit etiam ecclesia nostra gradus dignitatis, et ordines pro diversitate donorum, laborum magnitudine ac vocationum dignitate, ac judicat barbaricum esse, de ecclesia hunc ordinem tollere velle. Judicat cæteros ministros suis episcopis oportere obtemperare in omnibus, quæ ad ædificationem ecclesiæ faciunt, juxta verbum Dei, ac utilem ecclesiæ æconomiam. Judicat episcopos jus habere in cæteros ministros ecclesiæ, non despoticum, sed patrium...judicat

To take away degrees is barbarous-ness.

Ministers subject to bishops.

“Amongst these ministers also our church acknowledgeth degrees and orders of dignity, for the diversity of gifts, the greatness of labour, and the worthiness of their calling; and judgeth it to be barbarous to will to take this order out of the church. It judgeth that other ministers ought to obey their bishops in all things that tend to the edification of the church, according to the word of God, and the profitable order of the church: it judgeth that the bishops have authority over the other ministers of the church, not such as is of masters, but of fathers.” Whereby he acknowledgeth distinction of degrees and superiority among ministers, and the jurisdiction of bishops over other ministers: after all this he concludeth with these words contained in mine Answer. Now let the reader judge whether I have otherwise reported of Hemingius than he himself in that chapter affirmeth; and whether he consent unto me, that would have distinction of degrees among the ministers, or to you, that would have an equality, which he calleth an anabaptistical and barbarous confusion.

Hebr. xiii.

Touching your notes gathered out of him, I will briefly answer. First, in the exposition of the xxii. of Luke, he is not against me; for I would not have archbishops or bishops, &c., to take from kings their rule and dominion, as doth the pope; neither would I have them to reign over the people, as kings and princes do. And I do not think but that the authority and superiority that they have is a ministry for the quietness of the church, and the commodity of other, and yet a government too; for the apostle saith, ad Hebr. xviii. : Obedite his qui præsunt vobis: “Obey them that bear rule over you, &c.” Hemingius in that place especially dealeth against the two swords of the bishop of Rome and his excessive pomp.

What kind of authority the bishops exercise.

For the kind of authority that the bishop hath over the ministers, that it should be “of a father and not of a master,” I agree with him; and I know that all you speak to the contrary in the government of this church is most untrue; for undoubtedly, if they have offended in anything, it is in too much lenity; which is a fault even in a father. The authority that Hemingius giveth to the civil magistrate we acknowledge recte facere episcopos, qui hortationibus et objurgationibus non solum laicos (ut vocant) verumetiam presbyteros in officio retinent...si episcopi aliquid præceperint, quod non sit sui officii, hic modeste licet inferiori ministro quod imperatur recusare.—Id. ibid. cols. 461, 2.]

with him to be most due; and I would to God you also did in heart and mouth confess the same. Thus you see that Hemingius and we agree, and that there is nothing ascribed unto him which is not plainly to be found in him.

Chapter iii. The Seventy-third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 75, Line 11, and Sect. 1.

 Bucer, upon the iv. to the Ephesi., where he of Bucer. purpose speaketh of the church and the due reformation of the same, saith thus: "The third part of discipline is obedience, which is, first, to be rendered of all to the bishop and minister; then, of every clerk to those that be in degree above him, and to such as may help him to the well executing of his ministry; last of all, of bishops to synods, and to their metropolitan bishops, and to all other to whom a more ample charge of the church is committed¹."

These words be plain: he would have all to obey the bishop and minister, every clerk to obey him that is in superior degree, and bishops to obey synods and their metropolitans.

In the same place he proveth by sundry examples and apt reasons that this superiority among ecclesiastical persons is convenient and necessary, and sheweth that these degrees in the church, bishop, archbishop, metropolitan, primate, patriarch, be not only most ancient but also necessary; and in the end he concludeth on this sort: *At quia omnino necesse est ut singuli cleri suos habeant proprios custodes et curatores, instauranda est ut episcoporum, ita et archidiaconorum, aliorumque omnium, quibuscunque censeantur nominibus, quibus portio aliqua commissa est custodiendi gubernandique cleri, auctoritas, potestas, sed et vigilantia, et animadversio, ne quis omnino sit in hoc ordine ἀφρούρητος*²: "Because it is necessary that every one of the clergy should have their rulers and governors, the authority, power, vigilancy, and severity of bishops, archdeacons, and all other by what name soever they be called (to whom any portion of keeping and governing the clergy is committed), should and ought to be restored, lest there be any in this order out of rule, or without government."

[¹ Tertia pars hujus disciplinæ est, Traditio sui in singularem obedientiam, præstandam primum ab omnibus episcopo et presbytero: Deinde ab unoquoque clerico, iis qui sunt in clericatu gradus superioris, et a quo possunt ad recte obeundum ministerium suum adjuvari: Postremo ab episcopis, synodis, ac etiam suo modo, episcopis metropolitanis, cunctisque quibus amplior sit ecclesiarum cura demandata.—M. Bucer. Prælect. in Epist. ad Ephes. Basil. 1562. cap. iv. p. 129.]

[² Id. ibid. p. 133; where singuli clerici suos.]

Beza, Lib. Confess. ca. 5., seemeth to allow this superiority, and those names also: his words be these: "What was in old time decreed of calling provincial synods by the metropolitan, it manifestly appeareth in the old canons: *Neque vero nos hi sumus qui (si instauratae essent ecclesiarum ruinae) vel hunc vel alium non dissimilem ordinem repudiandum arbitremur*¹: Neither are we those who (if the church were reformed) think either this or any other like order to be refused." The words be plain; and in the seventh chapter of the same book he maketh two kinds of degrees used in the papistical church; the one unknown to the apostles and to the primitive church; the other taken out of the word of God and from the primitive church: in this second order he placeth archbishops, curates, canons, seniors or ministers, archdeacons, deans, subdeacons, clerks; and, although, as he truly there saith, the papists have impudently abused those names, and that the light is no more contrary unto darkness than they be unto those whose names they challenge, yet, forasmuch as Master Beza confesseth that these names and degrees are derived from the scriptures and primitive church, he insinuateth his allowing of them, the papistical abuses being taken away, as they be (God be thanked) in this church of England².

In the same chapter he hath these words: "That pastors in process of time were distinct into metropolitans, bishops, and those whom they now call curates" (that is, such as be appointed to every parish), "which was not in the respect of the ministry of the word, but rather in respect of jurisdiction and discipline. Therefore, concerning the office of preaching the word and administering the sacraments, there is no difference betwixt archbishops, bishops, and curates; for all are bound to feed their flock with the same bread; and therefore by one common name in the scriptures they be called pastors and bishops. But what impudency is there in those men" (meaning the papists) "to use those holy names, and therefore to glory of the succession of the apostles and true bishops³!" He calleth them "holy names," reproveth the papists for abusing of them, and truly saith that the distinction of these names and offices is not in the ministry of the word and sacraments, but in jurisdiction and discipline.

[¹ Quod olim fuerit constitutum de provincialibus synodis a metropolitano cogendis, abunde liquet ex veteribus canonibus. Neque vero nos ii sumus &c.—Th. Bezae Confess. Christ. Fid. Genev. 1587. cap. v. 22. p. 134.]

[² Tertio, qui possunt isti merito dici apostolorum successores, quum praecipui gradus papisticae hierarchiae et apostolis et omnibus ecclesiis per tot secula penitus fuerint incogniti, et in iis gradibus quos ex verbo Dei et vetere ecclesia videntur desumpsisse, sola nomina retinuerint,...Numero autem in prima classe, papam universalem...cardinales, suffraganeos, officiales, procuratores curiae ecclesiasticae, vicarios, capellanos, praefectos, priores, cum tota ejusmodi monstrorum colluvie, quae penitus ignoravit vetus ecclesia. In secunda vero classe recenseo archiepiscopos, curatos, canonicos, presbyteros, archidiaconos, diaconos, subdiaconos, clericos, et totam istam catervam, quorum nominibus isti tam impudenter abutuntur, &c.—Id. ibid. cap. vii. 12. pp. 230, 1.]

I might here use the authority of Gualter and Zanchus, both of them notable godly and learned men, who in their epistles dedicatory to their books of late set forth refuse not to give unto the archbishop of York his title of archbishop, and that with all reverence⁴.

But what should I use any more words in a matter so generally avouched and allowed of all old writers, stories, councils, churches, and disallowed of no learned writers of our age (the abuses taken away as they be), nor of any godly-wise man; but only of such as either seek a confusion, or else a spoil; whose hearts I pray God convert? ⁵

Wherefore thus I conclude with the very words of that worthy man (who hath so well deserved of this church of England), Master Fox: "In the ecclesiastical state⁷ we take not away the distinction of ordinary

M. Fox.
Part. i.
Histo. pag.
20.⁶

[³ Nam quod pastores &c. discrimen [See before, page 266, note 2]. Omnes enim tenentur suos greges eodem cibo pascere, ideoque communi nomine, pastores, et episcopi in scripturis passim vocantur. Quæ vero istorum impudentia est sacra nomina usurpare, et propterea apostolorum et verorum episcoporum successionem jactare?—Id. ibid. p. 238.]

[⁴ See Strype, Annals, Vol. II. Book I. chap. xxx. Zanchy afterwards wrote to archbishop Grindal to congratulate him on his elevation to the see of Canterbury. Strype, Life of Grindal, Book II. chap. viii.]

[⁵ The paragraphs between brackets are introduced from Answ. 2.]

[⁶ Def. A. and B. have only M. Fox.]

[⁷ Estate, Answ. and Def. A.]

degrees, such as by the scripture be appointed, or by the primitive church allowed, as patriarchs or archbishops, bishops, ministers, and deacons; for of these four we especially read as chief: in which four degrees as we grant diversity of office, so we admit in the same also diversity of dignity; neither denying that which is due to each degree, neither yet maintaining the ambition of any singular person. For, as we give to the minister place above the deacon, to the bishop above the minister, to the archbishop above the bishop, so we see no cause of inequality why one minister should be above another minister, one bishop in his degree above another bishop to deal in his diocese, or one¹ archbishop above another archbishop; and this is to keep an order duly and truly in the church, according to the true nature and definition of order by the authority of Augustine, *Lib. de Civi. Ordo est parium dispariumque rerum sua cuique loca tribuens dispositio*². [Order is a disposition of things equal and unequal, attributing to each their proper places]."³ Hitherto M. Fox.

Now let the indifferent reader judge whether these offices be strange and unheard of in the church of Christ, or no.

T. C. Page 90, Sect. ult.

M. Doctor closeth up this matter with M. Fox; but, either for fear that the place should be found, that there might be answer, or for fear that M. Fox should give me the solution, which hath given you the objection, he would neither quote the place of the book, nor the book itself, he having written divers. You cannot speak so much good of M. Fox which I will not willingly subscribe unto; and, if it be any declaration of good-will and of honour that one beareth to another, to read that which he writeth, I think I have read more of him than you. For I have read over his Book of Martyrs, and so I think did never you; for, if you had read so diligently in M. Fox, as you have been hasty to snatch at this place, he would have taught you the forgery of these epistles whereout you fetch these⁴ authorities, and would have shewed you that the distinguishing of the orders of metropolitans, bishops, and other

I marvel this place could escape so diligent a reader.

Page 78. of the book of Acts.

[¹ An, Def. A. and B.]

[² Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. I. p. 18; where patriarchs, archbishops, and specially. Conf. August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. De Civ. Dei, Lib. XIX. cap. xiii. Tom. VII. col. 557.]

[³ The sentence between brackets is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[⁴ Your, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

degrees, which you say sometimes had their beginnings in the apostles' times, sometimes you cannot tell when, were not in Higinus' time, which was 180.⁵ years after Christ⁶. I perceive you fear M. Fox is an enemy unto your archbishop and primate, and therefore it seemeth you went about to corrupt him with his praise, and to seek to draw him, if it were possible, unto the archbishop; and, if not, yet at the least that he would be no enemy, if he would not nor could not be his friend. You make me suspect that your praise is not hearty, but pretended, because you do so often and so bitterly speak against all those that will not receive the cap and surplice and other ceremonies, whereof M. Fox declareth his great misliking. For answer unto the place, because I remember it not, nor mean not to read over the whole book to seek it, I say first, as I said before, that there may be something before or after, which may give the solution to this place, especially seeing M. Fox in another place, 1. Tom. Act. pag. 96.⁷ page 96., proving the epistles of Stephanus to be counterfeit, he useth this reason, because the fifth canon of the said epistles solemnly entreateth of the difference between primates, metropolitans, and archbishops; "which distinction," saith he, "of titles and degrees savour more of ambition than persecution⁸." Moreover, I say that M. Fox, writing a story, doth take greater pain, and looketh more diligently to declare what is done, and in what time, and by whom, than how justly or unjustly, how conveniently or inconveniently it is done. Last of all, if anything be spoken there to the hinderance of the sincerity of the gospel, I am well assured that M. Fox, which hath travailed so much and so profitably to that end, will not have his authority or name therein to bring any prejudice. Now will I also join with you, and leave it to the judgment of the indifferent reader, how well out of the scriptures, councils, writers old and new, you have proved either the lawfulness at all of the names of archbishops, patriarchs, archdeacons, primates, or of the lawfulness of the office of them, and of bishops which be in our times.

A suspicious head.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you had so diligently read M. Fox his Book of Martyrs, as you boast and brag that you have done, then could not this place have been so strange unto you; for it is in the 20. page of his first tome, where he hath an whole treatise touching the supremacy of the bishop of Rome, and speaketh of this matter at large. The words be his own, and express his own judgment of these degrees and offices in this church of England. It had been some token of modesty so to have commended yourself and your own reading, that you had not depraved any other man's; but to commend yourself, and to

[⁵ Was a 180., Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ Id. ibid. p. 58.]

[⁷ This reference is added from Repl. 2, which omits in the text page 96.]

[⁸ Id. ibid. p. 74; where degrees and titles savouring, and of persecution.]

detract from another, is either arrogant foolishness, or foolish arrogancy. I can bring forth good testimonies of my reading of these books, though I make no brag thereof or vain comparisons.

I have alleged none of "these epistles" otherwise than M. Fox himself hath alleged them.

M. Fox hath shewed himself (in the place by me cited out of his book) to be no "enemy" either "to archbishop, primate," or bishop; for I am sure he speaketh as he thinketh. He is not a man like to be "corrupted with praise;" and therefore in so saying you do us both great injury.

You may not judge my heart: I think of M. Fox as of one that I love and reverence; I will not utter all that I could, lest I should seem to flatter.

There is nothing that goeth either "before" that place, or followeth "after" it, that can procure any other sense to his words than that in the which I have set them down. I do not allege M. Fox for the original of these names and offices, but for the allowance of them. These words that I have recited are not spoken "in the way of any history," but of the order of government of this church, which he alloweth; and I dare say for him, that he hath herein spoken nothing which he thinketh may hurt "the sincerity of the gospel." And I am right well content to let the godly reader judge of both our proofs.

¶ The defence of the Answer of M. Jewel, concerning archbishops, &c., against the unreverend reply of T. C.

Chapter iv. The First Division.

T. C. Page 91, Sect. 1.

And, forasmuch as I have purposed to answer in one place that which is scattered in divers, I will here answer half a sheet of paper which is annexed of late unto the¹ book, put forth in the name, and under the credit of the bishop of Sarisbury; wherein I will say nothing of those biting and sharp words which are given partly in the beginning when he calleth the propounders of the proposition which concerneth archbishops and archdeacons, novices, partly in the end, when he calleth them children, and the doctrine of the gospel wantonness, &c. If he had lived, for his

A shameless and wicked lie.

[¹ This, Repl. 1 and 2.]

learning and gravity, and otherwise good deserts of the church, in defending the cause thereof against the papists, we could have easily borne it at his hands: now he is dead and laid up in peace, it were against all humanity to dig or to break up his grave: only I will leave it to the consideration of the reader, upon those things which are alleged, to judge whether it be any wantonness or novelty which is confirmed by so grave testimonies of the ancient word of God.

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you doubt whether the bishop of Sarisbury were the author of that half sheet of paper or no, you may see his own hand-writing. If you call the words which he useth there "biting" and "sharp," what shall we think of yours? we had need term them "serpentine" or "viperous," or if there can be any other name that better expresseth such immodest, contemptuous, and scoffing speeches. Hypocrita, quid vides festucam in oculo fratris tui, &c. But what are these "biting" and "sharp" words that he useth? forsooth that he "callethe the propounders of the proposition which concerneth archbishops and archdeacons, novices; and in the end he calleth them children, and their doctrine wantonness." O these be "biting and sharp words;" but wouldest thou know, good reader, why T. C. taketh these words so grievously? even because they touch himself. For the man is of that humility and patience, that, if there be never so little signification given of any unskilfulness or lack of learning in himself, he roareth like a lion, and swelleth like the sea; for none of that faction can in any case abide to have their learning touched; and they will not stick in commending themselves, to deface all other, yea, even that notable Jewel, whose both labour and learning they do envy, and among themselves deprave; as I have heard with mine own ears, and a number more besides. For further proof whereof, I do but refer you to the report that by this faction was spread of him after his last sermon at Paul's Cross, because he did confirm the doctrine before preached by a famous and learned man, touching obedience to the prince and laws. It was then strange to me to hear so notable a bishop, so learned a man, so stout a champion of true religion, so painful a prelate, so ungratefully and spitefully used, by a sort of wavering, wicked, and wretched tongues. But it is their manner, except you please their humour in all things, be you never so well learned, never so painful, so zealous, so virtuous,

Why T. C. scorneth so much at the words of the bishop.

The malicious nature of that faction.

M. Jewel's answer justified. all is nothing with them, but they will deprave you, rail on you, backbite you, invent lies of you, and spread false rumours, as though you were the vilest persons in the whole earth.

The bishop maliciously slandered by T. C. And consider whether T. C. be not even now in that vein; for how maliciously doth he slander that so reverend bishop, saying that "he calleth the doctrine of the gospel wantonness," when he speaketh of their childish and fantastical devices, except all were "gospel" that they speak, or that cometh from them! Pardon me, though I speak something earnestly: it is in the behalf of a Jewel, that is contemned and defaced by contentious and ungrateful persons. If it had pleased God to have suffered him to live unto this day, in answering this Reply, he should no doubt have proved his "biting and sharp words" (as they be called) to be most true. But, seeing that he is at rest, and not here to answer for himself, though in respect of him I am far unmeet to intermeddle in his doings, yet in respect of the cause and adversary I will be bold to justify his answers.

Chapter iv. The Second Division.

"¶ The Judgment of that reverend father, John, late bishop of Sarum, avouched by his own hand¹.

Novitorium assertio. Archiepiscoporum et archidiaconorum nomina simul cum muneribus et officiis suis sunt abolenda.

The first Reason.

Prima ratio. God so loved the church, that he left a perfect² pattern, orderly, &c. Ephes. iv. ; but there is named neither pope, nor archbishop, nor archdeacon.

The answer of the bishop of Sarisbury³.

Ejus solutio. How know you that the fourth chapter ad Ephe. is a perfect² pattern of all ecclesiastical government? We have now neither apostles, nor evangelists, nor prophets;

The 4. Eph. no perfect

[¹ This "Judgment" of bishop Jewel is not in Answ. 1, and is placed nearly at the end of Answ. 2. Cartwright, as he has just before intimated, having left again the direct order of the Answer, Whitgift consequently follows him. Conf. Bp Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. IV. pp. 1299, 1300.]

[² Perfite, Answ. 2.]

[³ Answ. 2 has not of the bishop of Sarisbury.]

and yet are they the chief in that pattern; neither have we there either bishop, or presbyter, or diaconus, or catechista, or lector; and yet are these necessary parts in ecclesiastical government; therefore that pattern is not perfect to hold for ever; neither were there then any public churches, or pulpits, or schools, or universities, &c. St Paul nameth neither pope nor archbishop, I grant; and the church is not governed by names, but by offices. Every bishop then was called papa; and Anacletus, that was next after Peter (if there be any weight in his words) nameth archbishops⁴.”

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.
platform of all ecclesiastical government.

T. C. Page 91, Sect. 1.

Unto the place of the iv. of the Ephesians before alleged, he answereth clean contrary to that which M. Doctor saith, that “we have now neither apostles, nor evangelists, nor prophets;” whereupon he would conclude that that place is no perfect pattern of the ministry in the church. Indeed it is true we have not, neither is it needful that we should. It was therefore sufficient that there were once, and for a time; so that the want of those now is no cause why the ministries there recited be not sufficient for the accomplishment and full finishing of the church, nor cause why any other ministries should be added besides those which are there recited.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Not one word “contrary” to anything that I have spoken; for I told you before in what respect it may be said these offices to remain, and in what respect they be ceased⁵: there is now no planting of churches, nor going through the whole world, there is no writing of new gospels, no prophesying of things to come; but there is governing of churches, visiting of them, reforming of pastors, and directing of them, which is a portion of the apostolical function: there is preaching of the gospel, expounding and interpreting the scriptures, which be incident to the evangelist and prophet. Against this no learned man (as I think) speaketh.

Tract. iv.
cap. iii.
divis. 1.
In what respect apostles, &c. be ceased.

But now to my lord of Sarisbury his argument, which is this: That, from the which somewhat must be taken, and unto the which somewhat must be added, is no perfect pattern; but apostles, evangelists, prophets, are taken away from the fourth

The bishop's
argument.

[⁴ Anaclet. Epist. ii. 1, 4. ad Episc. Ital. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. cols. 521, 4. See before, page 136, note 2.]

[⁵ See Vol. I. pages 492, &c.]

M. Jewel's answer justified. to the Ephesians, and deacons and elders (as you yourself say) must be added; ergo, it is no perfect pattern: neither do you, neither can you answer this argument. But I will come to your accustomed shifts.

Chapter iv. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 91, Sect. 2.

Afterward he saith that neither bishop nor elder are reckoned in that place. The pastor is there reckoned up; and I have shewed that the pastor and bishop are all one, and are but divers names to signify one thing. And as for those elders which do only govern, they are made mention of in other places¹; and therefore the bishop and elder are there contained²; which thing also M. Doctor granteth.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If the bishop be contained under the pastor, why may not the archbishop be so likewise? but, if the elders ("which," you say, "do only govern") be not there contained, and yet a necessary function in the church (as you think), how can it then be a perfect platform? or why may not archbishops and archdeacons be also necessary, though they be not in that place named? But you say that "those elders be in other places mentioned." That is no answer to this place, but a reason rather to prove it no perfect pattern.

"M. Doctor granteth a bishop to be contained" under the name of a "pastor." But he doth not grant that your elder is so, or every "presbyter" (to whom the ministry of the word of God and sacraments is committed) to be a pastor.

Chapter iv. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 91, Sect. 3.

After that he saith there is no catechista: if there be a pastor, there³ is one which both can, and ought to instruct the youth; neither doth it pertain to any other in the church and publicly to teach the youth in the rudiments of religion than unto the pastor; howsoever⁴ in some times and places they have made a several office of it.

What say you to the doctor?

[¹ Here Repl. 2 inserts the apostle's purpose being to reckon up here only those ministries, which are conversant in the word, as I have before alleged.]

[² Elder which with government teach also are there contained, Repl. 2.]

[³ Pastor or as some think doctor there, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Pastor or doctor howsoever, Repl. 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.
Catechist and pastor disting-guished.

If a "pastor" and a "catechist" may be in one⁵, why may not a bishop and a governor also be one, and so your elders shut out of the doors? But you may learn in ancient writers, that the office of a "catechist" was necessary in the church, and distinct from the pastor. Origen was a catechist in the church of Alexandria; as Eusebius in his sixth book doth in sundry places declare⁶; and yet he was not then a pastor.

Chapter iv. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 92, Sect. 1.

And, where he saith that there is neither deacon nor reader mentioned, for the deacon I have answered, that St Paul speaketh there only of those functions which are occupied both in teaching and governing the churches, and therefore there was no place there to speak of a deacon; and, as for the reader, it is no such office in the church, which the minister may not do. And, if either he have not leisure, or his strength and voice will not serve him first to read some long time, and afterward to preach, it is an easy matter to appoint some of the elders, or deacons, or some other grave man in the church, to that purpose; as it hath been practised in the churches in times past, and is in the churches reformed in our days, without making any new order or office of the ministry.

Where have you scripture for this gear?

JO. WHITGIFT.

This distinction helpeth not here; for, if you say the offices or names of deacons be left out in this place because St Paul speaketh not of such offices as be occupied only in government; first, I answer that the same may be said of archbishops and archdeacons, who have those names only in the respect of government. Secondly, I tell you that the office of a deacon is also to preach; as is hereafter proved. And, last of all, that the office of a deacon (especially as you restrain it) is neither office nor name of government, but of simple and absolute ministry and service.

Tract. XIV.

Your starting-holes will not hide you; and this argument

[⁵ "Where I gave the catechizing unto the pastor, I will have it meant where there is no doctor; otherwise I have in the second edition amended that, assigning it as more proper to the D."—Sec. Repl. p. 634.]

[⁶ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. vi. capp. viii. xix. pp. 169, 70, 8, &c.]

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

of the bishop will not be answered. You have said nothing to prove this place to be a perfect pattern of all ecclesiastical functions; neither do you say anything for omitting the names of "bishop," "deacon," "presbyter," &c., but we may say the same for the names of "archbishop," "archdeacon," &c.

T. C. taketh greater liberty to himself than he will allow to whole
churches.

The reader hath been counted a necessary office in the church¹, and is of great antiquity; and I know that "the deacon, or any other grave person" upon occasion may be admitted to read. But, I pray you, where do you find any such thing in the scripture, especially of those which you call elders, which be in no degree of the ministry? for it is great presumption for you to appoint any such office in the church, not having your warrant in God's word; seeing you find such fault with whole churches for allowing offices used in the best time of the church, confirmed by the best councils, and approved by all ancient writers, because their names be not expressed in the scripture; and seeing also that you yourself a little before said that "only the pastor ought publicly in the church to teach the youth," and not a catechist; and I take public reading in the church to be as solemn a matter as catechizing the youth. But you have liberty to coin what order you list, without either scripture, or any other approved writer: we must make you another Pythagoras.

In times past it was a peculiar office; and he that had it was called lector; and therefore you cannot say, "as it hath been practised in times past," except you will confess that name and office of lector, and so also grant some name and office profitable for the church to be omitted in the fourth chapter to the Ephesians.

Chapter iv. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 92, Sect. 1, 2.

Where he saith that by this reason we should have "no churches, pulpits, schools, or² universities," it is first easily answered that St Paul speaketh not in the fourth to the Ephesians of all things necessary for the church, but only of all necessary ecclesiastical functions, which do both teach and govern in the church; and then I have already shewed that there were both churches and pulpits.

[¹ "That 'a reader hath been counted necessary' is said without proof; and, if it were, it was falsely counted; there being no necessary ministry not specified in the scripture."—Sec. Repl. p. 634.]

[² Nor, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

M. Jewel's answer justified.

As for schools and universities, it is sufficient commandment of them, in that it is commanded that both the magistrates and pastors should be learned; for he that commandeth that they should be learned commandeth those things and those means whereby they may most conveniently come to that learning. And we have also examples of them commended unto us in

I grant, but not out of the 4. to the Ephe.

*Judg. v. 14.*³ the old testament. As in the book of the Judges, when Debora commendeth the university men, and those which handled the pen of the writer, that they came out to help in the battle against the enemies of

1 Sam. xix. God. And in the first book of Samuel, and in the second⁴

*19.*³ book of the Kings⁵, when⁶ Naioth, and Bethel, Jericho, and a

2 Kings ii. 3, place beyond Jordan, are specified places which were schools or universities, where the scholars of the prophets were brought up in the fear of God, and good learning: the continuance of which schools and universities amongst the people of God may be easily gathered of that which *Acts vi. 9.*³ St Luke writeth in the Acts; where it may appear that in Jerusalem there were certain colleges appointed for several countrymen; so that there was one college to receive the Jews and proselytes which came out of Cilicia, another for those that came out of Alexandria, &c., to study at Jerusalem. And, if any man be able to shew such evidence for archbishops and archdeacons as these are for universities and schools, I will not deny but it is as lawful to have them as these.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Yet saith he truly; for in those times in christian congregations there were neither "public churches, or pulpits, or schools, or universities, &c.;" and yet these do appertain to the government of the church. Indeed, St Paul speaketh only there of such ecclesiastical functions as do teach and preach the word, and not of such as do only govern; and therefore it cannot be a perfect platform for ever; as I have before declared; and yet divers of these things mentioned by the bishop of Sarisbury pertain both to the office of teaching and governing.

That which you say of schools and universities I mind not to examine, because I know they be necessary for the church, how aptly soever you prove them. But this is the matter: they be necessary in the church both for the office of governing and teaching; and yet they be not expressed in the fourth to the Ephesians; therefore in that fourth to the Ephe-

The bishop is not answered.

[³ The verses are added to the references from Repl. 2.]

[⁴ And second, Repl. 1.]

[⁵ And in the book of Samuel and of the Kings, Repl. 2.]

[⁶ Where, Repl. 1 and 2.]

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

ment; for that is the thing that the bishop of Sarisbury affirmeth; and thereunto you answer not one word.

Ignorantia Elenchi.

Not one of these places that you allege proveth that in this text to the Ephesians either "schools or universities" be mentioned, though it be certain that they pertain both to teaching and governing; and therefore all this speech of yours is to no purpose, but only to dazzle the eyes of the reader, lest he should perceive how you offend in ignorantia elenchi, in not answering *ad idem*¹.

Chapter iv. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 92, Sect. 3.

Furthermore he saith that "the church is not governed by names, but by offices;" so is it indeed. And, if the office of an archbishop or archdeacon can be shewed, we will not strive for the name; but, forsomuch as all the needful offices of the church, together with their names, are mentioned in the scripture, it is truly said that both the offices and names of archbishop and archdeacons², being not only not contained in them (but also condemned), ought to be banished out of the church.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The office of archbishops and archdeacons contained in scripture.

I have before shewed that the office of visiting churches, of overseeing many pastors and bishops, of suppressing schisms, &c., was in the apostles, and is in the scriptures; but in these things doth the office of an archbishop consist, and in part of them the office of an archdeacon; therefore the offices of archbishops and archdeacons be contained in the scriptures, and were in the apostles' time. For, although (as I then said) that this part of the apostolical office, which did consist in planting and founding churches through the whole world is ceased, yet the manner of government by placing bishops in every city, by moderating and governing them, by visiting the churches, by cutting off schisms and contentions, by ordering ministers, remaineth still, and shall continue, and is in this

[¹ Cartwright rejoins: "If the D. can shew one letter that I ever wrote or spake, that the place of the Ephes. 'containeth all things necessary for the church,' then this that he writeth may have place. If not, then he is unworthy to receive answer." He afterwards says: "I give the reader warning that Judg. v. 'of those said to handle the pen,' whilst I gave too much credit to translations, was not so fitly alleged to prove universities."—Sec. Repl. p. 635.]

[² Archdeacon, Repl. 1 and 2.]

church in the archbishops and bishops, as most meet men to execute the same. Wherefore, seeing the offices be in the scriptures, there is no cause why the names should be disliked, much less “banished and cast out of the church.”

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

Chapter iv. The Eighth Division.

T. C. Page 92, Sect. 4.

Last of all he saith that “Anacletus (if there be any weight in his words) nameth an archbishop.” I have before shewed what weight there is in his words; and I refuse not that he be weighed by³ the bishop's own weights, which he giveth us in the handling of the article of the supremacy, and in the 223. and 224. pages⁴, by the which weights appeareth that this Anacletus is not only light, but a plain counterfeit.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Yet you see that learned men are content to use such authority as occasion serveth; as I have also before shewed other learned men to do the like⁵. And, if it be so greatly to be reprov'd, first smite at yourself, as most guilty in this point.

Supra. cap. 2,
divis. 13.

Chapter iv. The Ninth Division.

“The second Reason.

The synagogue of the Jews was a figure of the church of Christ. And God to the perfection of that church omitted nothing.

Secunda ratio.

The answer of the bishop⁶.

I see not what you would conclude: perhaps you⁷ will say they had not the names of pope or archbishop. So had they not this name episcopus in all Moses' law; yet were not all priests of like anciency in government. They had other names that were equivalent with archbishops: as principes synagogæ, principes sanctuarii, principes familiarum Leviticarum, principes familiarum sacerdotium, principes sacerdotum, principes domus Dei, pontifex, summus pontifex, summus sacerdos, &c. Therefore this negative reason is but weak. Again, whereas it is Ejussolutio.

[³ With, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ See Bp Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. I. pp. 341, &c.]

[⁵ See before, page 137.]

[⁶ Answ. 2 omits of the bishop.]

[⁷ Ye, Answ. 2.]

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

said that to the perfection of the synagogue there wanted nothing, it may be answered that to the perfection thereof there wanted many things; as it is known and confessed. And, as the synagogue had not the names of pope and archbishop, so had it not the name of apostle, or evangelist, &c."

T. C. Page 92, Sect. 5.

The second reason which saith that the church of God under the law had all things needful appointed by the commandment of God, the bishop saith he knoweth not what could be concluded of it: I have shewed before that there is nothing less meant than that the church under the gospel should have all those things that that¹ church had, or should have nothing which that had not. But this thereupon is concluded, that the Lord, which was so careful for that as not to omit the least, would not be so careless for this church under the gospel as to omit the greatest.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Tract. II.
cap. 6. di-
vis. 3.

I told you before, that this which you call the perfection of the synagogue was rather a burden than a perfection²; for God therefore prescribed unto them a prescript form of external things, that it might be a means to keep them from further inconvenience; but to us in such things he hath left a greater liberty; and the perfection of the church doth not consist in outward appearance, but in spiritual gifts; and therein hath the Lord much more plentifully and graciously shewed his care for the church under the gospel than he did for it under the law.

Tract. II.

Touching external orders, both of ceremonies and government, he hath left the disposition thereof to his church in many things; as I have proved in the beginning of this book³.

Chapter iv. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 92, Sect. 6.

This was one cause, but not the only cause.

A popish non sequitur.

And, where he saith that there was then which was called high priest, and was over all the rest, he did well know that the cause thereof was because he was a figure of Christ, and did represent unto the people the chieftly and superiority of our Saviour Christ, which was to come; and that, our Saviour Christ being come, there is now no cause why there should be any such pre-eminence given unto one; and, further, that it is unlawful that there should be any such, unless it be lawful to have one head

[¹ The, Def. A. and B.]

[² See Vol. I. page 267.]

[³ See Vol. I. pages 175, &c.]

bishop over all the church; for it is known that that priest was the head M. Jewel's priest over all the whole church, which was during his time, unto our answer Saviour Christ. justified.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The "high priest was a figure of Christ:" so was David and Salomon; but yet was the high priest also appointed to govern other for order and policy; and so was David and Salomon. The figure is taken away and the kind of sacrifice; but the office of governing remaineth still, and is to be observed as the state of the church requireth. Christ being come, the office of sacrificing ceaseth, but not the office of governing; for Christ by his coming did not take away government and policy, no, not from the ecclesiastical state.

This reason of yours, "that that priest was the head priest over all the church; therefore, if by his example we will have an archbishop, he must be such a one as shall govern the whole church," is indeed a plain confirmation of the papists' reason for the supremacy, who think that they may reason in like manner. But I answer you, as M. Calvin answereth them, Lib. Inst. cap. viii. sect. 87: "There is no reason that com-pelleteth to extend that unto the whole world which was profitable in one nation; nay, rather there is a great diversity betwixt one nation and the whole world. Because the Jews were compassed in on every side with idolaters, lest they should be withdrawn through the variety of religion, God did place the seat of his worship in the midst of the earth: there he appointed over them one prelate, whom all should look upon, that they might the better be contained in unity. Now, when as true religion is dispersed throughout the whole world, who doth not see it to be absurd that the government of both the east and west should be given to one? it is like as if one would say, because one precinct of ground hath not many governors, therefore the whole world ought to be ruled of one president or governor⁴."

A popish reason used by the Replicer.

Calvin.

[⁴ Primum, quod in natione una fuit utile, id in universum orbem extendere nulla ratio cogit: imo gentis unius et totius orbis longe diversa erit ratio. Quia undique ab idololatriis septi erant Judæi, ne religionum varietate distraherentur, cultus sui sedem in medio terræ sinu Deus collocavit: illic unum antistitem præfecit, quem omnes respicerent, quo melius in unitate continerentur. Nunc ubi vera religio in totum orbem diffusa est, uni dari Orientis et Occidentis moderationem, quis non videat esse prorsus absurdum? Perinde enim est acsi quis contendat totum mundum a præfecto uno debere regi, quia ager unus non plures præfectos habeat. Sed est altera etiam ratio cur illud in imitationem trahi

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

I know that he maketh another answer likewise; even the same that you have borrowed of him, touching the figure; but his first answer is more direct, in my opinion. And M. Nowel, against Dorman reasoning as you do, giveth him this answer:

Nowel, Lib. i.
63.

"It agreeth very well with the estate of the Jews, that, as they being one nation had one chief priest, so is it good likewise that every christian nation have their chief priest or bishop. It agreeth not that, because the Jews, one nation, had one high priest to govern them in doubts, therefore all nations through the world should have one high priest over all other; for not only the unlikelihood between these two, but the impossibility of the latter, is most evident¹." Other learned men also there be, as Hyperius, Lib. iii. Method. Theolog., and divers others, who, answering this same argument of the papists, say that "by it we may well prove that one archbishop or metropolitan may govern one province, or one kingdom; but that it is too weak to prove that one pope may govern all the world²." Howbeit you had rather give strength to the adversary than lack arguments to the defence of your cause.

Chapter iv. The Eleventh Division.

T. C. Page 93, Line 1.

And, as for those titles, "chief of the synagogue," "chief of the sanctuary," "chief of the house of God," I say that that maketh much against archbishops and archdeacons; for, when as instead of the synagogue, and of the sanctuary, and of the house of God or temple, are come particular churches and congregations, by this reason it followeth that there should be some chief, not in every province or diocese, but in every congregation; and indeed so ought there to be certain chief in every congregation which should govern and rule the rest. And, as for the "chief of the families of the Levites," and "chief of the families of the priests," the non debeat. Summum illum pontificem typum fuisse Christi nemo ignorat: nunc translato sacerdotio, jus illud transferri convenit.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 2. Tom. IX. p. 295.]

[¹ A Reprovfe, written by Alexander Nowell, &c. Lond. 1565. fol. 61. See before, page 219, note 5.]

[² ... Olim, inquiunt, apud Judæos summus sacerdos jussu ipsius Dei declaratus, et ab omnibus agnitus: quare etiam nunc in novo testamento par est, unum aliquem episcopum supremum constitui, quem omnes ubique venerentur, audiantque... Suaderi sane illo argumento queat, recte aliquem archiepiscopum sive metropolitanum uni dari provinciæ, sive regno aut principatui, nequaquam vero unum debere præfici toti orbi.—And. Hyper. Method. Theolog. sive præcip. Christ. Rel. Loc. Comm. Libr. Tres, Basil. 1574. Lib. III. p. 682.]

same was observed in all other tribes of Israel³; and by all these princes over every tribe and family, as by the prince of the whole land, God did as it were by divers lively pictures imprint in their understanding the chieftly and domination of our Saviour Christ. Besides this, the order which was appointed in this point was observed in all the tribes⁴.

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

JO. WHITGIFT.

These titles be as glorious as any that are now remaining in our church. And my L. of Sarum speaketh of names, to the which you do not answer one word, but seek out other matter to blind the reader with, lest he should behold your folly. But I will follow you. You say that "instead of the synagogues, &c., are come particular churches and congregations, &c.;" and I say unto you, that they had then particular synagogues as well as we have now particular churches; the which you yourself in effect have confessed before⁵. And you must understand that one christian commonweal is but one church, as it was among the Jews; and therefore such offices of government may be such in the church as was among the Jews, and such superiority among ministers as was then amongst priests and Levites. And I marvel that you will deny this, especially seeing that you would bind us to the civil law of Moses, whereof this is a portion.

The Replier
slippeth by the matter.

pag. 22,
line 1.

You add that "by all these princes over every tribe and family, as by the prince of the whole land, God did as it were, &c.:" all this maketh nothing against our offices, except you will also take away the prince of the whole land.

As this order among the Jews was observed in all tribes, so is it now in all provinces and dioceses. This is but slender stuff you bring, and yet not to the purpose; for the Answer speaketh of names; and you drive it to offices. Indeed you almost in no place reason ad idem; which is a manifest argument that you are but a shifting caviller⁶.

[³ Here Repl. 2 inserts as a civil thing.]

[⁴ This sentence is not in Repl. 2.]

[⁵ See Vol. I. page 269.]

[⁶ Cartwright in his rejoinder to this division says that Whitgift "as amazed speaketh he cannot tell what;" that he asserts what "is untrue;" that he is "ravished of all judgment;" that he is "frivolous," &c.—Sec. Repl. pp. 637, 8.]

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

Chapter iv. The Twelfth Division.

T. C. Page 93, Line 13.

Moreover, these orders and policies touching the distribution of the offices of the Levites and priests, and touching the appointment of their governors, were done of David by the advice of ^{2 Chron.} ^{xxix. 25.1} the prophets Gad and Nathan, which received of the Lord by commandment that which they delivered unto² David. And, if so be that it can be shewed that archbishops and archdeacons came into the church by any commandment of the Lord, then this allegation hath some force; but now, being not only not commanded, but also (as I have shewed) forbidden, every man doth see that this reason hath no place, but serveth to the utter overthrow of the archbishop and archdeacon. For, if David, being such a notable personage, and as it were an angel of God, durst not take upon him to bring into the church any orders or policies, not only not against the word of God, but not without a precise word and commandment of God, who shall dare be³ so bold as to take upon him the institution of the chief office of the church, and to alter the policy that God hath appointed⁴ by his servants the apostles?

JO. WHITGIFT.

You run away with the matter, as though all were clear, when as it is not so. You affirm that "David did appoint these orders and policies touching the distribution of the offices of the Levites and priests, &c., by the advice of Gad and Nathan, the prophets of God." And for proof hereof you quote in the margent 2 Chron. xix., where there is not one word for your purpose, or signifying any such thing. Indeed, in the 2 Chron. xxix. there is affirmed the like thing. But my L. of Sarisbury hath answered you, that such negative reasons are very weak⁵. And, if you will deny it to be a negative reason from authority, yet can you not deny but that it is as feeble an argument as almost can be. For what if David "did appoint these orders touching the distribution of the offices of the Levites and priests, &c.," doth it therefore follow that the church at no time may appoint such offices as shall be thought meet for the government of it, according to the time, places, and persons? where have you learned of a singular

[¹ The verse is added, and the number of the chapter corrected, from Repl. 2: the other editions have erroneously xxix.]

[² To, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ Dare to be, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ Established, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ "So he bringeth him in answering this reason after his death; for in his life it was not propounded."—Sec. Repl. p. 638.]

example to make a general rule, or to frame an argument ex M. Jewel's solis particularibus? answer justified.

In the 2 Chron. xix., which you have quoted in the margin there is a notable place against you; for there express mention is made that Jehosaphat set in Jerusalem of the Levites, and of the priests, &c., for the judgment and cause of the Lord, and made Amariah the priest chief over them: neither were they judges for the city of Jerusalem only, but for the whole country. And yet we read not of any commandment that Jehosaphat had so to do⁶. Scripture alleged against himself. 2 Chron. xix. vers 8.

Chapter iv. The Thirteenth Division.

T. C. Page 93, Sect. 1.

And, where the bishop saith, "it is known and confessed that there wanted many things to the perfection of the church of the Jews," truly I do not know, nor cannot confess that that church wanted any thing to the perfection of that estate which the Lord would have them be in, until the coming of our Saviour Christ. And, if there were anything wanting, it was not for want of good laws and policies, whereof the question is, but for want of due execution of them, which we speak not of. This is directly contrary to yourself.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Conveniet nulli, &c. How can he agree with any other man that doth not agree with himself? For before (after you have recited divers things left to the order of that church of the Jews for the which they had no express word) you say that you "will offer, for one that I bring that we have left to the order of the church, to shew that they had twenty which were undecided by the express word of God⁷." And here you say that it "wanted nothing to the perfection of that estate." How you will reconcile yourself, I know not: or whether it be your pleasure not to respect your own credit, so that you may seem to discredit that which that notable bishop hath spoken; but that which I have alleged of Jehosaphat, 2 Chron. xix., doth manifestly justify my lord of Sarisbury's saying, and condemneth yours. For there it is to be seen, that in matters of government orders were appointed which neither were commanded by any express commandment T. C. contrary to himself. Pag. 22, Sect. 1.

[⁶ "By the printer's small oversight, in putting 1. for 2., the D. hath stumbled upon 'a notable place &c.'"—Ibid. pp. 638, 9.]

[⁷ See Vol. I. page 270.]

M. Jewel's
answer justified. of God, neither yet expressed in the word of God. But of this matter I have spoken before.

Chapter iv. The Fourteenth Division.

"The third Reason.

Tertia ratio.

Where the substance of anything is most perfite, there the accidents be most perfite; but the substance of true religion was most perfite in the primitive church; and yet there was then no archbishop; ergo.

The answer of the bishop¹.

Ejus solutio.

First, this maxima is not proved; for it may well be doubted whether the most perfite substance hath² evermore most perfite accidents. And again, the substance of religion is the same now that it was then: the difference, if there be any, standeth in accidents, and not in substance. Therefore this allegation of substance and accidents was not needful. In the primitive church God raised up apostles, and prophets, and gave them power extraordinary, as the gift of tongues, the gift of healing, the gift of government, &c. In place whereof he hath now given universities, schools, bishops, archbishops, &c. But you say there was then no archbishop. So may you say that before king Saul there was no king in Israel. So may you say that before of late times there was neither duke nor earl in England. So may you say that in the primitive church there was neither dean, nor parson, nor prebendary. And yet now both in ecclesiastical and civil government all these are thought necessary. Last of all, where you say there was no archbishop in the primitive church, it is written by many that St Paul made Titus archbishop of Creta. Erasmus saith: *Paulus Titum archiepiscopum Cretæ consecravit*³; and Lyra likewise saith: *Paulus instituit Titum archiepiscopum Cretensium*⁴. If these authorities like Erasm. in arg.

epist. ad Titum.

[¹ Answ. 2 omits of the bishop.]

[² Have, Answ. 2.]

[³ Erasm. Op. L. Bat. 1703-6. In Epist. ad Tit. Arg. Tom. VII. cols. 1067, 8. See before, page 132, note 2.]

[⁴ Reliqui te Cretæ, instituens te ibi archiepiscopum.—Bibl. cum Gloss. Ord. et Expos. N. de Lyra, Basil. 1502. Ad Tit. cap. i. Pars VI. fol. 128.]

you not, Chrysostom saith: *Paulus Tito multorum episcoporum judicium commisit*⁵. Now, having 'the government of many bishops,' what may we call him but an archbishop?"

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.
Chrysost.
i. cap. Tit.

T. C. Page 93, Sect. 2.

For the two last reasons against the archbishop and archdeacon, although I be well acquainted with divers that favour this cause, yet I did never hear them before in my life; and I believe they cannot be proved to be his reasons whose they are supposed to be, and which did set down the⁶ proposition that the bishop confuteth. Notwithstanding, the former of these two seemeth to have a good probability, and to be grounded of that place of logic that sheweth that, according as the subject or substance of any thing is excellent, so are those things that are annexed and adjoined unto it. But, because I would the simplest should understand what is said or written, I will willingly abstain from such reasons the terms whereof are not easily perceived but of those which be learned.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Indeed you may disclaim what you list, for you could never be brought before this time to set down your reasons in writing; and there is no hold at your word; for you will affirm and deny, even at your pleasure; and so will divers of your companions, as experience hath taught. But yet you think that this "former" reason "hath a good probability, &c.;" howbeit you answer not one word to my L. of Sarum's solution; which proveth it to be very fond.

The inconsistency of the Replier and his companions.

Chapter iv. The Fifteenth Division.

T. C. Page 93, Sect. 3.

And as for the answer which the bishop maketh, that, "in place of apostles, prophets, the gifts of tongues, of healing, and of government, are brought in universities, schools, bishops, and archbishops;" for schools and universities, I have shewed they have been always, and therefore cannot come in to supply the room of the apostles and prophets. And whether a man consider the scholars that learn, or the schoolmasters which teach, or the orders appointed for the government of the schools, they shall be found to be rather civil than ecclesiastical, and therefore cannot come instead of any ecclesiastical ministry. If the bishop do mean that they come in place

[⁵ Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Hom. i. Tom. XI. p. 727.]

[⁶ That, Repl. 1 and 2.]

M. Jewel's answer justified. of the gift of the tongues¹, and knowledge of the gospel that was first given miraculously, I grant it; and then it maketh nothing to this question.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You have not shewed that "schools and universities were always" in the church of Christ, nor you cannot shew that there were any universities or schools of Christians in the apostles' time. I am not disposed to contrary anything that is alleged for universities or schools; neither would I have you to deny this truth affirmed by my lord of Sarum; for it is certain that God worketh now in the church by means of universities and schools that which he wrought in the apostles' time miraculously by his apostles and prophets. And those gifts of tongues, healing, government, &c., which he then inspired at once without teaching, doth he now give by little and little, using the ministry of schools, universities, and such like; wherefore it is true that the bishop hath said.

And whereas you say that schools, "whether a man consider the scholars that learn, or the schoolmasters which teach, or orders appointed for the government of the schools, they shall be found rather civil than ecclesiastical:" if you speak of schools in a profane or heathenish commonwealth, it is true. But, if you speak of a christian kingdom, it is most untrue. For in a christian commonwealth schools are the first nurses that bring up children in the true knowledge of God, and of his word, and prepare many of them to the ministry; both which are ecclesiastical. Moreover, if you talk of universities, such especially as be in this realm of England, then, whether you consider either the masters, fellows, or scholars, or rules or orders appointed for the government of them, they be for the most part ecclesiastical; and therefore those things make greatly for the purpose; and you have said nothing that can overthrow them².

Chapter iv. The Sixteenth Division.

T. C. Page 93, Sect. 4.

As for bishops, they cannot come in place of apostles or prophets, for-

[¹ Of tongues, Repl. 2.]

[² Cartwright calls this "poor divinity;" and adds: "for so a schoolmaster, teaching Terence, or professor reading Aristotle, is become an ecclesiastical officer."—Sec. Repl. p. 639.]

asmuch as they were when the apostles, evangelists, and prophets were, and are one of those ministries which St Paul mentioneth in the iv. to the Ephesians, being the same that is the pastor. M. Jewel's answer justified.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I told you before, that that part of the apostles' office which consisted in government is now remaining in archbishops and bishops, as to visit churches, to reform disorders, to suppress contentions, and such like; which also they practised in the apostles' time, in such places as were committed unto them by the apostles, as it is evident in Timothy and Titus.

That bishops do succeed the apostles in this function of government it may appear by sundry learned writers. Cyprian, Lib. iii. Epist. 9., writeth thus: "But deacons must remember that the Lord hath chosen apostles, that is to say, bishops and chief governors; but the apostles, after the ascension of the Lord into heaven, did appoint unto themselves deacons, ministers of their bishopric and of the church³." And Ambrose, in iv. ad Ephe., saith: *Apostoli episcopi sunt*⁴: "Apostles are bishops." Zuinglius also in his Ecclesiastes saith that "the apostles, when they left off going from place to place, and remained in one church, were no more called apostles, but bishops, as James at Jerusalem, and John at Ephesus⁵." Whereby it may appear that it seemeth strange neither to the old writers, nor to the new, to say that bishops succeed the apostles and come in place of them. Bishops succeed apostles in government. Cyprian. Ambrose. Zuinglius.

Chapter iv. The Seventeenth Division.

T. C. Page 93, Sect. ult.

There remaineth therefore the archbishop, which if he came in place of

[³ Meminisse autem diaconi debent, quoniam apostolos, id est, episcopos et præpositos Dominus elegit: diaconos autem post ascensum Domini in cælos apostoli sibi constituerunt episcopatus sui et ecclesiæ ministros.—Cyp. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Rogat. Epist. iii. p. 6.]

[⁴ Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Ephes. cap. iv. vv. 11, 12. Tom. II. Append. col. 241.]

[⁵ Simul etiam illud notari debet, &c. [See before, pages 302, 3, note 3].... Idem de Joanne evangelista et Christi discipulo dicere possumus.—H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 581. Ecclesiast. Pars II. fol. 48.]

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

the prophets and apostles (as the bishop saith), how cometh it to pass that the bishop saith by and bye, out of the authority of Erasmus, that Titus was an archbishop? for at that time there was both apostles, prophets, and evangelists. If it be so, therefore, that the archbishop must supply the want of apostles, &c., how cometh it to pass he waiteth not his time whilst they were dead, but cometh in like unto one which is born out of time, and like the untimely and hasty fruit, which is seldom or never wholesome? And for one to come into the apostles' or prophets' place requireth the authority of him which ordained the apostles, &c., which is the Lord, and his institution in his word, which is that which we desire to be shewed. But hereof I have spoken before at large.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is not unknown to such as be willing to learn, that, where the apostles could not be present themselves, there they appointed some other to govern the churches for them; as the apostle Paul did Titus at Creta. Therefore this reason of yours is soon answered. And, in that that the apostles did appoint bishops in churches which they had planted, and gave unto them such authority, it is evident that therein they made them their successors; which they did not without sufficient testimony and warrant of the Spirit of God; and therefore you do but talk, you prove nothing.

Chapter iv. The Eighteenth Division.

T. C. Page 94, Line 9; and Sect. 1, 2.

The necessity of deans I do not acknowledge, and I have already spoken of them. Touching prebendaries, I shall have occasion to speak a word hereafter. For earls, and dukes, and such like titles of honour, they are civil; neither doth it follow that, because there may new titles or new offices be brought into the civil government, that therefore the same may be attempted in the church. For God hath left a greater liberty in instituting things in the commonwealth than in the church.

For, forsomuch as there be divers commonwealths, and divers forms of commonwealths, and all good, it falleth out that the offices and dignities which are good in one commonwealth are not good in another; as those which are good in a monarchy are not good in aristocracy, and those which are good in aristocracy are not good in a popular state. But that cannot be said of the church, which is but one and uniform, and hath the same laws and form of government throughout the world.

In commonwealths also there are conversions, one form being changed into another; which cannot be in the true church of God.

JO. WHITGIFT.

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

Your "acknowledging" or not acknowledging "the necessity of deans, &c." is not greatly material; they depend not upon you. To the example of king Saul, the first king of Israel, you say nothing¹; and yet it is material. There is no such difference betwixt the civil government of the commonwealth and the external government of the church, but that the one in many things may be used as an example for the other. And it is untrue that the external form of government in the church ought to be one and the self-same throughout the world, in all times and places; as it shall hereafter more fully appear. But still I would have the reader to note what kind of government of the church you do allow, and join the same with that assertion of yours, that the government of the commonwealth must be framed according to the government of the church, as the hangings² to the house.

Tract. xvii.

Chapter iv. The Nineteenth Division.

T. C. Page 94, Sect. 2.

As for Erasmus' authority which saith that Titus was an archbishop, I have answered to it.

And, whereas Chrysostom saith that "the judgment of many bishops was committed to Titus," I have declared in what sort it³ is to be understood; and yet upon these⁴ words the bishop can hardly conclude that which he doth, that Titus had "the government of many bishops." For it is one thing to say the judgment of many was committed unto Titus, and another thing to say that he had the government of many.

Untrue; for you have not as yet spoken
one word of it.

JO. WHITGIFT.

And shall the same answer serve for Lyra too? Well, I have answered your answer to Erasmus. And I trust that these authorities with the godly reader shall have the more credit, because this reverend father doth herein confirm their opinions; whose judgment, for his singular virtue and learning, ought to be more esteemed than a number such as you are.

[¹ "In answering generally of all offices in the commonwealth, a man not utterly forsaken of his judgment must needs know that I had answered 'the example of Saul.'"—Sec. Repl. p. 640.]

[² Hanging, Def. B.]

[³ That, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ Those, Repl. 1 and 2.]

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

You neither have answered, nor do answer, nor can answer, these words of Chrysostom; and it is but a very poor shift to make such a distinction betwixt "judgment" and "government." For what is it else to "have the judgment of many bishops" committed unto him, but "to have the government?" Shew a difference if you can: no doubt you would have done it if you could. Wherefore this authority of Chrysostom remaineth untouched; and it confirmeth my answer to the Greek scholiast, who borrowed his words of him¹. Neither would you have thus dallied in this place, if you had looked upon Chrysostom's words, who there affirmeth that Paul did commit to Titus the whole isle of Creta.

Chapter iv. The Twentieth Division.

"The fourth Reason.

Quarta ratio.

The ecclesiastical and civil government may not be confounded, or be together in one person; but to be a chief or a ruler is a civil power; ergo, it cannot be exercised by any ecclesiastical person.

The answer of the bishop².

Ejus solutio.

Both these governments were confounded in Moses; therefore they may be confounded. And the priests of Israel had the judgment and government of the people. And St Augustine was troubled with hearing and determining of causes; as it appeareth by Possidonius³.

And, where you say "to be a chief or a ruler is a civil government:" nay, in ecclesiastical causes it is ecclesiastical government, and not civil. And these differences of government may not so unadvisedly be confounded. This is the key of ecclesiastical correction, and belongeth only to the ecclesiastical officer, and to none other. Hereof St Paul saith: Seniorem ne corripueris nisi sub &c. Tradidi illum Satanæ, &c. This jurisdiction is not civil,

[¹ See before, pages 284, 5.]

[² Answ. 2 omits of the bishop.]

[³ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. August. Vit. auct. Possid. cap. xix. Tom. X. Post-Append. cols. 270, 1.]

but ecclesiastical, and therefore may be exercised by any⁴ ecclesiastical person.”

M. Jewel's
answer
justified.

T. C. Page 94, Sect. 3.

The answer of the bishop unto the fourth supposed reason pertaineth unto another question, that is, whether ecclesiastical persons ought to exercise civil jurisdiction; whereunto I will answer by God's grace when I come to speak upon occasion of M. Doctor's book of that question. In the mean time I will desire the reader to consider what weak grounds the archbishop and archdeacon stand upon, seeing that the bishop of Sarum, being so learned a man, and of so great reading, could say no more in their defence, which notwithstanding in the controversies against Doctor Harding is so pithy and so plentiful.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The bishop of Sarum hath said much more than you have answered unto; and in the respect of the reasons he hath said fully enough. You may not think but that, if he had been disposed to have dealt of purpose in this cause, he could have said much more. But your secret and privy nips, whereby you insinuate to the reader that he would willingly defend a false cause, shall never be able to deface so worthy a prelate. You may perceive by this his conclusion (which toucheth you so near) that he took no great care or time for answering these weak reasons; for thus he concludeth:

“I beseech you to take these sudden answers in good part: as for these reasons, in my judgment they are not made to build up, and they are too weak to pull down. Stultitia nata est in corde pueri; et virga disciplinæ fugabit illam. Proverb. xxii. It is but wantonness: correction will help it.”

Thus have I answered in his behalf, who both in this and other like controversies might have been a great stay to this church of England, if we had been worthy of him. But, whilst he lived, and especially after his notable and most profitable travails, he received the same reward of wicked and ungrateful tongues, that other men be exercised with, and all must look for, that will do their duty. But now again to T. C.

[⁴ An, Answ. 2.]

¶ The causes of Archbishops and of their prerogatives, and the estate of the old Bishops (assigned by T. C.), examined.

Chapter v. The First Division.

T. C. Page 94, Sect. 4.

Now I have shewed how little those things which M. Doctor bringeth make for proof of that wherefore he allegeth them, I will, for the better understanding of the reader, set down what were the causes why the archbishops were first ordained, and what were their prerogatives and pre-eminences before other bishops, and the estate also of the old bishops which lived in those times; wherein although there were great corruptions, yet the church was in some tolerable estate; to the intent it may appear partly how little need we have of them now, and partly also how great difference there is between ours and them. Of the names of metropolitans¹ it hath been spoken, how that he should not be called the chief of priests, or the high priest, or bishop of bishops. Now I will set down their² office and power which they³ had more than the bishops.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you have no more truth in your words following than you utter in the beginning of these, or if you deal no soundlier in them than you have done in the other, M. Doctor's proofs shall serve the turn. But it is in vain to answer words, I will therefore come to your matter.

Chapter v. The Second Division.

T. C. Page 94, Sect. 5.

*In the council of Antioch it appeareth that the bishop of the metropolitan seat called synods, and propounded the mat- Chap. 9.
ters which were to be handled, &c.⁴ The archbishop doth not now call synods; but the prince doth; forasmuch as there is no convocation without a parliament; and he doth not propound the matters, and gather the voices, but another chosen, which is called prolocutor; therefore, in the respect that an archbishop and metropolitan was first ordained, we have no need of an archbishop or metropolitan. Again, another cause also appeareth there, which was to see that the bishops kept themselves within their own dioceses⁵, and brake not into another's diocese; but first this may be done without an archbishop, and then it is not done of the archbishop himself; giving licences unto the wandering ministers to go throughout not so few as a dozen dioceses⁵; therefore the office of an archbishop*

An untruth; for there is no such thing in that ninth canon.

Another untruth.

[¹ Metropolitan, Repl. 2.]

[³ He, Repl. 2.]

[⁵ Diocese, Def. A. and B.]

[² His, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ See below, page 362, note 1.]

is not necessary in this respect ; and, if it were, yet it must be other than it is now.

JO. WHITGIFT.

There is no council more flat against you than is that council of Antioch, nor any canon that overthroweth your assertion more directly than that ninth canon, the words whereof I have repeated before ; but your untrue allegation in a manner compelleth me to repeat them again, that the reader may see before his eyes what truth there is in your doings. And, although it do pertain to the office of the metropolitan or archbishop “to call synods,” yet is there not one word thereof in this canon, nor yet of “propounding any matters” in synods, or of “seeing bishops keep themselves within their own diocese ;” as you do here avouch without all truth ; and, notwithstanding, as I said before, those things do pertain to the office of the archbishop, yet, if they were also comprehended in that canon, it were rather a confirmation of that office, than otherwise.

The contents of that canon be only these ; first, it saith that “it behoveth the bishops of every country or province to know their metropolitan bishop to have the care and oversight, or government, over the whole province.” By the which words, the authority and name of a metropolitan or archbishop is most plainly confirmed, and proved to be a permanent office ; secondly, this canon “willeth all those that have any business to do to resort to the metropolitan city.” Whereby also is given to the metropolitan bishop great pre-eminence ; and therefore it followeth immediately, that “he should excel all the rest in honour ; and that the other bishops should do nothing of importance without him ; according to the old rule made by their forefathers, but only those things which pertain to their own diocese, and those places and possessions that pertain unto the same.” In which words who seeth not what pre-eminence is given to the metropolitan over all the bishops in his province, and what jurisdiction to the bishop in his own diocese and places pertaining unto it ? where also it is to be noted that the council saith : secundum antiquam a patribus nostris regulam constitutam : “according to the ancient rule appointed of our forefathers.” Which argueth a great antiquity of his office. Then it followeth : “For every bishop hath authority over his own diocese, to rule and govern it, juxta reverentiam singulis competentem: according to the reverence due unto every one of them, and that he hath especial care of that whole region that is subject to his city, so that he may ordain priests and deacons, et singula suo judicio comprehendat. But he may not attempt any other thing without the metropolitan bishop; nor the metropolitan do anything without the counsel of the other priests¹."

What can be more plain, either for the authority of the archbishop, or jurisdiction of the bishop? and what one word of this canon have you truly alleged? and yet it is quoted in your margin.

But, if we imagine those things to be true which you say, how will you conclude? forsooth, that the metropolitan did then "call synods, and propounded the matters," but now he doth not "call synods and propound the matters;" therefore there is now no need of a metropolitan. First, it is untrue that metropolitans did then call either all synods, or that they called them of their own authority, without the consent of the prince and civil magistrate; which thing is evident when the magistrates were christened.

The council of Nice was summoned by the commandment of Constantine the emperor, *Eusebius, de Vita Constanti. Lib. iii.*² Constantius³ called the council which was in *Sardica civitate*⁴. The bishops in the council of Constanti. confess that they came together by the emperor's writ⁵. Ambrose, in the council of Aquileia, speaking of himself and of other bishops, saith that they were assembled out of Aquileia, by the commandment of the emperor⁶. The same doth Hierome testify concerning a council holden at Rome, In Epita.

[¹ Concil. Antioch. can. 9. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 565. See before, page 146, note 1.]

[² Euseb. De Vit. Constant. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. vi. p. 400.]

[³ Constantinus, Def. B.]

[⁴ ... ἔδοξε γνώμη τῶν βασιλέων [Κῶνστα καὶ Κωνσταντίου], τοὺς ἀφ' ἐκατέρας ἀρχομένης ἐπισκόπους, εἰς ῥητὴν ἡμέραν καταλαβεῖν τὴν Σαρδῶ,—Soz. in eod. Lib. III. cap. xi. p. 417.]

[⁵ Δεόμεθα τοίνυν τῆς σῆς εὐσεβείας ἐπικυρωθῆναι τῆς συνόδου τὴν ψῆφον ὡς περ τοῖς τῆς κλήσεως γράμμασι τὴν ἐκκλησίαν τετίμηκας, οὕτω καὶ τῶν ἐοξάντων ἐπισφραγίσῃς τὸ τέλος.—Epist. ad Theodos. Imp. Nunc. præf. Cann. Concil. Constant. I. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Tom. II. col. 946.]

[⁶ ... nos...convenimus ad Aquileiensem civitatem, juxta imperatoris præceptum.—Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. Concil. Aquil. Gest. ap. Epist. Class. I. Tom. II. col. 788.]

*Pauli.*⁷ Pope Julio, Epist. 9. ad Theodos., desireth the emperor, that by his authority there might be a council in Italy⁸. Zozomen., Lib. vi. cap. 7, sheweth how certain catholic bishops intreated the emperor that they might have leave to gather together for the redressing of certain errors⁹. But what shall I need to labour in a matter most manifest? No man can be ignorant that readeth ecclesiastical stories, but that the emperor's authority was required in summoning councils and synods, not only general, but provincial also¹⁰. Secondly, it is untrue that the metropolitan in this church doth not "call synods, or propoundeth not the matters in them, &c." For he doth both, although he calleth no provincial synod without the commandment of the prince, no more than other metropolitans have done in the best time of the church under christian princes. Last of all, though all this were true, that is here untruly affirmed, yet were the office of an archbishop necessary, for it doth not only consist in calling synods, but in sundry things beside; as I have shewed before, and this council of Antioch manifestly declareth. And, surely, if you would prove anything hereof directly, it should be this, that either the archbishop doth not exercise that jurisdiction which he ought to do, or else cannot do that which pertaineth to his office;

[⁷ Quumque orientis et occidentis episcopos ob quasdam ecclesiarum dissensiones Romam imperiales literæ contraxissent.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Epit. Paul. ad Eustoch. Epist. lxxxvi. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 671.]

[⁸ Unde si pietas vestra suggestioni ac supplicationi nostræ dignetur annuere, ut intra Italiam habere jubeatis episcopale concilium.—Leon. Magni Op. Lut. 1623. Ad Theod. August. Epist. ix. col. 303. Julio in the text is obviously an error for Leo.]

[⁹ ... οἱ...ἐπίσκοποι...προβάλλονται πρεσβεύειν ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν Ὑπατιανὸν τὸν Ἡρακλείας τῆς Περὶνθου ἐπίσκοπον. ὥστε ἐπιτραπῆναι συνελθεῖν ἐπὶ διορθώσει τοῦ ὁγματος' κ.τ.λ.—Soz. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. VI. cap. vii. p. 525. The history goes on to say that Valentinian replied that he as a layman had no right to intermeddle in such matters; the bishops could meet wherever they chose.]

[¹⁰ Cartwright rejoins that, "although some provincial councils were called by the emperor, yet it is manifest both by the council of Nice and by this I alleged ...that the metropolitan with the bishops' advice might hold a provincial council. It was done, I grant, by consent, and sometime by express confirmation of the godly princes....This although it were 'not in the 9. canon,' yet when the D. knew it was in that council (as appeareth by his precise denying of it to be in 'that canon,' where otherwise he would have said in that council) it appeareth that he useth less sincerity in these holy matters than the heathen in their profane." He goes on, in illustration of what he means, to refer to a passage in the life of Alexander the Great, who said he would not "steal the victory."—Sec. Repl. p. 641.]

and so should you speak for the amendment of the archbishop's jurisdiction.

Again, you say, "another cause appeareth there, which was to see that the bishops kept themselves within their own diocese, &c.; but first this may be done without an archbishop, &c." I tell you there is no such thing in that ninth canon; I say, further, that it may best and most orderly be done by an archbishop. Thirdly, I answer as before, that it is but one part of his office. Fourthly, I say unto you that this is a simple argument: the archbishop doth not keep such old canons as be not in use in this church; therefore there is no need of his office. Last of all, you ought to know that those whom you call wandering ministers be faithful preachers a number of them, and such as labour diligently in preaching the word, and have not a little profited the flock of Christ; so that your conclusion is not worth a straw.

Chapter v. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 95, Sect. 1.

Again, the cause why the metropolitan differed from the rest, and why the calling of the synod was given to him, as it appeareth in the same council¹, was for that the greatest concourse was to that Chap. 9.
place, and most assembly of men; whereunto also may be added, for that there was the best commodity of lodging and of victualling; and for that, as it appeareth in other councils, it was the place and seat of the empire. But with us neither the greatest concourse nor assembly of men, nor the greatest commodity of lodging and victualling, neither yet the seat of the kingdom, is in the metropolitan city; therefore with us there is no such cause of a metropolitan or archbishop.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is not alleged as a cause why there should be a metropolitan, or "why he differed from the rest, or why the calling of the synod was given unto him," but rather why he was placed in the chief city; so that these words touch not the metropolitan or his office, but the aptness of the place where he should continue. And yet, if credit be to be given either to interpreters or to the gloss in Gratian, Caus. ix. quest. 3. Per singulas, the words be not as you interpret them²; for thus they be set down in the book of Councils, Tom. i.: *Propter quod ad metropolim omnes undique qui negotia videntur habere concurrant*³: “For the which let all that have any business have recourse from all places into the metropolitan city.” Another translation is thus: *Propter quod ad metropolitanam civitatem ab his qui causas habent concurratur*⁴. And this last interpretation the authors of the Centuries do use, *Cent. iv.*⁵ Of which words there can be no such thing gathered as you do imagine, but far otherwise. And the meaning of the council is, that such as have causes to be heard may resort to the metropolitan city where the metropolitan is.

[¹ See before, page 362, note 1.]

And you must understand that it was in the power of the emperor and other princes to appoint the seat of the metropolitan where it pleased⁶ them; as it appeareth in the 12. chap. of the council of Chalcedon⁷, and in the 17. Hom. of Chrysostom, *Ad populum Antiochenum*⁸.

Chapter v. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 95, Sect. 2.

In the council of Carthage, holden in Cyprian's time, it appeareth that no bishop had authority over another to compel another, or to condemn another, but every bishop was left at his own liberty to answer unto God, and to make his account unto Christ⁹; and, if any thing were done against any bishop, it was done by the consent of all the bishops in the province, or as many as could conveniently assemble. Therefore Cyprian, which was the metropolitan bishop, had then no authority over the rest; and yet then, there being no christian magistrate which would punish the disorders which were committed of the christian bishops, there was greatest need that there

T. C. confesseth Cyprian to be a metropolitan.

[² Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Sec. Pars, Caus. ix. Quest. iii. can. 2. et not. ibid. cols. 872, 3.]

[³ Concil. Antioch. cap. 9. Edit. 1. in Crabb. Concil. Col. Agrip. 1551. Tom. I. p. 322.]

[⁴ Ibid. Edit. 2. ibid.]

[⁵ Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. iv. cap. ix. col. 714.]

[⁶ Pleaseth, Def. B.]

[⁷ Ὅσαι δὲ ἤδη πόλεις διὰ γραμμάτων βασιλικῶν τῷ τῆς μητροπόλεως ἐτιμήθησαν ὀνόματι, μόνης ἀπολανέτωσαν τῆς τιμῆς, κ.τ.λ.—Concil. Calched. can. 12. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. IV. col. 762.]

[⁸ ... διὰ ταῦτα ἀσχάλλεις, ἀγαπητέ;...ἀλλ' ὅτι τὸ τῆς πόλεως ἀφεῖλεν [βασιλεὺς] ἀξίωμα, καὶ οὐκέτι καλεῖσθαι αὐτὴν μητρόπολιν εἶασεν;—Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. Ad Pop. Ant. Hom. xvii. Tom. II. p. 175.]

[⁹ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Concil. Carthag. pp. 229, 30. See before, page 208, note 3.]

should have been some one which might have had the correction of the rest. If therefore, when there was most need of this absolute authority, there neither was nor might be any such, it followeth that, now we have a christian magistrate, which may and ought to punish the disorders of the¹ ecclesiastical persons, and may and ought to call them to account for their faults, that there should be no such need of an archbishop.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You here fall into the same fault that a little before you ascribed unto me, for you come back from the council of Antioch, which was anno 360, to the council of Carthage, being anno 260.² I omit to tell you that that council concluded an heresy for the which only it was assembled. And therefore, though it be in the book of the Councils, yet is it not reckoned among the councils. Only I demand the words of that council that do signify one bishop not to have had authority over another. I told you before, out of Cyprian himself, and out of Gregory Nazianzene, that he had ample and large jurisdiction³. The words of Cyprian in that council, which seem to touch the matter you talk of, I have expounded and answered before: they make not for your purpose.

It is no reason to prove that a bishop must not be subject to any, because "he is left at his own liberty to answer unto God, and to make his account unto Christ." For by the same reason he might be exempted from the authority of the civil magistrate, and from all laws and orders touching church matters; and so might every private man in like manner. But you must remember that a bishop is so "left to his own liberty to answer unto God, and to make account unto Christ," that he must also acknowledge his duty towards man, and be subject to orders and laws.

What do you say for the freedom of a bishop from obedience unto the archbishop, but it may be said likewise of his freedom from subjection to his prince in like matters; and of every anabaptist, for his deliverance from subjection to all superiors? Wherefore you wring Cyprian's words to an evil sense.

You have been oft told that no archbishop hath such power over either bishop or inferior minister, that of his own authority he can do anything against them. The laws of the realm will not suffer it, no, the canon law doth by no means permit it; and therefore you do but dream of an authority that is not.

[¹ All, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² According to Labbe and Cossart, these councils were held in the years 341 and 256 respectively.]

[³ See before, page 164.]

Cyprian being a metropolitan had authority over the rest.

The civil magistrate doth govern the ecclesiastical state, punisheth disorders among them, calleth them to account for their faults by archbishops, bishops, and other officers, as he doth the same in the civil state by civil magistrates. Your meaning is not (I dare say) to have the prince hear all matters herself; you will give her leave to appoint under-officers; as Moses, David, Salomon, Jehosaphat, and other good kings, have done. If you will not allow the magistrate so to do, let us understand your reasons; for surely I believe there is some such toy in your head.

Chapter v. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 95, Sect. 3.

The moderation of their authority in the ancient times may appear first by a canon which is falsely given to the apostles, being as it is like a canon of the council of Antioch; wherein although it ordaineth one primate in every nation over the rest, and will not suffer any great matter to be done without him, as also will not suffer him to do anything without the rest, yet every bishop might do that which appertained unto his own parish without him, and he nothing to do with him in it. But, as it seemeth, the meaning of the canon was that, if there were any weighty matter to be concluded for all the churches in the nation, then the bishops of every parish should not enterprize any thing without calling him to counsel. Now we see that the archbishop meddleth with that which every bishop doth in his own diocese, and hath his visitations for that purpose, and will take any matter out of their hands, concludeth also of divers matters, never making the bishops once privy to his doings.

This canon is falsified both by adding and detracting.

This you add unto the canon.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If it be a false canon or "falsely given to the apostles," why do you use it as a proof? I might say unto you as you said before unto me: Have you such penury of proofs, that you are constrained to allege false canons? if it be a canon of the council of Antioch, shew what canon it is: if it be within that council, undoubtedly it is the 9. canon before by you alleged; and how much that proves your cause the very ignorant reader may judge.

The canon alleged against himself.

Can. Apost.
34.

But let us hear this canon, be it true or false, and consider your collections of it: the words I have recited before, but I will set them down again, that your pithy reasons (reasoning altogether against yourself) may appear. "The bishops of every nation or country must know who amongst them is chief, whom they ought to esteem as their head, and do nothing without his counsel, besides those things only which belong unto their own parish, and the places which are under it; neither ought he to do any thing without the advice of them all; for so shall there be concord, and God shall be glorified by Christ Jesus in the Holy Ghost, &c.¹" Here first there must be a primate or chief bishop (that is archbishop) of every nation or country, whom the rest of the bishops must acknowledge as it were for their head. Secondly, the bishops must do nothing unaccustomed without him. Thirdly, that the other bishops may do those things only quæ ad parochiam ejus, et regiones ei subditas pertinent: "which pertain unto his parish, and places subject unto it;" which last words you leave out. Last of all, that this primate must do nothing without their consents. What hath the archbishop lost by this canon? surely not one jot: I think verily he doth not require so much. Every bishop may do as much in his own diocese now (the authority of the prince and her laws reserved) as he might do by that canon; for the archbishop doth not rule by will, but by law, not of himself, but under the prince, to whom both he and all other bishops be subject.

You hit nothing less than the meaning of the canon; nay, undoubtedly you imagine a sense contrary to the express words of the canon.

When the archbishop doth visit, it is not to make new laws, or appoint new orders (except he be commanded so to do by greater authority), but to see those orders and laws kept that all bishops and other are bound unto; and therefore he doth nothing in their diocese contrary to that which they are bound to do, neither doth he conclude anything without them, which by their consent and authority of the law and prince is not given unto him².

[¹ Canon. Apost. 33. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 32. See before, page 145, note 4. Conf. Concil. Antioch. can. 9. ibid. Tom. II. col. 565. See before, page 146, note 1.]

Chapter v. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 95, Sect. 4.

*Platina, cap.
Higin.*

Higinus, or as some think Pelagius (I speak here as Platina reporteth, not thinking that in Higinus' time there was any metropolitan), ordained that "no metropolitan should condemn any bishop, unless the matter were first both heard³ and discussed by the bishops of that province⁴;" at what time, and after a great while, a bishop was the same we call a minister. Now the archbishop will, without any further assistance or discussion by others, suspend him, and in the end also throw him out of his charge; and, if he have the same authority over a bishop as a bishop over the minister (as it is said), he may do the like unto him also.

A gross petition of the principle, or rather an untruth.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is another forged witness (such sound proofs the man hath that reproves other men for the like); and yet God knoweth his witness maketh nothing for him⁵. For who giveth authority to the archbishop to deprive either bishop or inferior minister, without due proof and examination of the cause? touching consent of other, if he deal with him according to law, then dealeth he with the consent, not of the other bishops only, but of all the realm; because that which is done by law is done by the consent of all that consented either to the confirming or making of that law. Your glances by the way, that "there was then no metropolitan," that "then the same were bishops which we now call ministers," because they be but barely affirmed, it shall be sufficient as flatly to deny

[² Cartwright, for proof of the assumption of authority by an archbishop, refers to "the book of the 70. archbishops, where Canterbury is made the head of all our churches, all bishops sworn to canonical obedience of that archbishop, &c.," and goes on to enquire, "if the lord bishops are his vassals, the poor ministers what place shall they have?"—Sec. Repl. p. 614. Conf. Parker, Antiq. Brit. Eccles. Hanov. 1605. pp. 25, &c.]

[³ Harde, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ Instituit præterea ne metropolitanus episcopum provinciæ suæ alicujus criminis reum faceret et damnaret, nisi prius a provincialibus episcopis causa discussa et cognita fuisset. Sunt tamen qui hoc postremum Pelagio pontifici ascribant.—Plat. De Vit. Pont. Col. 1551. Higin. p. 17.]

[⁵ "The authority out of the counterfeit Higinus...maketh for us more than if it had been out of the true Higinus; considering that the archbishop in the counterfeit Higinus' time, being grown much out of fashion, was yet girded in less room than ours."—Sec. Repl. p. 614.]

them, and for proof thereof to refer the reader unto that which hath been spoken before.

Chapter v. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 95, Sect. 5.

No such thing in the 17. canon.

The council of Antioch ordained that, if the voices of the bishops were even, and that if half did condemn him, and half clear him, that then the metropolitan bishop should call of the next province some other bishops, which should make an end of the controversy: whereby appeareth that the metropolitan had so small authority and power over and above the rest, that he had not so much as the casting voice when both sides were even. And therefore it appeareth that, besides the names of metropolitan, there was little or no resemblance between those that were then and those which be now. Can. 17.¹

JO. WHITGIFT.

Conc. Antio. can. 14.

You have written in the margent the 17. canon of that council, in the which there are no such words, nor anything tending to that purpose: it is the 14. canon that, I think, you mean; for in that canon it is thus determined, that, “if a bishop be judged for certain crimes, and it happen that the other bishops of the same province vary in judgment, some thinking him to be innocent, some guilty, for the resolving of all doubt it pleased the holy synod that the metropolitan bishop shall call for other judges out of the next province, to end the controversy, who, together with the bishops of the same province, shall approve that which is just and right².” Here is no mention of equality in voices, but only of disagreeing in judgment among the bishops of the same province. Likewise in this canon it appeareth that a metropolitan had authority over more provinces than one, for he might call the bishops of another province to decide the matter, if the bishops of the same province could not agree.

The authority of

I see not how this canon can anything help you; for now

[¹ This reference is not printed in Repl. 1.]

[² Εἰ τις ἐπίσκοπος ἐπὶ τισιν ἐγκλήμασι κρίνοιτο, ἔπειτα συμβαίη περὶ αὐτοῦ διαφωνεῖν τοὺς ἐν τῇ ἐπαρχίᾳ ἐπισκόπους, τῶν μὲν ἀθῶον τὸν κρινόμενον ἀποφαινόντων, τῶν δὲ ἑνοχόν· ὑπὲρ ἀπαλλαγῆς πάσης ἀμφισβητήσεως, ἔδοξε τῇ ἀγίᾳ συνόδῳ τὸν τῆς μητροπόλεως ἐπίσκοπον ἀπὸ τῆς πλησιοχώρου ἐπαρχίας μετακαλεῖσθαι ἑτέρους τινάς τοὺς ἐπικρινούντας, καὶ τὴν ἀμφισβήτησιν διαλύσοντας, τοῦ βεβαιῶσαι σὺν τοῖς τῆς ἐπαρχίας τὸ παριστάμενον.—Concil. Antioch. can. 14, in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 568.]

neither the metropolitan, nor all the bishops in the province, can deprive any bishop without the consent of the prince; so that in that point the authority of the metropolitan is nothing increased, nor yet the authority of the bishops. For then, as it appeareth in the 12. canon of that council, “if a priest or a deacon had been condemned of his own bishop, or a bishop of a synod, it was not lawful for them to complain to the emperor:” if they had complained, it was determined in the same canon that they “should never be pardoned, nor have any place of satisfaction, nor hope of restitution³.” But now it is far otherwise. The 11. canon of the same council is much to the same effect⁴. Wherefore the authority of the metropolitan and other bishops is not increased, as you pretend, but both the metropolitan and other bishops had as much authority then over other priests, ministers, and deacons, as they have now; as appeareth by sundry canons of the same council.

Can. 12.

Can. 11.

In the 4. canon it is decreed that, “if a bishop condemned by a synod, or a priest or a deacon condemned by his own bishop, shall take upon him to exercise any ministry, he shall be without all hope of restitution; and whosoever doth communicate with him shall be excommunicated⁵.” In the 5. canon it is thus determined: “If any priest or deacon, contemning his proper bishop, hath separated himself from the church, and, gathering people apart, hath erected an altar, and hath not obeyed the admonition of his bishop, neither hath consented and agreed unto him, calling him back divers times, let this man be condemned, and deposed by all means, and let him not obtain any remedy afterward, because he cannot receive again his dignity. But, if he per-

Canon 4.

Canon 5.

[³ Εἴ τις ὑπὸ τοῦ ἰδίου ἐπισκόπου καθαιρεθεὶς πρεσβύτερος, ἢ διάκονος, ἢ καὶ ἐπίσκοπος ὑπὸ συνόδου, ἐνοχλήσαι τολμήσειε τὰς βασιλέως ἀκοὰς, δέον ἐπὶ μείζονα ἐπισκόπων σύνοδον τρέπεσθαι, καὶ ἃ νομίζει δίκαια ἔχειν, προσαναφέρειν πλείοσιν ἐπισκόποις, καὶ τὴν αὐτῶν ἐξέτασιν τε καὶ ἐπικρίσιν ἐκδέχεσθαι. εἰ δὲ τούτων ὀλιγωρήσας ἐνοχλήσειεν τῷ βασιλεῖ, καὶ τούτων μηδεμίας συγγνώμης ἀξιοῦσθαι, μηδὲ χώραν ἀπολογίας ἔχειν, μηδὲ ἐλπίδα ἀποκαταστάσεως προσδοκᾶν.—Ibid. can. 12. ibid.]

[⁴ Ibid. cols. 565, 8.]

[⁵ Εἴ τις ἐπίσκοπος ὑπὸ συνόδου καθαιρεθεὶς, ἢ πρεσβύτερος, ἢ διάκονος ὑπὸ τοῦ ἰδίου ἐπισκόπου, τολμήσειεν τι πράξαι τῆς λειτουργίας, εἴ τε ὁ ἐπίσκοπος κατὰ τὴν προάγουσαν συνήθειαν, εἴτε ὁ διάκονος· μηκέτι ἐξὸν εἶναι αὐτῷ, μηδ' ἐν ἑτέρᾳ συνόδῳ ἐλπίδα ἀποκαταστάσεως, μήτε ἀπολογίας χώραν ἔχειν. ἀλλὰ δὲ τοὺς κοινωνοῦντας αὐτῷ πάντας ἀποβάλλεσθαι τῆς ἐκκλησίας, κ. τ. λ.—Ibid. can. 4. col. 564.]

sist to trouble the church, let him be corrected by the outward power as a seditious person¹." By these canons it is evident that the bishop of every several diocese had authority by himself to excommunicate, to deprive, and to seclude from the ministry any priest, deacon, or any other of the clergy, in more ample and large manner than he hath at this day. The which thing also may be seen in the 6.² and 12.³ canons of the same council; so that you have sought for help at the council which is one of the greatest enemies to this your assertion, and doth flatly condemn it. Divers canons of the which council, if they were practised, would soon remedy the sects and schisms which you have stirred⁴.

Chapter v. The Eighth Division.

T. C. Page 95, Sect. ult.

Many untruths heaped together.

Now, to consider how the bishops which are now differ from the bishops which were in times past, I must call to thy remembrance, gentle reader, that which I have spoken before, which was that then there was, as appeareth out of Cyprian, and Jerome, and others, one bishop in every parish or congregation; now one is over a thousand: then every bishop had a several church, where he preached and ministered the sacraments; now he hath none: then he ruled that one church (as I shewed out of Jerome) in common with the elders of the same; now he ruleth a thousand by himself, shutting out the ministers, to whom the rule and government belongeth: then he ordained not any minister of the church, except he were first chosen by the presbytery, and approved by the people of that place whereunto he was ordained; now he ordaineth where there is no place void, and of his private authority, without either choice or approbation of presbytery or people. Then he excommunicated not, nor received the excommunicated, but by sentences of the eldership and consent of the people, as shall appear afterward; now he doth both. And thus you see that, contrary to the word of God, he hath gotten into his own hand and pulled to himself both the pre-eminence of the other ministers, and the liberties of the church which God by his word had given.

[¹ Εἴ τις πρεσβύτερος, ἢ διάκονος, καταφρονήσας τοῦ ἐπισκόπου τοῦ ἰδίου, ἀφώρισεν αὐτὸν τῆς ἐκκλησίας, καὶ ἰδίᾳ συνήγαγεν, καὶ θυσιαστήριον ἔστησεν, καὶ τοῦ ἐπισκόπου προσκαλεσαμένου ἀπειθοίη, καὶ μὴ βούλοιτο αὐτῷ πείθεσθαι μηδὲ ὑπακούειν καὶ πρῶτον καὶ δεύτερον καλοῦντι· τοῦτον καθαιρεῖσθαι παντελῶς, καὶ μηκέτι θεραπείας τυγχάνειν, μηδὲ δύνασθαι λαμβάνειν τὴν αὐτοῦ τιμὴν. εἰ δὲ παραμένει θορυβῶν καὶ ἀναστατῶν τὴν ἐκκλησίαν, διὰ τῆς ἔξωθεν ἐξουσίας ὡς στασιώδη αὐτὸν ἐπιστρέφεισθαι.—Ibid. can. 5. ibid.]

[² Ibid. can. 6. ibid.]

[³ Ibid. can. 12. col. 568.]

[⁴ Cartwright acknowledges that he mistook the number of the canon he cited, but still insists upon his point, that the authority of metropolitans and bishops was then greater than in earlier times.—Sec. Repl. pp. 645, 6.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

There is scarce one word of all this true; and surely I much marvel that you dare be so bold so manifestly to speak against your own conscience and knowledge. I have before sufficiently proved all that is here by you avouched to be clean contrary for the most part. It shall be therefore sufficient as briefly now to answer as you do propound. Demetrius was bishop of all the diocese in Egypt and Alexandria, *Euseb. Lib. vi. cap. 1.*⁵ Cyprian was bishop of Carthage, Numidia, Mauritania, *Cyprian, Lib. iv. Epist. 8.*⁶ Timothy being bishop had the government almost of the whole country of Asia; as Chrysostom declareth upon the 1 Tim. v.⁷, and 2 Tim. iv.⁸ Titus was bishop of the whole isle of Creta; as the same Chrysost. testifieth, *ad Tit. i.*⁹ I have before, by sundry examples and testimonies, by divers councils, and especially the council of Nice¹⁰, detected the vanity and untruth of this that is here affirmed, that is, "that there was one bishop in every parish and congregation;" and the words of Cyprian and Jerome be clean contrary; for they both make a difference between a bishop to whom the government of many pastors is committed, and a pastor that hath but one several flock or charge. For further understanding whereof I refer the reader to that which is spoken before. Euseb. Lib. vi. cap. 1. Cypr. Lib. iv. Ep. 8. Chrysostom. Idem.

The bishops have now as several churches to preach and minister the sacraments in as they had then. They have no more authority in government now than they had at that time, nor so much; and yet, if they had more authority than they either have now, or had then, I think it were more for the commodity of the church, the state of time¹¹ and conditions of men considered.

As for ruling every several church by those which you call elders, you have shewed no such thing out of Jerome,

[⁵ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. vi. cap. ii. p. 164. See before, page 164, note 7.]

[⁶ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. xlviii. p. 91. See before, page 164, note 5.]

[⁷ Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In 1. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. v. Hom. xv. Tom. XI. p. 637. See before, page 284, note 2.]

[⁸ Ἀξιον ζητῆσαι πῶς καλεῖ τὸν Τιμόθεον πρὸς ἑαυτὸν, εἶγε ἐκκλησίαν πεπιστευμένους ἦν, καὶ ἔθνος ὁλόκληρον.—Id. in 11. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. v. [iv.] Hom. x. ibid. p. 720.]

[⁹ Id. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Hom. i. p. 729. See before, page 285, note 3.]

[¹⁰ See before, page 141, &c.]

[¹¹ Of the time, Def. A.]

neither can you. For Jerome, in that place you mean, by presbyteri meaneth priests¹, as he doth in all other places that I remember. Neither doth he there speak of particular parishes.

Tract. III. Touching the electing and ordaining of ministers, sufficient hath been spoken before². The bishop doth nothing therein, but that which he may justly by the word of God, and testimony of the best and most worthy writers.

Tract. XVIII. Of excommunication we shall speak hereafter; you do glance at it now out of place. And thus he that is an indifferent reader may understand that the bishops in these days in this church of England have no other authority than the word of God doth give unto them, the bishops of the primitive church have practised, the liberty of the church well beareth, and the state of the time and condition of men requireth.

Chapter v. The Ninth Division.

T. C. Page 96, Line 7.

A worthy council. And, as for the offices wherein there is any labour or travail, those they have turned unto the other ministers; as for example in times past it was not lawful for him that was then an elder to preach or minister the sacraments in the presence of the bishop, because the bishop himself should do it; and now those which they call elders may preach and minister the sacraments by the bishop's good licence, although he be present. Hispal. conc. can. 7.³

JO. WHITGIFT.

A corrupt council alleged. *There is no just cause of complaint for most of the bishops in that behalf. For I think the time hath not been wherein there were more preaching bishops than are at this day in this church. But do you think that a minister may not preach or minister the sacraments in the presence of the bishop? or do you so well allow of that council and canon quoted in your margent? It was the second council called Hispalense concilium, it was not general, but provincial, celebrated Anno Dom. 659.: the contents of the canon by you alleged are these: "That a priest may not consecrate altars, but only the bishop; that a priest and *chorepiscopi

[¹ See before, pages 221, note 5, 225, note 7.]

[² See Vol. I. pages 296, &c.]

[³ Repl. 1 prints Concil. c. 7.]

may not consecrate virgins, erect altars, bless and anoint them, hallow churches, make holy oil," and such like, but only the bishop. Likewise that "no priest may baptize, say mass, teach the people, or bless them in the presence of the bishop⁴." Surely this is a worthy council, and a notable canon, especially for you to allege, that have so depraved other worthy writers for some imperfections found in them.

But what doth it make for your purpose? They might both preach and minister the sacraments in the presence of the bishop, if he willed them; and so is the canon. This law was made for the increasing of the bishops' pomp and dignity; for no man might presume to speak or do anything in their presence, without their leave and licence: so were they esteemed then, and such authority had they. But, if our bishops should claim the like, you would say that it were an intolerable arrogancy and pride.

The council alleged against himself.

I would to God all those that be deluded by you would consider your allegations, and the grounds of your proofs. Surely I would be loth to allege any council of that time to prove anything in controversy. Much more loth would I be to allege so corrupt a canon; but lothest of all to allege that, which should be so flat against my cause, and prove the clean contrary to that which I affirm, as this doth in your cause.

And here I have one thing to tell you, that divers of those things, wherein you would make this difference betwixt our bishops and those of the primitive church, if they were true, yet were they no faults in the office, but in the men; as, for example, this which you here set down. Will you make a difference in the offices of our bishops and those of old time, because some of them do not preach? This compareth the

T. C. chargeth the office with the fault of the men.

[⁴ Nam quamvis cum episcopis plurima illis ministeriorum communis sit dispensatio, quædam novellis et ecclesiasticis regulis sibi prohibita noverint: sicut presbyterorum, et diaconorum, ac virginum consecratio; sicut constitutio altaris, benedictio vel unctio: siquidem nec licere eis ecclesiam, vel altarium [al. altaria] consecrare, nec per impositionem manus fidelibus baptizatis, vel conversis ex hæresi paracletum Spiritum tradere, nec chrisma conficere, &c., neque coram episcopo licere presbyteris in baptisterium introire, nec præsentem antistitem infantem tingere aut signare, nec pœnitentes sine præcepto episcopi sui reconciliare, nec eo præsentem sacramentum corporis et sanguinis Christi conficere, nec eo coram posito populum docere, vel benedicere, aut salutare, nec plebem utique exhortari.—Concil. Hispal. 11. can. 7. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. V. col. 1666. In Labbe and Cossart the date assigned to this council is A.D. 619.]

men together, not the offices, except you prove that it is forbidden or unlawful for one of our bishops to preach. There are other such like, which I omit¹.

Chapter v. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 96, Sect. 1.

Mark how this is proved.

Now if you will also consider how much the lordship, pomp, and stateliness of the bishops in our days differ from the simplicity of them in times past, I will give you also a taste thereof, if first of all I shew the beginning, or as it were the fountain, whereupon the pomp grew, which was when, instead of having a bishop in every parish and congregation, they began to make a bishop of a whole diocese, and of a thousand congregations.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If the pomp began as you say, then began it in the apostles' time; for then began they to make one bishop over a whole diocese, as Timothy almost over all Asia, and Titus over all Creta; as I have declared. Which order hath been from that day to this observed throughout all Christendom; as it may appear by that which is already said.

Chapter v. The Eleventh Division.

T. C. Page 96, Sect. 2.

It is an epistle of pope Zachary to Boniface, not of Zachary to pope Boniface.
An untruth,
as will appear.

In an epistle of Zachary unto pope Boniface it is thus written: "It hath been oftentimes decreed that there should not be a bishop appointed in every village or little city, lest they should wax vile through the multitude;" whereby it both appeareth that there was wont to be a bishop in every parish, and upon how corrupt and evil consideration one bishop was set over a whole diocese. No doubt those that were authors of this had learned too well our old proverb, "the fewer the better cheer;" but, the more bishops, the merrier it had been with God's people.

Conc. To. 3.
Epist. Zach.
Pape ad
Bonifac.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This epistle was written by pope Zachary to one Boniface, which was bishop in France, and not to "pope Boniface:" moreover it is in the 2. Tome of councils; and you have quoted in your margent the third. But to the matter.

[¹ Cartwright rejoins that what he had "alleged out of the council of Hispalis ... is in a council supposed more ancient than the first Nicene," viz. that of Neocaesarea, and declares that there ought not to be one unpreaching bishop, for such a one was "a monster."—Sec. Repl. pp. 646, 7.]

You have not one word in that epistle to prove that there was wont at any time "to be in every parish a bishop." And you have falsely alleged the words of the epistle; for these words, "lest they should wax vile through the multitude," are not there to be found. The words of the epistle be these: "For you must remember what we are commanded by the old canons to observe, that we ought not to ordain bishops in villages and small cities, lest the name of a bishop should wax vile²." What one word is there here of placing bishops in every parish? Zachary telleth Boniface that it is according to the old canons that bishops should not be placed in such small cities, but in more ample and large cities; because the contemptibleness of the place doth oftentimes bring contempt to the person; and a bishop ought to be esteemed and revered. If you had read the epistle, you should have perceived that this Boniface had lately converted to Christianity interiorem Germaniam, and that he had ordained among them certain bishops to govern them, whom he desired pope Zachary by his authority to confirm, to whom pope Zachary answering willeth him to consider whether the places be so convenient, or the number of the people so great, ut episcopos habere mereantur. Meminerimus enim (saith he) quid in sacris canonibus &c.; as I have rehearsed them before. And a little after he nameth the places where he will have the bishops' seats to be. So that there is nothing less meant than that there was "in every parish a bishop;" forso much as there was there before no bishop in any parish; but this is all that may be gathered, that the seats of bishops were by the old canons appointed to be in the best cities, and most famous places; which to be true you may soon perceive in those canons themselves, mentioned here by Zachary: they are to be found, *Dist. 80.*³

The epistle of pope Zachary falsified.

[² Sed tua sancta fraternitas pertractet mature, et subtili consideratione discernat, si expedit, aut si loca vel populorum turbæ talia esse probantur, ut episcopos habere mereantur. Memineris enim quid in sacris canonibus præcipimur observare, ut minime in villulas vel in modicas civitates episcopos ordinemus, ne vilescat nomen episcopi.—Zach. Papæ Epist. ad Bonifac. Episc. in Crabb. Concil. Col. Agripp. 1551. Tom. II. p. 454. Boniface was an Englishman, who became archbishop of Mentz.]

[³ Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Prim. Pars, Dist. lxxx. cols. 381, &c. The rubric of the distinction is: Loca vero, in quibus primates, patriarchæ, archiepiscopi, episcopi, presbyteri sunt ordinandi, hæc sunt secundum Lucium papam, et Clementem, atque Anacletum. See before, page 118, note 2.]

Chapter v. The Twelfth Division.

T. C. Page 96, Sect. 2.

When or where did God ordain
this?

And they might with as good reason hinder the sun from shining in all places, and the rain from falling upon all grounds, for fear they should not be set by, being common, as to bring in such a wicked decree, whereby, under pretence of delivering the bishop from contempt, they sought nothing else but an ambitious and stately lordship over those which had not that title of bishop that they had, although they did the office of a bishop better than they did. And what intolerable presumption is this to change the institution of God, as though he, which ordained not one only, but some number more or less of bishops in every church, did not sufficiently foresee that the multitude and plenty of bishops could breed no contempt of the office! And it may be as well ordained that the children of poor men should not call them that begat them fathers and mothers, but only the children of the rich and of the noble¹; lest that, if every man that hath children should be called a father, fathers should be set nothing by.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is a marvellous matter that you delight to run so fast upon a false string: I tell you, once again, that you never read that epistle, neither yet those canons that it speaketh of. If you had read them, you would never have affirmed (if there be any modesty left in you) that "the multitude of bishops is alleged there as a cause of contempt," no such thing being mentioned. The canons have a very good consideration, and be not wicked, but wise and godly. This superiority of bishops is God's own institution, and it hath a necessary use in the church of God; as is shewed before. It hath been, and may be abused; and it is, and may be well used. All these glorious words of yours are but very words; and therefore, as words, I will commit them to the wind.

But one bishop in a city.

This one thing I cannot let pass that you say, "God ordained not one only, but some number more or less of bishops in every church." What scripture have you to prove that there should be more bishops than one in one church? What one example in all the primitive church have you to warrant this your assertion? Nay, you have the whole practice of the church to the contrary, even from the beginning. James alone was bishop of Jerusalem, Timothy of Ephesus, Titus of Creta, Clemens of Rome, &c.; and it hath been always counted as monstrous to have two bishops of one city, as to have two heads of one body. But such bold assertions without proof are meet principles for such a ruinous and tottering platform as you dream of.

[¹ Of noble, Repl. 2.]

Chapter v. The Thirteenth Division.

T. C. Page 96, Sect. 2.

And here let us observe by what degrees and stairs Satan lifted the child of perdition unto that proud title of universal bishop. First, where the Lord did ordain that there should be divers pastors, elders, or bishops in every congregation, Satan wrought first that there should be but one in every church: this was no doubt the first step. Afterwards he pushed further, and stirred up divers not to content themselves to be bishops of one church, but to desire to be bishops of a diocese; whereunto although it seemeth that there was resistance (in that it is said that "it was decreed often"), yet in the end this wicked attempt prevailed; and this was another step: then were there archbishops of whole provinces; which was the third stair unto the seat of antichrist. Afterwards they were patriarchs of one of the four corners of the whole world, the whole church being assigned to the jurisdiction of four, that is to say, of the Roman, Constantinopolitan, Antiochene, and Alexandrine bishops; and, these four stairs being laid of Satan, there was but an easy stride for the bishop of Rome into that chair of pestilence wherein he now sitteth.

In what place of scripture?

Is not this soundly proved?

JO. WHITGIFT.

All this is as coldly proved as it is boldly affirmed; for here is neither scripture, doctor, story, council, or anything else, but ipse dixit. How prove you that "the Lord ordained that there should be in every congregation divers pastors, elders, or bishops?" The place of scripture (if there be any) had been soon quoted. Or how prove you that "Satan wrought first that there should be but one in every church?"

Is it Satan's work that one church should have but one pastor? This is strange doctrine, and far from an apostolical spirit; contrary to the practice of the apostles, and of the church even from the beginning. But, seeing you have so barely set it down without any kind of proof, I will pass it over, by putting you to your proof. But yet, tell me, did Satan stir up Timothy and Titus, who were bishops of one whole diocese? Did he stir up the other ancient fathers and godly bishops of whom I have spoken? Whither will this slanderous mouth reach? whom will this venomous tongue spare, if it speak so spitefully of such worthy pastors?

Satan not the cause of one bishop in one church.

Your collection of "resistance" that hath been to such superiority (being grounded of the place that you never saw nor read) is rash and unadvised. For if you had seen either that epistle or those canons you would (or at the least you might) have learned another lesson.

"Archbishops," "patriarchs," &c., were allowed by the council of Nice, the godliest and the most perfect council (since the apostles' time) that ever was. And did Satan rule there also and prevail? O that Arius were alive to hear it! These steps, whereof you make Satan the author, and whereby you say, "the bishop of Rome hath ascended into the chair of pestilence, &c.," have been the best and most convenient kind of government that ever was in the church since the apostles' time; approved and allowed by the best councils, and the next means to have kept antichrist out of his seat, if in all places they had remained in their full force and authority.

But this I may not pass over, that you in effect confess your kind of government by elders to have ceased before the council of Nice, and also one bishop to have been over one whole diocese before that time¹, in that you say that the child of perdition was lifted up by these degrees, the last whereof was allowed in the Nicene council.

Chapter v. The Fourteenth Division.

T. C. Page 96, Sect. 2.

Having now shewed how this lordly estate of the bishop began, and upon what a rotten ground it is builded, I come to shew how far the bishops in our time are for their pomp and outward stateliness degenerated from the bishops of elder times.

JO. WHITGIFT.

A man would have thought that you, being so great an enemy to those degrees, would not have thus concluded upon so small proof, and the same utterly untrue; using only for your ground the epistle of pope Zachary, which maketh nothing for your purpose. Now let us see "how far the bishops of our time are for their pomp, &c., degenerated from the bishops of elder times."

[¹ Cartwright declares this assertion to be "utterly untrue."—Sec. Repl. p. 647.]

Chapter v. The Fifteenth Division.

T. C. Page 96, Sect. 3.

And here I call to remembrance that which was spoken of the poor estate of Basil and Theodoret; and, if M. Doctor will say (as he doth indeed in a certain place²) that then was a time of persecution, and this is a time of peace, it is easily answered that, although Basil were under persecution, yet Theodoret lived under good emperors. But that shall appear better by the canons, which were rules given for the bishops to frame themselves by.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is for lack of other examples that you are constrained to repeat these: to the poorness of Theodoret I have answered: there may be as poor bishops now as there was then; and there might be as rich bishops then as there are now. It is not one or two examples that can prove the contrary³.

Chapter v. The Sixteenth Division.

T. C. Page 97, Sect. 1.

14. Canon.
It calleth it hospitiolum.

In the iv. council of Carthage it is decreed that "the bishops should have a little house near unto the church⁴:" what is this compared with so many fair large houses, and with the princely

15. Canon. palace of a bishop? And in the same council it is decreed that he "should have the furniture and stuff of his house after the common sort, and that his table and diet should be poor, and that he should get him estimation by faithfulness and good conversation⁵."

JO. WHITGIFT.

In the 52.⁶ and 53.⁷ canons of the same council, clerks, how learned soever they be in God's word, are willed to get their living by some occupation, or by husbandry; but I think you

[² See Vol. I. page 378.]

[³ "I grant...that they may be rich; but I deny that they ought to grow rich by the ministry."—Sec. Repl. p. 648.]

[⁴ Ut episcopus non longe ab ecclesia hospitiolum habeat.—Concil. Carthag. iv. can. 14. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 1201.]

[⁵ Ut episcopus vilem supellectilem, et mensam ac victum pauperem habeat, et dignitatis suæ auctoritatem fide et vitæ meritis quærat.—Ibid. can. 15. ibid.]

[⁶ Clericus victum et vestimentum sibi artificioso vel agricultura, absque officii sui detrimento, parat.—Ibid. can. 52. col. 1204.]

[⁷ Omnes clerici, qui ad operandum validiores sunt, et artificiosa et literas discant.—Ibid. can. 53. ibid.]

will not have them so to do now at this time. Wherefore you must consider the diversity of the time and state of the church. If God hath dealt now more bountifully with his church in external benefits, if he hath put into the hearts of christian princes thus to deal with the ministers of the word, and if this state and condition be necessary for this time and people, why should you envy it? Riches and fair houses be no hinderances, but helps, if they be used accordingly; and commonly hypocrisy and pride lieth hid under the name of poverty and simplicity.

Chapter v. The Seventeenth Division.

T. C. Page 95, Sect. 1.

No such thing in that place.

And in another council, that the "bishops should not give themselves to feasts, but be content with a little meat¹." Let these bishops be compared with ours, whose chambers shine with gilt, whose walls are hanged with cloths of Auris, whose cupboards are loaden with plate, whose tables and diets are furnished with multitude and diversity of dishes, whose daily dinners are feasts—let them, I say, be compared together, and they shall be found so unlike that, if those old bishops were alive, they would not know each other. For they would think that ours were princes; and ours would think that they were some hedge-priests, not worthy of their acquaintance or fellowship.

5. Canon.
Concil. Tyronens.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you mean the first Tyronense concilium, there is no such thing found in the 5. canon of it, nor in the whole council. The fifth canon containeth a profitable admonition for you and such as you are; for it forbiddeth, under the pain of excommunication, that any, being a clerk, should leave off his calling, and become a layman². If you mean the second Tyronense concilium, I make you the like answer. Belike your collector hath deceived you; but what if it were so? This only might be gathered that, unless bishops then had been wealthy, there should not have needed a decree against feasting. If our bishops should make the like now, it would be thought they did it for sparing. And I think that, and such like canons, meet not only for bishops, but for all states and degrees of men.

[¹ Episcopum non oportere nimium profusis incumbere conviviis: sed parco et moderato contentus sit cibo, &c.—Concil. Turon. III. can. 5. ibid. Tom. VII. col. 1262.]

[² Si quis vero clericus, relicto officii sui ordine, laicam voluerit agere vitam, vel se militie tradiderit, excommunicationis pœna feriat. —Concil. Turon. I. can. 5. ibid. Tom. IV. col. 1051.]

Riches and costly furniture be no impediment to a godly man for doing his duty. And in such external things the condition of the time, and state of the country, is to be observed. Let our bishops be compared with them in truth of doctrine, in honesty of life, in diligent walking in their vocation, and in knowledge (I speak of the most in both ages), and I think the difference will not be so great, but that they may both know one another, and very well agree among themselves; this only excepted, that the doctrine of the gospel is now much more purely professed by our bishops than it was at that time by them; for both the councils are in sundry points very corrupt³.

Riches no impediment to godly men.

Wherein our bishops may be compared with the old bishops.

Chapter v. The Eighteenth Division.

T. C. Page 97, Sect. 2.

Can. 34. In the same council of Carthage it was decreed that "no bishop sitting in any place should suffer any minister or elder to stand⁴." Now I will report me to themselves how this is kept, and to the poor ministers which have to do with them, and come before them.

Jo. WHITGIFT.

A poor quarrel: though this humility is to be required in all bishops, yet is it to be used with discretion; for thus to deal with a proud and haughty stomach were but to give nourishment to arrogance and contempt. It is meet that every man have that honour and reverence given unto him which his place, his office, and his person requireth. And, as it is humility in him to remit any part of it, even so it is an

[³ Cartwright makes a long reply to the 16th and 17th divisions, in which he maintains that, as the word is "clerks" in the canons referred to by Whitgift, readers, door-keepers, &c., were included, who "having light charges in the church" might very properly be required to spend part of their time in labour. He also charges Whitgift with absurdity and untruth, declares that bishops, instead of devouring all themselves, ought to maintain "a college of scholars in their houses," and adds that it was the 3rd "council of Tyron," which he had referred to.—Sec. Repl. pp. 648, &c.]

[⁴ Ut episcopus quolibet loco sedens, stare presbyterum non patiat. —Concil. Carthag. iv. can. 34, in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 1203.]

intolerable contempt and pride for those that be inferiors so to look for such equality, that in the mean time they refuse to do that which civility, good manners, and duty, requireth. But let all men consider those notes and tokens of your haughty stomachs, and persuade themselves that it would not be long before you would challenge the same equality with other states and degrees in like manner¹.

Chapter v. The Nineteenth Division.

T. C. Page 97, Sect. 3.

The bishops in times past had no tail nor train of men after them, and thought it a slander to the gospel to have a number of men before and behind them. And therefore is Paulus Samosatenus noted as one that brought religion into hatred, and as one that seemed to take delight rather to be a captain² of two hundred than a bishop, because he had gotten him a sort of serving men to wait on him³. Another example, not unlike, and likewise reprehended, is in Rufine, of one Gregory a bishop. Now in our days it is thought a commendation to the bishop, a credit to the gospel, if a bishop have 30. 40. 60. or more waiting of him, some before, some behind; whereof three parts of them (set apart the carrying of a dish unto the table) have no honest or profitable calling to occupy themselves in two hours of the day, to the filling of the church and commonwealth also with all kind of disorders and greater incommodities than I mind to speak of, because it is not my purpose.

He was re-proved for using himself like a captain,
being accompanied with a guard of soldiers.

Gregory, for George.

Euseb. Lib.
vii. cap. 30.

Ruf. Lib. i.
cap. 23.

JO. WHITGIFT.

In Eusebius it is said that Paulus Samosatenus used to walk publicly in the market-places, reading letters, and boasting himself, being accompanied with “a number of soldiers,” some before him and some behind him, more like to a captain than a bishop. If any of our bishops walk in the streets to δορυφορού-μενος :

that is, accompanied with spear-men and halberts.

[¹ “But what if the bishop being proud the ministers be humble; surely by this reason it should be rather in their discretion to make the bishop stand before them.”—Sec. Repl. p. 654.]

[² Captain, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ ... ὡς ὑψηλὰ φρονεῖ καὶ ὑπερῆρται κοσμικὰ ἀξιώματα ὑποδύμενος· καὶ δουκηνάριος μᾶλλον ἢ ἐπίσκοπος θέλων καλεῖσθαι· καὶ σοβῶν κατὰ τὰς ἀγορὰς· καὶ ἐπιστολὰς ἀναγινώσκων καὶ ὑπαγορεύων ἅμα βαδίζων δημοσίᾳ καὶ δορυφορούμενος· τῶν μὲν προπορευομένων, τῶν δὲ ἐφεπομένων πολλῶν τὸν ἀριθμὸν· ὡς καὶ τὴν πίστιν φθονεῖσθαι καὶ μισεῖσθαι διὰ τὸν ὄγκον αὐτοῦ καὶ τὴν ὑπερηφανίαν τῆς καρδίας.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. vi. cap. xxx. p. 229.]

be seen, or stand in the market-places, or other open and public assemblies reading of letters, accompanied with soldiers and men of war, then may it be truly said of them that is here truly spoken of Paulus Samosatenus. But, if they, being far from such vanity, keep that countenance and retinue of men, which their place, the manner of their country, the honour of the prince, the state of the church requireth, then do you uncharitably and unjustly apply this example against them. But, unless Paulus Samosatenus had been rich and wealthy, how could this pomp of his have been maintained? Wherefore this example is rather against you than for you; neither doth it condemn wealth and riches in bishops, but pride, vain-glory, and lightness. For they accuse him of spoiling the church, and thereby enriching himself.

Honourable titles
of bishops.
The example of P. samo.
unjustly applied to our bishops.

In the example of George, whom you call Gregory, mentioned in Ruffine, there is no word spoken of any "serving men," or soldiers; only he is there reprov'd, because "he got his bishopric by violence, and thought that the office of judgment in civil causes was rather committed unto him than the priesthood. &c.⁴" If any bishop offend in the like with us, it is the fault of the man, not of the office. By this example also it may appear that bishops in those days had riches and authority; for this abusing of their wealth and authority doth argue that they had both, which they might have used rightly and well⁵.

Ruffin.
Lib. i. cap.
23.

Chapter v. The Twentieth Division.

T. C. Page 97, Sect. 4.

And here I will note another cause which brought in this pomp and princely estate of bishops; wherein, although I will say more in a word for the pompous estate than M. Doctor hath done in all his treatise, yet I will shew that, although it were more tolerable at the first, now it is by no means to be borne with. In the Ecclesiastical Story we read

*Theod. Lib. v.
cap. 8.*

that the inscriptions of divers epistles sent unto bishops were

[⁴ ... apud Alexandriam vero Georgius satis procaciter ut raptum episcopatum gerebat ita ut magis sibi juris dicendi creditos fasces quam sacerdotium ministrandum religiosus officiis æstimaret.—Hyst. Eccles. Par. Lib. x. cap. xxiii. fol. 115. 2.]

[⁵ Cartwright rejoins that the answer as to Paulus Samosatensis is "frivolous," and that Gregory "entered as well as George, and before him, with a troop of men into the bishopric."—Sec. Repl. p. 655.]

Honourable titles
of bishops.

τιμωτάτοις κυρίοις¹. We read also of ἀσπαστικὸν οἶκον: "house of salutations," which Ambrose bishop of Millain had². As for the title of "most honourable lords," it was not so great nor so stately as the name of a lord or knight in our country; for all those that know the manner of the speech of the Grecians do well understand how they used to call every one of any mean countenance in the commonwealth where he lived κύριον, that is, "lord;" so we see also the evangelists turn rabbi, which signifieth "master," by the Greek word κύριος: "lord;" as likewise in France³ they call every one that is a gentleman⁴, or hath any honest place, "Monsieur;" and so they will say also, "saving your honour." Now we know this word "lord" in our country is used otherwise to note some great personage, either by reason of birth or by reason of some high dignity in the commonwealth which he occupieth; and therefore those titles, although they were somewhat excessive, yet were they nothing so swelling and stately as ours are.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Prov. xxvii.

The wise man saith, "Let not thine own mouth praise thee;" but you, for lack of good neighbours, or else for too too much self-love, oftentimes forget this lesson, as in this place.

The title of most honourable lord.

Howsoever "the Grecians used to call every one of any mean countenance in the commonwealth where he lived κύριον: lord," yet did they not use to call him τιμωτάτον κύριον: "most honourable lord;" for that title was only given to such as were of great dignity and authority; as it is in the place of Theodoret (by you quoted) given to bishops; and therefore you have made an objection which you cannot answer. This word "lord" doth signify pre-eminence and superiority, and, having this title, "most honourable," joined with it, it cannot but signify some great state and degree of authority.

Rabbi.

The same I answer to that which followeth. And yet rabbi was a name given primariis hominibus, et honore aliquo præditis: "to the chief men, and those which were endowed with some honour⁵;" and, in that the evangelists do translate it "lord," it is manifest that this name "lord," sig-

[¹ Κυρίοις τιμωτάτοις, κ.τ.λ.—Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. v. cap. ix. p. 208.]

[² Ἐπειδὴ δὲ τοὺς ἱεροὺς περιβόλους κατέλαβεν, εἰς μὲν τὸν θεῖον οὐκ εἰσέλθῃ λυθε νεών. πρὸς δὲ τὸν ἀρχιερέα παραγενόμενος, ἐν δὲ τῷ ἀσπαστικῷ οἴκῳ οὗτος καθῆστο, ἐλιπάρει λυθῆναι τῶν δεσμών.—Id. ibid. cap. xviii. p. 221.]

[³ So we see also the evangelists use the word κύριος to note a mean person; as when Mary, in the xx. of John, thinking that our Saviour Christ had been the keeper of the garden, calleth him κύριον. So likewise in France, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ That is gentleman, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ "That every reader in the church was called Rabbi, those know which have any skill in the tongue from whence it was taken."—Sec. Repl. p. 655.]

nified then a degree of superiority; but, having, as I said, this title “most honourable” added unto it, as it is in that place of Theodoret, it cannot but signify some especial pre-eminence, and therefore equivalent with the titles now used. Master Calvin, upon the xx. of John, verse 16., saith that “Rabboni,” which is there interpreted “master,” is nomen . . . non modo honorificum: “not only an honourable name,” but also [quod] *professionem continet obedientiæ*⁶: “such as containeth a profession of obedience.”

Honourable titles of bishops.

Calvin.

But do the titles of honour and dignity given unto bishops so much trouble your haughty stomach? Surely you are not then of that spirit that the old ancient fathers were, who disdained not to call bishops by as honourable titles as we do. Look in Atha. his ii. Apol.; you shall there find the synod gathered at Jerusalem writing to the priests of Alexand. call Athanasius sundry times dominum, not as by a common title, but a title of dignity, *quum vobis restituit pastorem vestrum et dominum comministrum nostrum Athanasium*⁷: “when he shall restore unto you your pastor and lord, our fellow-minister Athanasius.” In the same Apol., bishops are called *domini preciocissimi*⁸: “most excellent or worthy lords.” And it is evident in the same book, that there was no other title given to the emperor himself; for there he is only called “lord;” and so were other of his nobles in like manner⁹. So that in those days it was not grudged at to give unto bishops the same titles of honour that was given to the emperor and other nobles. The name of “most reverend” is as much as the name of “most honourable,” and yet was that name also given unto bishops in Athanasius’ time; as appeareth in the same book in sundry places. For Athanasius himself is called by his priests and deacons *reverendissimus episcopus*¹⁰.

Very honourable titles to bishops.

Athan. Apol.
2.

Eusebius Nicomed., writing to Paulinus, bishop of Tyrus, useth this style, Domino meo Paulino, &c.: “To my lord Paulinus,” To. i. Con.¹¹ But what should I labour to prove

[⁶ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Euang. sec. Joan. cap. xx. 16. Tom. VI. p. 175.]

[⁷ Athanas. Op. Par. 1698. Apolog. adv. Arian. 57. Tom. I. p. 175.]

[⁸ Ibid. 77. p. 193.]

[⁹ Ibid. 76, 80. pp. 193, 7. The word here used is δеспότης.]

[¹⁰ Ibid. 73. p. 189.]

[¹¹ Epist. Euseb. Nicomed. ad Paulin. Episc. Tyr. in Crabb. Concil. Col. Agripp. 1551. Tom. I. p. 245. Conf. Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. i. cap. vi. p. 22.]

the antiquity of such titles, which cannot be unknown to such as be learned? I had more need to declaim against the pride and haughtiness of such as do disdain to use them; but I will not spend paper in words.

Chapter v. The Twenty-first Division.

T. C. Page 97, Sect. 5, 6.

And, as touching Ambrose' house, albeit the word doth not imply¹ so great gorgeousness nor magnificence of a² house as the palaces and other magnifical buildings of our bishops, yet the cause whereupon this rose doth more excuse Ambrose, who, being taken from great wealth and government in the commonwealth, giving over his office, did retain his house and that which he had gotten.

It was the house belonging to the bishop. A heap of slanders.

But our bishops do maintain this pomp and excess of the charges of the church, with whose goods a great number of idle loitering serving-men are maintained, which ought to be bestowed upon the ministers, which want necessary finding for their families, and upon the poor, and maintenance of the universities. As for these riotous expenses of the church-goods when many other ministers want, and of making great dinners and entertaining great lords and magistrates, and of the answer to them that say they do help the church by this means, I will refer the reader to that which Jerome writeth in an epistle Ad Nepotianum Monachum³, where Ad Nepotianum Monachum⁴.
this is handled more at large.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Your answer for Ambrose his house hath no probability in it; for the words of Theodoret in that place do plainly declare that it was near unto the church, yea, infra septa ecclesiae: "within the bonds or close of the church;" and therefore most like to be the house pertaining to the bishopric, and not any part of Ambrose his former possessions. For, if you remember, you said a little before, that it was decreed in the iv. council of Carthage, can. 14, that a bishop should have his house near unto the church⁵. But wise men can consider from whence such unlikely assertions without any shew of proof do come.

Ambrose' house within the bounds of the church.

Bishops build not these great houses "of the church's goods," but receive them as left unto them by such as were Bishops defended against the slanderous Reply.

[¹ Employ, Editt.]

[² An, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Nepotian. de Vit. Cleric. Epist. xlv. Tom. IV. Pars 11. cols. 256, &c.]

[⁴ This marginal reference is inserted from Repl. 2, which has in the text Jerome writeth in a certain place where &c.]

[⁵ See before, page 381, note 4.]

far from seeking a spoil: they use them according to the laws of the land; and their number of men can in no respect be discommended, tending to the defence and strength of the realm, the honour of the prince, and their own honest and good education. Our bishops therefore use the goods of the church according to the first institution and foundation; and I doubt not but they use them to more profit both of the church and commonwealth than they should be used if your fancies might take place.

Your complaint “for ministers, for the poor, &c.”, may be otherwise satisfied than by a spoil; for, if benefices were rightly used, the ministers of this realm are better provided for than in any country or age: yea, there are more sufficient livings for them besides the bishoprics than can be supplied with able ministers. The poor also are well provided for (God be thanked) by sundry means, if laws made for the same were duly executed, and hospitals with such other provisions delivered from unreasonable leases, and bestowed upon the poor according to their first ordinances. Wherefore this clamour of yours is nothing but the voice of an envious spirit proclaiming the spoil of the church, to the decay of learning, and bringing in of barbarism, if it be not in time prevented.

The “universities” are much beholding to you for your care over them; but what reasons have you used against the livings and houses of bishops that may not also be used against their lands and colleges? for in times past, when that council of Carthage (before by you alleged) was holden, there were no such colleges endued with such possessions as there are now. Neither are there (as I have heard) in Christendom the like colleges, and the like livings for students, as are in this realm of England. Wherefore, if such examples and conditions of countries, times, and persons, be sufficient to overthrow bishops’ houses and lands, I see not how colleges can stand long after them; and therefore we pray you speak for yourself; we require not the help of so evil a proctor. Would you seek to maintain learning with the spoil of the church, and the diminishing of the reward of learning? An non vides, quam pugnantia loqueris?

By that “epistle of Jerome ad Nepotianum” it appeareth that the state of the clergy was not then so poor as you would seem to make it. Jerome reproveth the abuses of his Provision for ministers.

Provision for the poor.

Whereunto the Replier's clamour tendeth.

The same axe is lifted against universities, that hacketh at bishops' lands.

The thing must not be condemned for the abuse.

time, as covetousness, gluttony, gorgeous and costly apparel, with such like, which at all times are in like manner to be condemned. But doth he that reproveth the abuse condemn the thing? It is a fault by covetous or unjust dealing to wax rich; but yet it is no fault to be rich. Pride in apparel is to be condemned; but yet every man may lawfully wear that apparel that is meet for his degree. No man alloweth gluttony or immoderate feasting; neither doth any wise man condemn a plentiful table and good housekeeping. It is not good dealing to apply that which is spoken against the abuse of a thing, to the condemning and quite overthrow of the thing itself; as you do the words of Jerome in that epistle.

Chapter v. The Twenty-second Division.

T. C. Page 98, Lin. 2.

This is before
answered.

By this which I have cited it appeareth what was one cause of this excess and stately pomp of the bishops, namely, that, certain noble and rich men being chosen to the ministry, and living somewhat like unto the former estates wherein they were before, others also assayed to be like unto them; as we see in that point the nature of man is too ready to follow if they see any example before their eyes. But there is no reason, because Ambrose and such like did so, therefore our bishops should do it of the church's costs: nor, because Ambrose and such like did tarry in their trim houses which they had built themselves of their own charge before they were bishops, that therefore they should come out of their chambers or narrow houses into courts and palaces builded of the church's costs.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Where have you shewed any such thing by Ambrose his example? or how doth it appear that by such means "the pomp of the bishops" (as you call it) was brought in? That which you speak of Ambrose' house is most untrue: it was pertaining to the bishop, and no part of Ambrose his proper possessions, as it is evident by this, that it was near unto the church, even within the limits of the church; as I have said before.

Chapter v. The Twenty-third Division.

T. C. Page 98, Sect. 1.

Another reason of this pomp and stateliness of the bishops was that which almost brought in all poison and popish corruption into the church, and that is a foolish emulation of the manners and fashions of the idolatrous nations. For, as this was the craft of Satan to draw away the Israelites from the true service of God, by their fond desire they had to conform themselves to the fashions of the gentiles, so, to punish unthankful receiving of the gospel, and to fulfil the prophecies touching the man of sin, the Lord suffered those that professed Christ to corrupt their ways by the same sleight of the devil.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If it be enough to say without any kind of proof, then you have said something; but, if words without proofs be but light, then are these words so to be esteemed, and not otherwise. I know the papists, through foolish imitation of the gentiles, have brought in sundry superstitions of the gentiles. But I speak of the matter we have in hand, that is inequality of degrees and authority among the ministers of the church, and the names and offices of "archbishop," "bishop," "archdeacon," &c.; which you neither have shewed, nor can shew to be brought into the church, by any imitation of the gentiles; and therefore you do still petere principium.

T. C. still offendeth in petitione principii.

Chapter v. The Twenty-fourth Division.

T. C. Page 98, Sect. 2.

Enseb. viii.
cap. 15.

Galerianus Maximinus the emperor, to the end that he might promote the idolatry and superstition whereunto he was addicted, chose of the choicest magistrates to be priests, and, that they might be in great estimation, gave each of them a train of men to follow them; and now the Christians¹ and christian emperors, thinking that that would promote the christian religion that promoted superstition, and not remembering that it is oftentimes abominable before God which is esteemed in the eyes of men, endeavoured to make their bishops encounter and match with those idolatrous priests, and to cause that they should not be inferior to them in wealth and outward pomp. And therefore I conclude that, seeing the causes and fountains from whence this pomp and stateliness of bishops have come are so corrupt and naught, the thing itself which hath risen of such causes cannot be good.

A wrong collection.

[¹ And the Christians, Repl. 2.]

[² This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

There is no such thing in that place of Eusebius quoted in your margent; for in that book and chapter of Eusebius he only sheweth that enchanters and sorcerers were greatly esteemed of Maximinus, and that he builded churches of idols in every city, and appointed idolatrous priests in every place, also that he placed in every province one to be chief over the rest, and furnished him with soldiers and servants¹; but there is not one word that any christian prince took any example of him to do the like in christianity. It rather appeareth that Maximinus did in this point imitate the Christians, who had their metropolitans, and one chief bishop in every province, long before this time; as I have declared before. And I see no cause why you should say that Christians did follow the gentiles rather in providing for the ministers of the gospel sufficiently, than in building of churches in every city and placing ministers in them; for Maximinus did this as well as he did the other. This I am well assured of, that there is no such signification in that place of Eusebius, that any christian prince should follow this example. And therefore your conclusion, being collected and gathered of such false and untrue conjectures, must needs be like unto them.

I do not speak to maintain any excessive or outrageous pomp, but I speak of the degrees in the ecclesiastical state, and of the manners² and conditions of the persons, as they be now according to the laws and customs allowed in this church of England.

Chapter v. The Twenty-fifth Division.

T. C. Page 98, Sect. 3.

And thus will I make an end³, leaving to the consideration and indifferent weighing of the indifferent reader how true it is that I have before propounded, that our archbishops, metropolitans, archdeacons, bishops, have besides the names almost nothing common with those which have been in elder times, before the sun of the gospel began to be marvellously darkened by the stinking mists which the devil sent forth out of the bottomless pit, to blind the eyes of men that they should not see the shame and nakedness of that purpled whore which, in the person of the clergy, long before she got into her seat, prepared herself by painting her writhen face with the colours of these gorgeous titles, and with the shew of magnificent and worldly pomp. For the devil knew well enough that, if he should have set up one only bishop in that seat of perdition, and left all the rest in that simplicity wherein God had appointed them, that his eldest son should neither have had any way to get into that; and, when he had gotten it, yet, being as it were an owl amongst a sort of birds, should have been quickly discovered.

[¹ Μαντειῶν γοῦν δίχα καὶ χρησμῶν, οὐδὲ μέχρις ὄνυχος, ὡς εἰπεῖν, τολμᾶν τι κινεῖν οἷός τε ἦν. οὐ χάριν καὶ τῷ καθ' ἡμῶν σφοδρότερον ἢ οἱ πρόσθεν καὶ πυκνότερον ἐπετίθετο διωγμῶ· νεῶς τε κατὰ πᾶσαν πόλιν ἐγείρειν, καὶ τὰ χρόνον μήκει καθηρημένα τεμένη, διὰ σπουδῆς ἀνανεοῦσθαι προστάττων· ἱερέας τε εἰδώλων κατὰ πάντα τόπον καὶ πόλιν· καὶ ἐπὶ τούτων ἐκάστης ἐπαρχίας ἀρχιερέα, τῶν ἐν πολιτείαις ἕνα γέ τινα τὸν μάλιστα ἐμφανῶς διὰ πάσης ἐμπρέψαντα λειτουργίας, μετὰ στρατιωτικοῦ στίφους καὶ δορυφορίας ἐκτάσσω· κ. τ. λ.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. VIII. cap. xiv. p. 254.]

[² Manner, Def. B.][³ Make end, Def. B.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

And I also leave it to the judgment of the learned and indifferent reader, to consider by that which I have said before, how untrue all this is that you here affirm (I speak of these degrees and offices as they be now used in this church of England); if there be any difference, it is because they have not so large and ample jurisdiction and authority now as they had then.

Satan worketh by sundry means, and spareth no fetches to bring to pass his purpose. Under the pretence of zeal, he hath engendered sects and schisms; under the title of purity and perfection, he hath brought in heresy; under the cloke of simplicity, he hath spread abroad many kinds of idolatry and superstition; under the shadow of humility, he hath covered intolerable ambition and marvellous arrogancy; and, whatsoever he bringeth to pass, commonly he doth it under the colour of virtue, and of that which is good; and therefore I think that even under the names and titles of lawful degrees and calling he hath established unlawful authority; but neither is true zeal, purity, perfection, simplicity, humility, nor yet lawful degrees and callings, therefore to be condemned. Vitia (as Cyprian saith) *vicina sunt virtutibus*⁴: “Vices be very nigh unto virtues;” and the one laboureth to imitate the other; but we must not therefore the less esteem of virtue, but rather learn prudently to discern what is the difference betwixt the one and the other. If we have not learned this lesson, what state in the commonwealth, what office, what degree of person, nay, what kind of government, shall we allow? It is the greatest folly in the world to condemn the thing itself because of the abuse.

The subtlety of Satan in counterfeiting godliness must not prejudice that which is true.

Discretion is very necessary.

[⁴ The editor has not discovered this sentiment in Cyprian: it is, however, to be found almost literally in Augustine. Thus: ...omnibus virtutibus non solum sunt vitia...contraria...verum etiam vicina quodam modo &c.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Contr. Julian. Pelag. Lib. iv. cap. iii. 20. Tom. X. col. 595.]

Chapter v. The Twenty-sixth Division.

T. C. Page 98, Sect. 3.

A proper caveat.

But I have done; only this I admonish the reader, that I do not allow of all those things which I before alleged in the comparison between our archbishops and the archbishops of old time, or our bishops and theirs. Only my intent is to shew that, although there were corruptions, yet in respect of ours they be much more tolerable, and¹ that it might appear how small cause there is that they should allege their examples, to confirm the archbishops and bishops that now are.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You do well to work surely; for now shall no man take any great advantage of your words; howbeit it had been courteously done to have let us understand what you allow of this you have written, and what you allow not. For, in leaving the matter so rawly, you will make us suspect that you have spoken you know not what.

Other things concerning the offices and authority of our clergy, of inequality of degrees amongst ministers, &c., dispersed in other places of the Answer.

Chapter vi. The First Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 75, Sect. ult.

Some civil offices meet for ministers².

Read more at large hereof in the second part².

Concerning the offices of an high commissioner and justice of peace, how necessarily they be committed to some of the best and wisest of the clergy, what vice by them is bridled, what inconvenience met with, what necessary discipline used, those know that be wise, and have experience in public affairs and government. There is no word of God to prove why these offices may not concur in one man. But it is the commission that troubleth these men; as for peace they are at defiance with it.

[¹ And is repeated, Repl. 1.]

[² These marginal notes are inserted from Answ. 2.]

T. C. Page 98, Sect. 4.

Concerning the offices of commissionership, and how unmeet it is that ministers of the word should exercise them, and how that the word of God doth not permit any such confusion of offices, there shall be by God's grace spoken of it afterward.

JO. WHITGIFT.

And, until that "afterward" be performed will I also defer that which is further to be said in this matter.

Chapter vi. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 76, Sect. 1, 2, 3, and
Page 77, Sect. 1.

To be short, they say that all these offices be plainly in God's word forbidden, and they allege Matt. xxiii., Luke xxii., 1 Cor. iv., 1 Pet. v. The places of Matthew and Luke be answered before⁴. Christ beateth down Tract. i.³ ambition, and pride, and desire of bearing rule, as he did before, when he said, "Be ye not called Rabbi," and, "Call no man father," "Be not called doctors;" he doth not condemn the names, but the ambition of the mind.

In the 1 Cor. iv., it is thus written: "Let a man thus think of us as of the ministers of Christ, &c." The ministers of the word indeed are not to be esteemed as gods, but as the ministers of God. Some among the Corinthians gloried in their ministers, and attributed too much unto them. Hereof came these factions: "I hold of Paul, I of Apollo, &c." This teacheth your adherents and disciples not to attribute too much to you, and such as you are, or any other minister of God's word. It maketh nothing against the names or authorities either of archbishop, lord bishop, or any other that you have named, who be the ministers of Christ, and ought so to be esteemed.

The place of St Peter, cap. v., is this: "Feed the flock of God, &c., not as though you were lords over the flock, &c." Peter here condemneth haughtiness, contempt, and tyranny of pastors towards their flocks; he doth not take away lawful government. The pastor hath rule and superiority over his flock, but it must not be tyrannical.

[³ This marginal reference is not in Answ.]

[⁴ See Vol. I. pages 148, &c.]

These be but very slender proofs that the names and offices of archbishops, lord bishops, &c., be plainly forbidden by the word of God.

Surely you had thought that no man would have ever¹ taken pains to examine your margent.

T. C. Page 98, Sect. ult.

To your answer also unto the places of St Matthew and Luke the reply is made before. The place of the fourth of the first to the Corinthians is well alleged; for it teacheth a moderate estimation of the ministers, and a mean between the contempt and excessive estimation; neither can there be any readier way to breed that disorder which was amongst the Corinthians, as to say, I hold of such a one, and I of such a one, and I of such another, than to set up certain ministers in so high titles and great shew of worldly honour; for so cometh it to pass that the people will say, "I will believe my lord, and my lord archbishop, whatsoever our parson say; for they be wise men and learned;" as we see it came to pass amongst the Corinthians. For the false apostles, because they had a shew and outward pomp of speech, they carried away the people. For, although St Paul saith that some said, "I hold of Paul, I hold of Apollo, I of Cephas," yet, ^{1 Cor. iv. 6.2} as it appeareth in his fourth chapter, they held one of this brave eloquent teacher, and³ another of that. For he translated these speeches unto him and his fellows by a figure. All that rule is tyrannical which is not lawful, and is more than it ought to be. And therefore the place of St Peter is fitly alleged; whereof also I have spoken something before.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The Corinthians did not burst⁴ out into these factions and parts-taking in respect of any title or office committed to any of their preachers; but it was a partial affection that they had towards their teachers in preferring them (for their supposed virtue and learning) before other of whom they had not conceived so good an opinion. A more lively example whereof cannot be than the dissension that is at this day; wherein some of your fautors, forgetting all modesty, do so greatly magnify you and your companions, that nothing may be heard that is spoken to the contrary; nay, in comparison, all other men be flatterers, worldlings, unlearned, dolts, and

[¹ Ever have, Answ.]

[² This reference is inserted from Repl. 2; which reads in the text as it appeareth in another place.]

[³ And is not in Repl. 1 or 2.]

[⁴ Brust, Editt.]

asses. So do some sort of men extol you, and contemn other: so did the Corinthians extol and magnify their false prophets, and deprave the true preachers. Wherefore, to take away this partial affection and judgment, the apostle saith, Sic nos æstimet homo, &c.: "Let a man so esteem of us as of the ministers of Christ, &c." You will not, I am sure, acknowledge that at this time among the Corinthians there was any such difference of titles or degrees of superiority. Wherefore you cannot (speaking as you think) say that the apostle in this place meaneth any such matter. But well you wot that these affections (which I have spoken of) were rife among them; and therefore it is most certain that the apostle laboureth for the suppression of them. So that the interpretation, that I have given of this place in mine Answer, is true; neither have you refelled it.

The rule that a bishop hath over other ministers in his diocese is "lawful," neither is it such "tyrannical rule" as the word κατακυριεύοντες (used by St Peter, and spoken of before⁵) doth signify, that is, to rule with oppression; and therefore the place is unaptly alleged⁶.

Chapter vi. The Third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 77, Sect. 1.

I am of Hemingius' opinion in this point, that I think this your assertion smelleth of plain anabaptism⁷.

T. C. Page 99, Sect. 1.

You are, you say, of Hemingius' mind, and think that this opinion smelleth of anabaptism. I have shewed how you have depraved and corrupted Hemingius, and desire you to shew some better reason of your opinion. αὐτὸς ἐφ' ἣ will not suffice us.

JO. WHITGIFT.

And I have shewed how untruly you have reported of me. Hemingius alloweth superiority, and degrees of dignity among the ministers: he condemneth your confused equality, and calleth it anabaptistical. Moreover, if you well mark the beginnings and proceedings of the anabaptists, you shall perceive that they first began with the ministry in the self-same manner and form that you now do.

[⁵ See Vol. I. pages 163, &c.]

[⁶ Cartwright calls Whitgift's argument in this division "frivolous," and adds, "I say to all this beside wandering and unlikely slanders there is not a word."—Sec. Repl. pp. 660, 1.]

[⁷ See before, pages 326, 7.]

Chapter vi. The Fourth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 77, Sect. 1.

Anabaptism
feared¹.

And surely, if you had once made an equality (such as you fancy) among the clergy, it would not be long or you attempted the same among the laity. Let them take heed : *Tunc tua res agitur, &c.*²

T. C. Page 99, Sect. 1, 2, 3.

You say that, if we had once obtained equality amongst the clergy, we would attempt it in the laity.

In what star do you see that, M. Doctor ? Moses saith ^{Deut. xviii. 22,3} that, "if a man speak of a thing to come, and it come not to pass as he hath spoken, that that man is a false prophet;" if your prophecy come not to pass, you know your judgment already out of Moses.

The Pharisees, when our Saviour Christ inveighed against ^{Luke xxiii. 2,3} their ambition, accused him that he was no friend to Cæsar, and went about to discredit him with the civil magistrate : you shall apply it yourself : you will needs make the archbishop, &c., neighbours unto the civil magistrates ; and yet they almost dwell as far asunder as Rome and Jerusalem, and as Sion and St Peter's church there ; so that the house of the archbishop may be burnt stick and stone, when not so much as the smoke shall approach the house of the civil magistrate.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Equality of ministers will pull on the equality of other estates.

In the "star" that is in your forehead, in the accustomed practices of the anabaptists, in the places of scripture alleged by the Admonition for the equality of all ministers, which very same the anabaptists do also use against the civil magistrate⁴. To be short, I see it in your own words, where you say that "the government of the commonwealth must be framed according to the government of the church ;" and what kind of government you would have in the church who knoweth not ? I do not take upon me to prophesy, but ex

Pag. 144.
Sect. 1.

[¹ Anabaptism to be feared, Answ. 2.] [² Horat. Epist. Lib. i. xviii. 84.]

[³ The last reference and the verse of the former are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁴ "... let the reader judge... what a cunning star-gazer the D. is, which saw in the star of my forehead that the Admonition intended the overthrow of the civil magistrate."—Sec. Repl. p. 661.]

antecedentibus colligo consequentia: "I gather that we shall have storms, by the black clouds." You are not Christ; neither is your cause like unto his; and therefore you make a very unequal comparison. To whom the name of "Pharisee" doth most aptly agree is shewed in my Answer to the Admonition.

The self-same reasons overthrow the civil magistrate that overthroweth the ecclesiastical. And therefore the fire kindled against the one must needs be very dangerous for the other.

Chapter vi. The Fifth Division

Admonition⁵.

Instead of the⁶ seniors in ^revery church, the pope hath brought in, and yet we⁷ maintain the lordship of one man over sundry churches, yea, over many shires⁸.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 116, Sect. 1, 2.

I have proved before, in my answer to your 13. and 14. reason, that this lordship of one man (as you term it), but indeed lawful jurisdiction over sundry churches, was not the invention of any pope, but of great antiquity in the church of Christ, allowed by that famous council of Nice, and practised since of most godly and learned fathers⁹.

In the 9. canon Concil. Antioch., it is thus written: *Per singulas regiones episcopus convenit nosse metropolitani episcopum sollicitudinem totius provinciae gerere, propter quod ad metropolim omnes undique qui negotia videntur habere, concurrant, unde placuit eum et honore præcellere, et nihil amplius præter eum cæteros episcopos agere, secundum antiquam a patribus nostris regulam constitutam, nisi ea tantum, quæ ad suam diæcesim pertinent, &c.*¹¹: "It behoveth the bishops in every country to know Concil.

Antio.¹⁰
One minister above the rest¹⁰.

[⁵ Here again, as Cartwright quits the order of the Answer in his Reply, Whitgift follows him. This sentence of the Admonition, with a paragraph of the Answer in reply, here omitted, will occur below, Tract. XVII. chap. i. Div. 7.]

[⁶ These, Adm. and Answ.]

[⁷ We yet, Adm.]

[⁸ Over many churches, yea, over sundry shires, Adm.]

[⁹ See before, pages 118, &c.]

[¹⁰ These marginal notes are inserted from Answ. 2.]

[¹¹ Concil. Antioch. can. 9. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 565. See before, page 146, note 1.]

their metropolitan bishop to have care over the whole province; and therefore all such as have any business must come to their metropolitan city; wherefore it pleaseth this council that he also excel in honour, and that the other bishops do nothing without him, according to the ancient rule prescribed by our fore-fathers, but those things only which pertain to his own diocese, &c." This council was about the year of our Lord 345.

T. C. Page 99, Sect. 4, 5.

In the 116. page for the authority of the archbishop is alleged the 9. canon of the council of Antioch, which I have before alleged to prove how far different the authority of the metropolitan in those times was from that which is now. For there the council sheweth that every bishop in his diocese hath the ordering of all the matters¹ within the circuit thereof, and therefore the meaning of the council to be that, if there be any affairs that touch the whole church in any land, that the bishops should do nothing without making the metropolitan privy; as also the metropolitan might do nothing without making the other bishops a council of that which he attempted; which M. Doctor doth clean leave out.

And, if this authority, which the council giveth to the metropolitan, being nothing so excessive as the authority of our metropolitans now, had not been over much, or had been justifiable, what needed men father this canon (which was ordained in this council) of the apostles; for the seeking falsely of the name of the apostles to give credit unto this canon doth carry with it a note of evil and of shame, which they would have covered as it were with the garment of the apostles' authority.

JO. WHITGIFT.

There is no canon that maketh more directly against you than this doth; all the shifts that you have to avoid it I have answered before. There is as great "authority" given to the metropolitan in that canon as now he either useth or requireth. For every bishop, observing the laws of the realm and of the church, hath the ordering of all matters within his diocese; and the metropolitan in this church may attempt no new thing, or any matter of great importance, not already by law established, though he have the consent of all the bishops; so far is he from having authority to do any such thing without their consent.

That canon of the apostles is repeated and confirmed in this council; as divers canons of the council of Nice are in like manner repeated and confirmed by divers councils following. This is so far from discrediting that canon with wise men, that it rather addeth great authority unto it; but you keep your old wont, in discrediting the authority which you cannot answer.

[¹ All matters, Repl. 2.]

Chapter vi. The Sixth Division.

Admonition.

Now then, if you will restore the church to his ancient officers, this you must do. Instead of an archbishop, or lord bishop, you must make

* 2 Cor. x. 7. ^xequality of ministers.

Coloss. i. 1.

Phil. i. 1.²

1 Thess. i. 1.³

Answer to the Admonition, Page 123.

I have proved before that as well the name as office of an archbishop is both most ancient, and also most necessary in the church of Christ; and that this equality of ministers, which you require, is both flatly against the scriptures, and all ancient authority of councils and learned men, and the example of all churches, even from Christ's time; as more plainly appeareth by these words of M. Bucer in his book *De regno Christi: Jam ex perpetua ecclesiarum observatione, ab ipsis jam apostolis videmus, visum et hoc esse Spiritui sancto, ut inter presbyteros, quibus ecclesiarum procuratio potissimum est commissa, unus ecclesiarum et totius sacri ministerii curam gerat singularem; eaque cura et solitudine cunctis præeat aliis. Qua de causa episcopi nomen hujusmodi summis ecclesiarum curatoribus est peculiariter attributum: &c.*⁴ "Now we see by the perpetual observation of the churches, even from the apostles themselves, that it hath pleased the Holy Ghost that, amongst the ministers to whom the government of the church especially is committed, one should have the chief care both of the churches, and of the whole ministry, and that he should go before all other in that care and diligence; for the which cause the name of a

Equality of ministers flat against the scriptures².

Bucer.

One government among ministers³.

[² These last two references are inserted from Adm. They are not in the original edition of the Admonition.]

[³ These marginal notes are introduced from Answ. 2.]

[⁴ M. Bucer. De Regno Christi Libr. II. Basil. 1557. Lib. II. cap. xii. p. 98. See before, page 231, note 6.]

bishop is peculiarly given to such chief governors of churches, &c."

[The same Bucer, upon the iv. to the Ephe., saith thus: "Paul in the Acts calleth the same men bishops and ministers, when he called for the ministers of Ephesus to Miletum; yet, because one among them did rule, and had the chief care of the church, the name of a bishop did properly belong unto him: neither was his age always considered, so that he were virtuous and learned; as we have an example in Timothy being a young man¹."]²

Furthermore I have declared that it engendereth schisms, factions, and contentions in the church, and bringeth in a mere confusion, and is a branch of anabaptism.

T. C. Page 99, Sect. 6, 7.

And in the hundred twenty and three page, to that which M. Bucer saith, that in the churches there hath been one which hath been chief over the rest of the ministers; if he mean one chief in every particular church, or one chief over the ministers of divers churches meeting at one synod, and chief for the time, and for such respects as I have before shewed, then I am of that mind which he is; and, if he mean any other chief, or after any other sort, I deny that any such chieftly was from the apostles' times, or that any such chieftly pleaseth the Holy Ghost; whereof I have before shewed the proofs.

And, whereas M. Bucer seemeth to allow that the name of a bishop, which the Holy Ghost expressly giveth to all the ministers of the word indifferently, was appropriated to certain chief governors of the church, I have before shewed by divers reasons how that was not done without great presumption and manifest danger, and in the end great hurt to the church.

JO. WHITGIFT.

M. Bucer's words are plain: there is no cause why you should make such "ifs," but only that you may be thought able to say something, how contrary to truth and reason soever it be. Your own bare denial of M. Bucer's judgment will weigh little with any wise or learned man, considering what difference there is betwixt your knowledge and his, the trial that hath been of him and the trial that hath been of you, his experience and yours. But what should I compare together things so unlike? That M. Bucer is directly against you in this assertion of yours, it doth not appear only in these words of his, but in others also, which he speaketh to the like effect, as in the iv. to the Eph.; as I have before declared. And again, upon the same chapter he saith: "The third part of discipline is obedience, which is first to be rendered of all to the bishop and minister, then of every clerk to those that be in degree above him, and to such as may help him to the well executing of his ministry. Last of all, of bishops to synods, and to their metropolitan bishops, and to all other, to whom a more ample charge of the churches is committed³." And, in the same commentaries, after that he hath proved, by sundry examples and apt reasons, that this superiority among ecclesiastical persons is convenient and profitable, and shewed that these degrees in the church, bishop, archbishop, metropolitan, primate, patriarch, be not only most ancient, but also necessary, he concludeth on this sort: "Because it is necessary that every one of the clergy should have their rulers and governors, the authority, power, vigilancy, and severity of bishops, archdeacons, and all other, by what name soever they be called (to whom any portion of keeping and governing the clergy is committed), should or ought to be restored, lest there be any in this order out of rule, and without government⁴." How think you now of M. Bucer's judgment? Is it not directly against you? be not his words plain⁵?

[¹ Id. Prælect. in Epist. ad Ephes. Basil. 1562. cap. iv. p. 107. See before, page 231, note 7.]

[² This paragraph is inserted from Answ. 2.]

Bucer in 4.
Ephc.

Idem.

Chapter vi. The Seventh Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 124, Sect. 1.⁶

Your places quoted in the margent to prove that there ought to be an equality of ministers sound nothing that way. 2 Cor. x. vers. 7, these be the words of the apostle: "Look ye on things after the appearance? If any trust in himself that he is Christ's, let him consider

Scriptures wrested to prove equality of ministers.

[³ Id. ibid. p. 129. See before, page 331, note 1.]

[⁴ Id. ibid. p. 133. See before, page 331, note 2.]

[⁵ Cartwright persists that "M. Bucer is wholly for us," and says, "that, if there be any difference here (touching these offices) between us and M. Bucer, it is only that, where we affirm it good that the presidentship should be chosen at every meeting, as that which cometh nearer the apostles' example, and more safe against tyranny, M. Bucer may seem to make it a standing and continual office settled in one man."—Sec. Repl. p. 662.]

[⁶ This paragraph is placed, in Answ., after that in page 406.]

this again of himself, that, as he is Christ's, even so are we Christ's." How conclude you of these words your equality? I promise you, it passeth my cunning to wring out of them any such sense: rather the contrary may be gathered out of the words following, which be these: "For though I should boast somewhat more of our authority, which the Lord &c., I should have no shame." M. Calvin expounding these words saith on this sort: "It was for modesty that he joined himself to their number, whom he did far excel; and yet he would not be so modest but that he would keep his authority safe; therefore he addeth that he spake less than of right he might have done. For he was not of the common sort of ministers, but one of the chief among the apostles; and therefore he saith, If I boast more, I need not be ashamed, for I have good cause¹." And a little after: *Quamvis enim commune sit omnibus verbi ministris idemque officium, sunt tamen honoris gradus*²: "Although the self-same office be common to all the ministers of the word, yet there be³ degrees of honour."

Calvin.

Degrees of honour in the ministry.

Thus you see Calvin far otherwise to gather of this place than you do.

T. C. Page 100, Sect. 1.

And, if M. Doctor delight thus to oppose men's authority to the authority of the Holy Ghost, and to the reasons which are grounded out of the scripture, M. Calvin doth openly mislike of the making of that name proper and peculiar to certain, which the Holy Ghost maketh common to more.

Here he defendeth not the Admonition, but shifteth it off by cavilling.

And, where as of M. Calvin's words which saith that "there be degrees of honour in the ministry," M. Doctor would gather an archbishop, if he had understood that an apostle is above an evangelist, an evangelist above a pastor, a pastor above a doctor, and he above an elder that ruleth only, he needed never have⁴ gone to the popish hierarchy to seek his diversities of degrees, which he might have found in St Paul. And, whereas upon M. Calvin's words, which saith that Paul was "one of the chief amongst the apostles," he would seem to conclude an archbishop amongst the bishops, he

[¹ Modestiae fuit quod se adjunxit eorum numero, quos longe antecellebat: neque tamen ita modestus esse voluit, quin suam auctoritatem salvam retineret: ideo addit, minus dixisse, quam jure suo potuerit. neque enim erat ex vulgari ordine ministrorum, sed eximius etiam inter apostolos. Dicit ergo, Etiam si amplius gloriari, non pudeam: erit enim justa materia.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. 11. ad Corinth. cap. x. 8. Tom. VII. p. 261.]

[² Id. ibid.]

[³ Is, Answ. and Def. A.]

[⁴ Never to have, Repl. 2.]

should have remembered that St Paul's chiefly amongst the apostles consisted, not in having any authority or dominion over the rest, but in labouring and suffering more than the rest, and in gifts more excellent than the rest.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I do not "oppose men's authority to the authority of the Holy Ghost, and to the reasons which are grounded out of the scripture;" but I oppose them to your authority, and to your reasons, who spurn against that order which the Holy Ghost hath placed in the church, and most shamefully abuse the scripture to maintain your errors: an example whereof is this present text alleged by the Admonition, which you pass over in silence, condemning thereby their lewdness in abusing the same. It is you and yours that abuse the name and authority of the Holy Ghost: it is you that wring and wrest the scriptures intolerably: it is you that falsify authorities of learned men, and corruptly allege them: it is you, I say, that deprave and discredit such writers as have been and be notable instruments in the church of Christ; and all this you do to maintain your erroneous opinions and false doctrine, wherewith you endeavour to subvert this church of England.

M. Calvin's words be plain, and they directly overthrow your equality of ministers, and shew the fondness of the Admonition in alleging that place of scripture to prove any such equality. M. Calvin's words be these: Quamvis commune sit omnibus verbi ministris idemque officium, sunt tamen honoris gradus: "Although the self-same office be common to all the ministers of the word, yet there are degrees of honour." Which words disprove the equality of ministers by the Admonition affirmed, and confirmed with this portion of scripture by M. Calvin here interpreted, that is, 2 Cor. x. verse 7.

If there were degrees of honour in the apostles' time among those which had idem officium: "the self-same office," as M. Calvin affirmeth, why should there not be so now likewise? But will you see how unlike you are unto yourself, even in these few lines? first you say that M. Calvin's meaning is "that an apostle is above an evangelist, an evangelist is above a pastor, &c.," and by and by after you confess that there was "chiefly even among the apostles, but it consisted in labouring and suffering more than the rest, and in gifts more excellent than the rest."

T. C. contrary to himself.

To omit these contrarieties of yours, into the which the plainness of Master Calvin's words hath driven you, this inequality that you confess to have been in these offices (which notwithstanding you speak of your own head, without any warrant of God's word) argueth that there may be superiority among the ministers of the church. And the degrees of honour that you acknowledge to have been among the apostles quite casteth down your confused equality. As for your salving the matter in saying that "this chieftly among the apostles consisted not in having any superiority above the rest, but in labouring, &c.;" it may please unskilful persons, but it will not satisfy men of discretion and wisdom. For it is to be thought that every one of the apostles laboured in their calling to the uttermost of their powers, that they suffered whatsoever God laid upon them, that they had all gifts most abundantly necessary for their functions. Wherefore in all these things there was summa æqualitas, and no man sought such pre-eminence, or received it being offered unto him; but according to their own doctrine every one thought of another better than of himself. Wherefore it could not be for this respect, but it was for order and policy to avoid confusion.

I have told you before why you labour so much to have honour and dignity distributed according to the excellency of gifts; for then you persuade yourself that the chieftly would light on your own neck; but you may peradventure be deceived.

Chapter vi. The Eighth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 123, towards the end¹.

Why the Admonitors desire equality?

And now I add, that you desire this equality, not because you would not rule (for it is manifest that you seek it most ambitiously in your manner), but because you contemn and disdain to be ruled, and to be in subjection. Indeed your meaning is (as I said before) to rule and not to be ruled, to do what you list in your several cures, without controlment of prince, bishop, or any other. And therefore, pretending equality, most disorderly you seek dominion. I speak that I know by experience in some of you.

[¹ See before, page 403, note 6.]

[² This marginal note is not in Answ.]

T. C. Page 100, Sect. 2, 3.

Now, whereas he saith that we desire to pull the rule from others, that the rule might be in our hands, and we might do what we list, and that we seek to withdraw ourselves from controlment of prince and bishop, and all; first, he may learn, if he will, that we desire no other authority than that which is to the edifying of the church, and which is grounded of the word of God; which if any minister shall abuse to his gain or ambition, then he ought to abide not only the controlment of the other ministers, yea, of the brethren, but also further the punishment of the magistrates, according to the quantity of the fault.

And, seeing you charge the brethren so sore, you must be put in remembrance that this unreasonable authority over the rest of the ministers and clergy came to the bishops and archbishops, when as the pope did exempt his shavelings from the obedience, subjection, and jurisdiction of princes². Now therefore that we be ready to give that subjection unto the prince, and offer ourselves to the prince's correction in things wherein we shall do amiss, do you think it an unreasonable thing that we desire to be disburdened of the bishops' and archbishops' yoke, which the pope hath laid upon our necks?

An untruth; for the lawful authority of bishops and archbishops was long before.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Your answer maketh the matter more suspicious; for this authority you speak of, which you say "is to the edifying of the church, and grounded of the word of God," is as it pleaseth you to interpret it. For whatsoever you fancy, and whatsoever authority you usurp, shall have the same pretence; and, if the prince seek to restrain you, or to break your will, you and your seniors will excommunicate her if she be of your parish. Furthermore, the greatest pre-eminence she can have is to be one of your seigniorie; and then must M. Pastor be the chief, and so in authority above the prince, and consequently a pope; but of this more in due place shall be spoken.

Excessive authority is sought under pretence of equality.

This authority, which the bishops and archbishops now exercise, came first from the apostolical church, then from the example of the primitive church for the space of five hundred years after the apostles' time; thirdly, from the councils of Nice, Antioch, Constantinople, and all the best and purest councils that ever were; and, last of all, from the authority of the prince, and by the consent of this whole church and realm of England, and therefore not from the pope, who hath rather diminished it (by taking all to himself) than in any respect increased it. Wherefore you also, in exempting yourself from the authority and jurisdiction of the archbishop and bishop, resist God in his ministers, the prince in her officers, and the laws of the church and realm in their executors. And, as for your protested obedience, it is so enwrapped with conditions and provisos (as in other places of your book more plainly appeareth), that when it should come to the trial (if your platform were builded) it would prove as little as ever the popish bishops' was, in their greatest pride.

The authority of bishops and archbishops came not from the pope.

[² Of the princes, Repl. 1 and 2.]

Chapter vi. The Ninth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 124, Sect. 2.

The place in the first to the Coloss. vers. 1, is this: "Paul an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God, and Timotheus our brother." Surely your mind was not of equality (I think) when you quoted these places to prove it. But it is your usual manner without all discretion and judgment to dally and play with the scriptures. For what sequel is there in this reason: Paul calleth Timothy brother; ergo, in all respects there must be equality? As though there were not² distinction of degrees even among brethren.

A weak
proof¹.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Magis mutus quam piscis, and by his silence the oversight confessed.

Chapter vi. The Tenth Division.

Admonition.

[The fourteenth.

Their pontifical (which is annexed to the book of common prayer, and whereunto subscribing to the articles we must subscribe also), whereby they consecrate bishops, make ministers and deacons, is nothing else ⁸ but a thing word for word drawn out of the pope's pontifical, wherein he sheweth himself to be antichrist most lively]³.

And, ⁸ as the names of archbishops, archdeacons, lord bishops, chancellors, &c., are drawn out of the pope's shop, together with their offices, so the government which they use by the life of the pope, which is the canon law, is antichristian and devilish, and contrary to the scriptures.

⁸ Luke xxii.
25, 26.
1 Pet. v. 3, 4, 5.
Matth. xx.
25, 26.
Mat. xxiii.
8, 11, 12.
Gal. ii. 6.
Hebr. v. 4.
Luke xvi.
25.
Ezek.
xxiv. 4.
2 Cor. i. 24.

[¹ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[² No, Answ. 2.]

[³ Here again Cartwright takes up quite a different part of Whitgift's Answer. This portion of Admonition and that below of Answer between the brackets are inserted from Answ.]

Answer to the Admonition, Page 208, Sect. 1.

[Now that you have spit out all your poison against the communion book, and poured down all your reasons, you come to the "pontifical," as you term it, that is, the book containing the order and manner of making of ministers, &c.: "this book," you say, "is word for word drawn out of the pope's pontifical, &c." Surely, if those things which were good in the pope's pontifical, and either contained in the scripture, or well used before in the ancient church, or well prescribed by general councils, be also in our pontifical, our pontifical is never the worse for having of them; for, if the thing itself be good and profitable, it forceth not from whom it was taken, or of whom it was used, so that now it be rightly used. But it is most false and untrue that the book of ordering ministers and deacons, &c., now used, is "word for word drawn out of the pope's pontifical," being almost in no point correspondent to the same; as you might have seen, if you had compared them together. But ignorance and rashness drives you into many errors.]

The pope's pontifical not followed in the church.

Both of the names and also of the offices of archbishops, archdeacons, lord bishops, &c., I have spoken before sufficiently, and fully answered those⁴ places quoted in this margent, saving the ii. to the Galat. the v. to the Hebrews, Ezek. xxxiv., 2 Cor. i.; for these places have been found out since, and thought meet now to be alleged; but how discreetly by examination it will appear. The words of the apostle to the Galat. ii. verse 6 be these: "And of them which seemed to be great I was not taught (what they were in time passed, it maketh no matter to me, God accepteth no man's person); nevertheless they that are the chief did communicate nothing with me." The apostle in these words doth declare that he received not the gospel which he preached of men, no, not of the apostles, but of Jesus Christ, and that the gospel preached by him ought to be no less credited than the gospel preached by them. So that in those words he declareth that the truth of the doctrine doth not depend of any man's person. He wrested.

Scriptures

[⁴ These, Answ.]

speaketh nothing against superiority, quoad ordinem: “concerning order,” but doth rather acknowledge it; for he saith, “they that are the chief, &c.” But it is true that Master Calvin noteth on this place: *Hic non est certamen ambitionis, quia nequaquam de personis agitur*¹: “The contention is not for ambition, for it is not understood of the persons.” Now, I pray you, consider this argument: Paul received the gospel that he preached, not of the apostles, but of Christ; or: The gospel preached by Paul is equivalent with the gospel preached by other of the apostles; therefore “the names of archbishops, archdeacons, &c. are drawn out of the pope’s shop together with their offices;” or this: Paul saith that they that were the chief did communicate nothing with him; ergo, “the names and offices of archbishops be taken out of the pope’s shop.”

T. C. Page 100, Sect. 4.

This is an untruth; for it is only proved that the place is not against the archbishop, &c. Here you rashly accuse the translation of the bible printed at Geneva, and others.

And in the 207. page unto the midst of the 214. page, this matter is again handled; where first M. Doctor would draw the place of Galatians the second to prove an archbishop, and that by a false translation; for οἱ δοκοῦντες, which is, “they that seemed or appeared,” he hath translated “they that are the chief;” and, although the place of the Galatians may be thought of some not so pregnant, nor so full against the archbishop, yet all must needs confess that it maketh more against him, than for him. For St Paul’s purpose is to prove there that he was not inferior to any of the apostles; and bringeth one argument thereof, that he had not his gospel from them, but from Christ immediately; and therefore, if the apostles that were esteemed most of, and supposed by the Galatians and others to be the chief, had no superiority over St Paul, but were equal with him, it followeth that there was none that had rule over the rest. And, if there needed no one of the apostles to be ruler over the rest, there seemeth to be no need that one bishop should rule over the rest.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I have set down the words of the apostle as they be translated in the English bible printed at Geneva², not altering one tittle; and therefore, if there be any falsehood in the translation, it is in that bible, not in me. How truly you have translated οἱ δοκοῦντες, saying it signifieth “they that οἱ δοκοῦντες translated.

[¹ Calvin, Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. ad Galat. cap. ii. 6. Tom. VII. p. 286.]

[² See The Bible transl. according to the Ebrew and Greeke, Lond. 1578. Galat. chap. ii. v. 6. fol. 82.]

seemed or appeared," let the reader judge after he hath considered these words of M. Beza upon the same words³, ad Galat. ii. verse 2: "With those that are of reputation: τοῖς ^{Beza.} δοκοῦσι, that is, τοῖς εὐδοκιμοῦσι, 'those which are well-esteemed of,' the contrary whereof are οἱ ἀδοξοῦντες, 'they which are without renown or estimation:' the common translation hath 'which seemed to be something,' τοῖς δοκοῦσι εἶναι τι; which is contrary to all our books, and unto Jerome's interpretation also. For thus he writeth, which thing Erasmus also doth well note: 'I did very carefully search,' saith he, 'what that should be that he said, qui videbantur: they which seemed. But he hath taken away all doubt in that he addeth, Qui videbantur esse columnæ: they which were accounted to be pillars.' Hitherto Hierome; whereby he doth evidently declare that he had not read in this place εἶναι τι; but in such sort, notwithstanding, that he seemeth not to have known τοὺς δοκοῦντας to have been called of the Grecians absolutely τοὺς εὐδοκιμοῦντας, that is, 'those who are of great estimation with all men.' And this ignorance of the Greek tongue, as I think, was the cause that the old interpreter (being more bolder than Hierome) did add *aliquid esse*⁴." And Erasmus, in his annotations upon the same place, agreeth with M. Beza herein: "δοκοῦντες, ... absolute dicuntur Græcis ^{Erasmus.} *qui magnæ sunt auctoritatis*⁵: "They which are of great authority are of the Grecians absolutely called δοκοῦντες." Budeus also saith that the apostle in this place taketh this ^{Budeus.} word δοκῶ for *ἐνδοξός εἰμι*⁶. And both M. Beza himself and

[³ Word, Def. A.]

[⁴ Cum iis qui sunt in pretio, τοῖς δοκοῦσι. id est τοῖς εὐδοκιμοῦσι. quibus opponuntur οἱ ἀδοξοῦντες. Vulg. Qui videbantur aliquid esse, τοῖς δοκοῦσιν εἶναι τι, contra omnium nostrorum codicum fidem, et repugnante etiam Hieronymi interpretatione. Sic enim scribit, (quod et recte expendit Eras.) Sollicitus, inquit, requirebam quidnam esset quod diceret, Qui videbantur: sed nunc me omni scrupulo liberavit, adjiciens, Qui videbantur columnæ esse. Hæc Hieronymus [Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Comm. Lib. 1. in Epist. ad Galat. cap. ii. Tom. IV. Pars 1. col. 241.], satis declarans se non legisse hoc in loco εἶναι τι. sed ita tamen ut non videatur cognovisse τοὺς δοκοῦντας a Græcis vocari absolute τοὺς εὐδοκιμοῦντας. i. quorum apud omnes præclara est existimatio. Eadem (ut opinor) Græci sermonis imperitia fecit ut vetus interpres, Hieronymo audacior, aliquid esse, adjiceret.—Nov. Test. cum Interp. et Annot. Th. Bezæ, H. Steph. 1565. Epist. ad Galat. cap. ii. v. 2. pp. 351, 2.]

[⁵ Erasm. Op. L. Bat. 1703-6. Adnot. in Epist. ad Galat. cap. ii. v. 2. Tom. VI. col. 805.]

[⁶ Est etiam δοκῶ τὸ ἐνδοξός γίνομαι, cui ἀδοξῶ opponitur, ... Apostolus hoc verbo usus est, ἐμοὶ γάρ οἱ δοκοῦντες οὐδὲν προσανέθεντο, mecum enim ii qui Erasmus translate it as it is in the Geneva bible. Wherefore here your cunning faileth you; and you had not well considered the matter before you entered this accusation of falsifying¹.

The true sense and meaning of this place to the Galat. I have set down in my Answer; and it is according to the interpretation of the best writers, justified by the words of M. Calvin there alleged, and not confuted by you. Wherefore the conclusion remaineth as it did.

That there was superiority among the apostles, ordinis et politix causa, I have shewed before.

This place to the Galatians is not brought in by me to prove the authority of the archbishop (although it might well be alleged to prove degrees of honour in the ministry), but it is quoted in the Admonition fondly and foolishly, to prove that the "names of archbishops, archdeacons, lord bishops, &c., are drawn out of the pope's shop, together with their offices." And of this dallying with the scriptures you speak not one word; for you care not how they be profaned, so it be for the maintenance of your own cause.

Chapter vi. The Eleventh Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 208, Sect. ult.

The words in the v. to the Hebrews, verse 4,² be these: "And no man taketh this³ honour to himself, but he that is called of God, as Aaron was⁴." The apostle here sheweth that Christ was a lawful priest, because he was thereunto called by God, as Aaron was. What is this to archbishops, &c.? This place teacheth that no man ought to intrude himself to any function, except he be thereunto called by God. But what maketh this against any lawful function or authority, or what conclusion call Weak arguments.

existimatione præditi erant, consilia non communicarunt.—G. Budæi Op. Basil. 1557. Comm. Ling. Græc. Tom. IV. col. 500.]

[¹ Cartwright still presses his notion of the meaning of οἱ δοκοῦντες, but adds, "Howbeit I confess that, if I had known that I had in this point to do with the Geneva, M. Beza's and Erasmus' translation, and Budies' authority, I would (for reverence of their learning) have used an easier word in dissenting."—Sec. Repl. p. 663.]

[² 4. verse, Answ.]

[³ His, Def. B.]

[⁴ As was Aaron, Answ.]

[⁵ Arguments very weak, Answ. 2.]

you this: Christ did not take upon⁶ him that office whereunto he was not called; or: No man must take upon him that whereunto he is not called; ergo, “archbishops, &c., and their offices came out of the pope’s shop”? you should first prove that which ought to be your minor.

T. C. Page 100, Sect. 4.

But that I run not back to that I have handled before, I will not here A cleanly shift.
so much urge the place, as I will not do also that of the Hebrews which followeth; and yet the argument is stronger than that M. Doctor could answer. For, if the writer to the Hebrews do prove our Saviour Christ’s vocation to be just and lawful, because his calling was contained in the Untrus.
scriptures, as appeareth in that⁷ 5. and 6. verse, then it followeth that the calling of the archbishop, which is not comprehended there, is neither just nor lawful. “For that no man (saith the apostle) taketh the⁸ honour unto himself but he that is called of God, &c.” But I say, having before sufficiently spoken of the reasons which overthrow the archbishop, I will let pass these and other places, answering only that which M. Doctor bringeth for the establishment of them.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is a cleanly and handsome shift to avoid the defence of these gross and unapt allegations of scriptures. I have answered the argument grounded upon the v. to the Hebrews, and required the proof of the minor, which is this, that archbishops, lord bishops, &c., intrude themselves into their offices without any lawful calling, which both they and you have omitted; and therefore I have answered sufficiently, until you have proved that which is by me denied. The Replier proveth not that which is denied.

It is not true that the apostle to the Hebrews “proveth the vocation of our Saviour Jesus Christ to be just and lawful, because his calling was contained in the scriptures;” he only sheweth by evident testimonies of the scriptures that Christ did not intrude himself, but was called of God. And, if you will have no man to execute any function in the church but him that hath such special and personal testimonies of the scriptures to shew for himself, I see not how any man can justify his calling. It is therefore sufficient if his calling be generally contained in the scripture; as all lawful and ordinary functions are, even the offices of archbishops and lord bishops, &c.

[⁶ Unto, Answ. and Def. A.]

[⁷ The, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ That, Repl. 2.]

Chapter vi. The Twelfth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 209, Sect. 1, 2, 3,
and Page 210, Sect. 1.

Scriptures
wrested¹.

In the xvi. of Luke, verse 25, it is thus written: "But Abraham said, Son, remember that thou in thy life-time receivest thy pleasures, and likewise Lazarus pains: now therefore is he comforted; and thou art tormented." The rich glutton in his life received pleasure, and therefore was after in hell tormented: Lazarus received pains, and after was comforted; therefore "archbishops, &c., and their offices come out of the pope's shop." These fellows neither care for major, minor, nor conclusion, so they say something, and vainly paint their margent with shamefully abusing the scriptures.

Abuse of offices condemned, not the offices.

The words of Ezek. chap. xxxiv. verse 4, be these: "The weak have ye not strengthened, the sick have ye not healed, neither have you bound up the broken, &c." In the which place the prophet speaketh against such kings, magistrates, and rulers, as despise the people of God, and use themselves cruelly towards them. This doth as well condemn kings and magistrates as it doth archbishops; although indeed it condemneth no office or superiority, but the abuse of the same, that is, the man abusing the office, and not the office itself.

In the 2 Cor. i. verse 24, the apostle speaketh thus unto them: "Not that we have dominion over your faith, but we are helpers of your joy; for by faith you stand." St Paul here saith that he hath no authority to alter true religion, or to rule over their consciences; but how proveth this that "archbishops, &c., came out of the pope's shop"? Paul saith that he had no power over the consciences of the Corinthians; therefore "archbishops, &c., and their offices were drawn out of the pope's shop." If you had been more studious when you were a sophister (if ever you were any), you would have learned better to frame an argument, and have had better judgment in the sequel of the same. If you had not troubled your margent with these quotations, you had less uttered your folly.

[¹ This marginal note is not in Answ.]

So much of the canon law as is contrary to the scriptures is antichristian and devilish; but there be divers canons in it very good and profitable, which may well be retained. Good laws may be borrowed even of Turks and heathenish idolaters; and why not of papists also? I have told you before, that the thing itself is to be considered, not the inventor: if it be good and profitable, it may be used, whosoever did invent it.

Canon laws not altogether condemned.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Not one word answered to all this.

Chapter vi. The Thirteenth Division.

Admonition².

And as safely may we by the warrant of God's word subscribe to allow the dominion of the pope universally to reign over the church of God, as of an archbishop over a³ whole province, or a lord bishop over⁴ a diocese, which containeth many shires and parishes. For the dominion that they exercise, the archbishop above them, and they above the rest of their brethren, is unlawful, and expressly forbidden by the word of God.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 210, Sect. 2.

In that you say that you "may as safely by the warrant of God's word subscribe to allow the dominion of the pope universally to reign over the church of God, as of an archbishop over an whole province, &c.;" you express but your heat; I suppose you think not so. Can the pope as well govern the whole church as the archbishop one province, and a lord bishop one diocese? Is one king as well able to govern the whole world as he may be to govern one kingdom? Or, because you can rule one parish well, can you therefore in like manner well govern twenty parishes? Surely an archbishop may well govern one province; but the pope can never well govern the whole church. And yet an archbishop hath not the charge of government over the whole province generally, but only in cases exempted, and therefore may do it more easily.

An archbishop may govern one province, but the pope not all the world.

[² This paragraph is placed in Answ. immediately after those printed above, page 408.]

[³ An, Adm. and Answ. 1.]

[⁴ A lordship over, Answ. 2.]

T. C. Page 100, Sect. 4.

He saith therefore afterward, that, although one man be not able to be bishop over all the church, yet he may be bishop over a whole diocese, or of a province. Now, if I would say the one is as impossible as the other, and for proof thereof allege that which the philosophers say, that, as there are no degrees in that which is infinite, so that, of things which are infinite, one thing cannot be more infinite than another, so there are no degrees of¹ impossibility, that, of things which are impossible, one thing should be more impossible than another—if I should thus reason, I think I should put you to some pain. But I will not draw the reader to such thorny and subtil questions; it is enough for us that the one and the other be impossible, although one should be more impossible than the other. And that it is impossible for one man to be bishop over a whole province, or over a whole diocese, I leave it to be considered of that which is before said in the description of the office of a bishop, pastor, or minister, where I speak of the necessity of the residence of the bishop in his church.

JO. WHITGIFT.

In so saying I say but as other learned men have said, and especially M. Calvin, in the place afterward alleged in my Answer²; and as the practice of the church hath been in the best state, and under the best bishops; as it may appear by that which hath been hitherto spoken. Your philosophical argument is soon answered without any great pain. For to govern one province in that manner and form that is required of an archbishop is neither “infinite” nor “impossible.” But it is great lack of judgment to think that, because one man cannot well govern the whole world, therefore he cannot well govern a province or diocese. I have shewed the practice of the church to be contrary in the apostles’ time, and since their time.

Chapter vi. The Fourteenth Division.

T. C. Page 101, Sect. 1.

As a prince may rule a whole realm, such as France or England, so may he rule the whole world by officers and magistrates appointed underneath him. And there have been divers princes which have had as many lands under their power as the pope hath had churches; and, although it be somewhat inconvenient, yet I know not why they might not so have, coming lawfully by them. Now I would gladly hear whether you would say the same of a bishop; and, if you dare not, then why do you bring the similitude of the government of a prince over a land to prove that an archbishop may be over an³ whole province? M. Doctor dare boldly say

This is absurdissimum; as M. Calvin saith, Instit. cap. 8. Sect. 92.

[¹ In, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[² See below, page 419.]

[³ A, Repl. 1 and 2.]

that there may be one bishop over a whole province, but he dare not say that there may be a bishop over the whole church. But what better warrant for the one than for the other? Again, if the whole church be in one province, or in one realm, which hath been, and is not impossible to be again, if there may be now one bishop over a realm and⁴ province, then there may be one bishop over all the church; so that in travailing with an archbishop he hath brought forth a pope.

If the sky fall, &c Yes, surely,
as the state
is now.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The self-same reason you had before; and I answer it now as I did then⁵. The causes by me there alleged be sufficient to prove the difference betwixt the government of a prince and the government of a bishop. And yet no man will deny but that one prince shall better be able to govern one kingdom than the whole world. And to affirm that the whole world may be contained in one monarchy, learned men say is *multis modis absurdissimum*⁶: “in divers respects most absurd.” I bring the example of a king, because other writers use the like examples in the like matters to confute such unlikely reasons, and namely M. Calvin in the words following.

Supra, cap.
3, divis. 31,
32, 33.

Calv. Inst.
cap. 8,
sect. 92.

That which M. Doctor affirmeth, of “one bishop over one whole province,” and of “one bishop over the whole world,” no man will deny. A warrant for the one are the examples of Timothy and Titus, and the continual practice of the church without contradiction in the best times; but there is no warrant for the other of any credit or sufficiency, being only in the most corrupt time of the church, and contrary to all former examples and canons.

You say, “if the whole church be in one province, &c. ;” I say that if the sky fall you may catch larks, as the common proverb is. Moreover, if it were possible so to be (as now it is not), then it were no absurdity the bishop of that province still to remain bishop of the same. But what moveth you to such strange suppositions? I might as well say, if the whole church were in one city, or town, or parish, as it was in Jerusalem after Christ’s ascension, and one bishop or pastor might be over that city, or town, or parish, then one bishop or pastor should be over the whole church; and so you likewise, “in

The Replier’s
“if” turned upon himself.

The church cannot be

[⁴ Or, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁵ See before, pages 244, &c.]

[⁶ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 9. Tom. IX. p. 296. See before, page 264, note 2.]

shut up in one province now.

travailing with a pastor to be in one church," at the length "bring forth a pope." But do you not know that the church of Christ is dispersed throughout the whole world, and cannot now be shut up in one kingdom? much less in one province? except you will become Donatists. He that is not wilfully blind may see into what straits you are driven, when you are constrained to utter such impossibilities for reasons.

Chapter vi. The Fifteenth Division.

T. C. Page 101, Sect. 2.

But he saith that an archbishop hath not the charge of government over the whole province generally, but in cases exempted, and so may do it more easily. But he should have remembered that he assigned before the offices of archbishop and bishop to be in all those things which other ministers are, and that beside¹ those offices he giveth them particular charges. So that, where the office of the minister is but to preach, pray, and minister the sacraments in his parish, the office of archbishop and bishop is to do the same, and more too in the whole province or diocese; and so it followeth that it is easier for a minister to discharge his duty in his parish than for an archbishop or bishop to discharge their duties in any one parish of their province or diocese; for they have in every parish more to do and greater charge than the minister of the parish hath, then much less are they able to do their duties in all the parishes of their provinces or diocese.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I speak of the office of government, and so be my words. Every particular parish hath a particular pastor "to preach, pray, and minister the sacraments." The bishop hath to procure (so much as lieth in him) that all things be done in his diocese according to the laws and orders of the church. The archbishop hath not only to see that the bishops do their duties, but to help them in reforming that which by themselves they cannot do. The office of preaching they exercise where and when they see it most convenient. The whole charge of preaching and of governing resteth neither upon the archbishop, neither upon the bishop; but the one is a help unto the other; and they together with the pastors teach the flock of Christ faithfully and truly, and govern them according to the laws prescribed. And therefore the whole government of the province doth not rest in the archbishop; for the which cause he may with less difficulty execute that that doth appertain to² him.

[¹ Besides, Repl. 1 and 2.]

Whatsoever any other minister may do, the same may the archbishop do also; but it doth not therefore follow that he is bound to the same particular parish. The pastor may preach; so may the archbishop; but the pastor's charge is particular; the archbishop's more general. And this is a very evil consequent: the archbishop may minister the sacraments, and preach the word; therefore he must do it in every particular congregation.

Chapter vi. The Sixteenth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 211, Sect. 1, 2.

You borrowed these arguments from the very papists, who by the self-same reasons go about to prove the pope's supremacy; for thus they argue. Arguments borrowed of the papists.

Among the Israelites there was one high priest, which had authority over the rest; therefore there must be one high priest (which is the pope) over the whole church of Christ. Master Calvin, in his Institutions, chap. viii., doth answer this reason on this sort: *Quod in una natione fuit utile, id in universum orbem extendere nulla ratio cogit: imo gentis unius et totius orbis longe diversa erit ratio*⁴: "That which is profitable to⁵ one nation cannot by any reason be extended to the whole world; for there is great difference betwixt the whole world and one nation." And a little after: *Perinde enim est ac si quis contendat totum mundum à præfecto uno debere regi, quia ager unus non plures præfectos habeat*⁶: "It is even as though a man should affirm that the whole world may be governed of one king, because one field or town hath but one ruler or master."

[*Hype., Lib. iii. Metho. Theolo., making mention of this argument (there was an high priest among the Jews; ergo, there ought to be one pope over all Christendom), saith that it is "a good argument to prove that one arch-

[² Unto, Def. A.]

[³ This word is not in Answ.]

[⁴ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 2. Tom. IX. p. 295. See before, page 245, note 3.]

[⁵ In, Answ.]

[⁶ Id. ibid.]

bishop or metropolitan may well govern one province or one kingdom; but too weak to prove that one bishop may govern all the world"*¹.]²

T. C. Page 101, Sect. 3, and Page 102, Sect. 1.

It is not picked, but offered.

Being truly
alleged.
In alleging
them falsely.
Untrue, for he never used that for a reason.

After M. Doctor translateth out of M. Calvin the papists' reasons for the supremacy of the pope, and M. Calvin's solutions. For what purpose he knoweth: I cannot tell, unless it be to blot paper; I know not what he should mean; and the quarrel also which he picketh, to translate this place, is yet more strange. For he saith that the authors of the Admonition "borrowed their arguments from the papists," when the contrary is true, that they use the reasons, which they of the gospel use against the supremacy of the pope, to overthrow the archbishop. And M. Doctor doth use reasons to defend the archbishop which the papists use to maintain the pope. For M. Doctor would prove that, for because there is one king over a realm, therefore there may be one bishop over a province; and the papists use the same reason to prove the pope to be a bishop of the whole church. Shew now one reason that the authors of the Admonition brought of the papists to prove that there should be no archbishop. But now I perceive his meaning, and that is, that he thought to get some comfort for the archbishop in M. Calvin's solutions made unto the papists' reasons for the supremacy. And therefore he hath haled and pulled in as it were by the shoulders this disputation between the protestants and the papists touching the supremacy. And what is it that M. Calvin saith for the archbishop? It hath been before shewed what his judgment was touching having one minister over all the ministers of a province, and that he doth simply condemn it in his commentary upon the first chap. of the Philip.³ Now let it be considered, whether in these sentences he hath said anything against himself. The papists object that, forso much as there was one high priest in Jewry over all the church, therefore there should be one bishop over all. To whom M. Calvin answereth, that the reason followeth not; for, saith he, "there is no reason to extend that to all the world which was profitable in one nation⁴." Hereupon M. Doctor would conclude that M. Calvin alloweth one archbishop over a whole province.

If one going about to prove that he may have as many wives as he list would allege Jacob for an example, which had two wives, and M. Doctor should answer and say that, although he might have two wives, yet it followeth not that he may have as many as he list, would not M. Doctor think that he had great injury, if a man should conclude of these words that his opinion is that a man may have two wives? I think that he

[¹ And. Hyper. Method. Theolog. sive præcip. Christ. Rel. Loc. Comm. Libr. Tres, Basil. 1574. Lib. III. p. 682. See before, page 348, note 2.]

[² This paragraph is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[³ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. ad Philip. cap. i. 1. Tom. VII. p. 358. See before, page 324, note 1.]

[⁴ Id. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 2. Tom. IX. p. 295. See before, page 419, note 4.]

would suppose that he had great wrong; and yet thus would he conclude of M. Calvin's words in this first sentence; whereas indeed M. Calvin declareth a little after a special reason why there was but one high priest in the whole land of Jewry, which is because he was a figure of Christ, and that thereby should be shadowed out his sole mediation between God and his church⁵; and therefore sheweth that, forsomuch as there is none to represent or figure our Saviour Christ, that his judgment is that, as there should be no one over all the churches, so should there be no one over any nation.

Falsification; for he sheweth no such thing.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The authors of the Admonition say that they "may as safely by the warrant of God's word subscribe to allow the dominion of the pope universally to reign over the church of God, as of an archbishop over an whole province, or a lord bishop over a diocese, which containeth many shires and parishes." This I confute by M. Calvin's answer to the arguments of the papists; wherein appeareth evidently how far from reason this and such like assertions are, that there may as well be "one pope over the whole church, as one bishop over one province or diocese."

Now therefore you may see, if you list, that I have "translated these reasons and solutions out of M. Calvin" to some purpose. And, although I might have had the same solutions out of other learned writers, yet I thought it best to use M. Calvin, as one of whom you have conceived a better opinion.

I may truly say that the authors of the Admonition borrowed this of the papists, that there may be "as well one pope over the whole world, as one bishop over one province or diocese."

The reasons that I use for the defence of the archbishop are the solutions of the arguments used for the pope; and such solutions as are used by all learned men that write against the pope (as the solution of the places of Cyprian before mentioned, and now these that follow) to the strongest arguments of the papists. Wherefore I confess that I use some of the same arguments, but not to the same end, nor in

The reasons for the archbishop are solutions against the pope.

[⁵ Summum, &c. convenit. Ad quem...? Non ad papam...sed ad Christum, qui ut solus munus ipsum sine vicario aut successore sustinet, ita honorem alteri nemini resignat.—Id. ibid. See before, pages 347, 8, note 4.]

like manner. For they use them untruly, against reason, and the true meaning of the author: I use them truly, according to reason, and their proper sense. And my using of them to the purpose that I do is the direct answer and plain overthrow of all the arguments of the papists. It is not therefore good dealing to make the simple believe that the same arguments confirm the pope that confirm the archbishop, when as the application of them to the one is the quite overthrow of the other.

M. Doctor never went about to prove that, "because there is one king over a realm, therefore there may be one bishop over a province;" and, in uttering these and such like untruths willingly and wittingly as you do, you declare of what spirit you are. But M. Doctor hath reasoned clean contrary, that it is no good argument to say that, because one king may well rule one kingdom, therefore he may also well rule the whole world; or, because one bishop may be over one province, therefore one pope may be over all Christendom. These be papistical reasons: these M. Doctor dissolveth and confuteth; neither can you be ignorant of it; but malice is blind. God forgive you; for your whole drift is to bring M. Doctor into hatred and contempt by such lying means; but God that seeth the hearts of all will one day detect your deep dissembled hypocrisy, and reveal that lump of arrogancy and ambition, which is now cloaked with a counterfeit desire of reformation.

I have told you for what purpose I have used these solutions of M. Calvin's, whose opinion also I have shewed before concerning those names and offices.

Calvin alloweth one to rule over the rest of ministers.

In the place to the Philippians now again repeated (and yet this Replier can abide no repetitions in others, though he use almost nothing else himself), M. Calvin overthroweth your equality, for thus he saith: "Truly I grant that (as the manners and conditions of men are) there can no order remain among the ministers of the word except one do rule over the rest¹." And he addeth that he speaketh de singulis corporibus, non de totis provinciis, multo autem minus de orbe universo: "of several bodies, not of whole provinces, much less of the whole world;" meaning, as I suppose, such provinces as be under divers governors; for one province in one particular church, in one kingdom, under one prince, is but one body; and therefore M. Calvin saith nothing to the contrary but that one may præesse reliquis ministris: "rule over the rest of the ministers" in such a province. Undoubtedly he cannot mean that in every several parish or town there should be one qui præsit reliquis, because the most parishes and towns have but one minister; and he that ruleth must have some to rule over. If you will say that M. Calvin meaneth of such ministers as be in cities, where there be many, and not of the country, where there is in every several town but one; then I answer that it were against reason to bring the ministers of the city under the government of one, and to suffer the ministers of the country to live as they list. The same causes, that require a ruler or governor for the one, requireth the same also for the other; except you would have uniformity in the city and confusion in the country. Wherefore M. Calvin's meaning is as I have said. But you have subtilly kept in his words, both here and before, because you know that they made much more against your equality than they do against the archbishop. It had been uprighter dealing to have set down his words; but you will neither use that plainness yourself, nor allow of it in other men.

[¹ Id. Comm. in Epist. ad Philip. cap. i. 1. Tom. VII. p. 358. See before, page 324, note 1.]

What is meant by a body in Calvin.

M. Calvin useth two answers to that objection of the papists; the first whereof is this that I have reported in my Answer. And surely he would never have used that solution, and caused it to be printed, if he had not allowed it, and thought well of it. And not he alone, but other of singular religion and zeal have used the same; as Hyperius in the place before by me alleged: so doth M. Nowel against Dorman in his first book, fol. 60.; whose words (because they be wholly to my purpose, and an evident declaration that such testimonies may lawfully be used for the authority of the bishops, that are unlawfully abused for the authority of the pope) I have set down before². Whereby also the reader may understand how we agree both among ourselves and to ourselves, which are desirous to keep the peace of the church; and that these places now used in the defence of the archbishop's and bishop's authority are no otherwise applied by us than they were before any such controversy began.

Supra, cap. 3, the 15. divis.

M. Calvin maketh no doubt of the matter, but setteth it down as an apt answer, and by him allowed. And therefore your objection of "Jacob's two wives" may serve for a jest, but little to the purpose.

[² See before, page 219.]

It followeth not that if a man make two answers to one argument he disalloweth the one; for they may both be true. Touching M. Calvin's second answer, I have spoken before, and declared wherein that high priest was a figure of Christ. M. Calvin in that place hath not these words, "that his judgment is that, as there should be no one over all churches, so should there be no one over any nation." And therefore you keep your accustomed manner of falsifying.

Chapter vi. The Seventeenth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 211, Sect. 3.

Calvin. Inst.
cap. 8.¹

Another of their reasons is this: Peter was the chief among the apostles; therefore there ought to be one chief over the whole church. The same M. Calvin, in the book and chapter before rehearsed, maketh this one answer to that argument: *Unus inter apostolos summus fuit, nempe quia pauci erant numero. Si unus duodecim hominibus præfuit, an propterea sequetur unum debere centum millibus hominum præfici*²? "There was one chief among the apostles, because they were but few in number; but, if one man rule over twelve, shall it therefore follow that one man may rule over an³ hundred thousand?" And a little after: *Quod inter paucos valet, non protinus trahendum est ad universum terrarum orbem*⁴, *ad quem regendum nemo unus sufficit*⁵: "That which is of force among few may not by and by be drawn to the whole world; the which no one man can govern." Every hive of bees hath one chief master-bee: every company of cranes hath one principal guide; must there be therefore but one bee and one crane, to direct all the bees and the cranes that be in the world⁶? You see therefore how weak this reason is. The rest of this reason I have answered before.

[¹ This reference is not in Answ.]

[² Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. vi. 8. Tom. IX. p. 296. See before, page 247, note 5.]

[³ One may rule over a, Answ.]

[⁴ Orbem terrarum, Answ.]

[⁵ Id. ibid. See before, page 245, note 5.]

[⁶ The whole world, Answ.]

T. C. Page 102, Sect. 1.

To the papists, objecting for the supremacy that St Peter was the prince and chief of the apostles, M. Calvin answereth, first by denying that Peter was so, and bringeth many places to prove that he was equal to the other apostles; afterward he saith, although it be granted that Peter was chief, yet followeth it not, because one may bear rule over twelve, being but a few in number, that therefore one may rule over an hundred thousand, and that it followeth not, that that which is good amongst a few is forthwith good in all the world. Now let all men judge with what conscience and trust M. Doctor citeth M. Calvin for to prove the office of the archbishop.

JO. WHITGIFT.

M. Calvin in the same place hath these words: "It is not to be marvelled that the twelve had one amongst them that might govern the rest. For this thing doth nature allow, and the disposition of man require, that in every society, though all be equal in power, yet some should be as it were moderator of the rest, upon whom the other might depend. There is no court without a consul, no session of judges without a prætor or justice, no college without a governor, no society without a master: so should it not be any absurdity if we should confess that the apostles gave such pre-eminence unto Peter⁷." Now let the reader judge whether it be Calvin's meaning in good earnest, or no, that there was one chief among the apostles; which being true (as it is), M. Doctor may with good "conscience" use this answer of M. Calvin, both against the papists, and the authors of the Admonition also, reasoning not much unlike unto them.

Calvin. Inst.
cap. 8.

Chapter vi. The Eighteenth Division.

T. C. Page 102, Sect. 1.

But I marvel that he could not also see that which M. Calvin writeth in the next sentence almost, where he saith that Christ is only the head of the church, and that the church doth cleave unto another⁸ under his dominion; but by what means? "According (saith he) to the order and form of policy which he hath prescribed;" but he hath prescribed no such form of policy, that one bishop should be over all the ministers and churches in a whole diocese, or one archbishop over all the ministers and churches in a whole province; therefore this form of policy which is by archbishops, and such bishops as we have, is not the means to knit us one to another in unity under the dominion of Christ. Touching the titles and names of honour which are given to the ecclesiastical persons with us, and how that princes and civil magistrates may and ought to have the title which cannot be given to ministers¹, I have spoken before. And therefore of archbishops, archdeacons, and the lord bishops, thus far.

[⁷ Quod &c. societas. Sic nihil absurdi esset si fateremur apostolos detulisse Petro talem primatum.—Id. ibid. See before, page 231, note 5.]

[⁸ Cleave one to another, Repl. 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Calvin. Inst.
cap. 8.

M. Calvin, in the next section, after that he hath answered to other arguments of the papists, saith thus: "But let it be as they would have it, that it is good and profitable that the whole world should be contained in one monarchy, which notwithstanding is most absurd, but let it be so: yet I will not therefore grant that it doth likewise hold in the government of the church. For the church hath Christ her only head, under whose government we are knit together according to that order and form of policy which he himself hath prescribed. Wherefore they do Christ notable injury, which under this pretence will have one man to rule over the whole church, because she cannot want a head; for Christ is the head whereby the whole body, being compacted and coupled by every joint of government, doth, according to the operation in the measure of every member, increase to a perfect body²." All which I agree unto as most true, but nothing at all pertaining to your purpose. He saith that "under the government of Christ we cleave together among ourselves, according to that order and that form of policy which he hath himself prescribed." And who denieth this? But Quorsum? This he speaketh of the spiritual regiment and policy, not of the external; and yet that external regiment and policy is also prescribed by him, which is profitable for his church according to time, place, and persons, though it be not particularly expressed in his word; as partly hath been declared before, and shall be hereafter more at large upon particular occasion.

Thus have you (after so many years travail in this controversy) uttered all your skill against the archbishop, poured out all your malice, exercised your gibes and jests, whetted your slanderous tongue; and yet, besides corrupt and false allegations of writers, fond and toyish distinctions of your own, contrary to all practice and learning, unchristian speeches and heathenish flouts and frumps, you have uttered nothing. And I protest unto the whole church before God, that your unfaithfulness in handling the matter, your vain and frivolous reasons, have much more animated me to the defence of those ancient, reverend, profitable, and necessary offices. I speak of the offices as they be used in this church. And I shall most heartily desire the reader to weigh and consider the authorities and reasons on both parties indifferently, and to judge thereof according to the truth.

[¹ To the ministers, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[² Verum &c. valere. Habet enim illa Christum unicum suum caput, sub cuius principatu omnes inter nos coheremus, secundum eum ordinem et eam politiam formam quam ipse præscripsit. Insignem itaque injuriam Christo faciunt quum eo prætextu volunt hominem unum præesse ecclesiæ universæ, quia hæc capite carere non possit. Christus enim caput est, ex quo totum corpus compactum et connexum per omnem juncturam subministrationis, secundum operationem in mensura cujusque membri, augmentum corporis facit.—Id. ibid. 9. ibid. See before, page 264, note 2.]

¶ A brief collection of such authorities as are used in this Defence of the authority of archbishops and bishops.
Chap. vii.

Timothy was bishop of Ephesus; and Chrysostom saith, in 1 Ti. v., that gens fere tota Asiatica: “almost the whole country of Asia was committed to him³.” And upon the 2. to Timothy, chap. iv., he saith that Paul had committed to Timothy *gubernacula ecclesiæ gentis totius*⁴: “the government over the church of the whole nation,” meaning Asia.

Testimonies of the apostles' times,
and there-
unto adjoining.

Titus was bishop of Creta, not of one city only, but of the whole isle. So saith Chrysostom in his commentaries upon the first to Titus⁵. And Lyra⁶, Erasmus⁷, Pellican⁸, and others write that St Paul made him archbishop of Creta. And Illyricus calleth him and Timothy *multarum ecclesiarum episcopos*⁹: “bishops of many churches.”

St John (as Eusebius reporteth, Lib. iii. cap. 23.), after

[³ Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In 1. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. v. Hom. xv. Tom. XI. p. 637.]

[⁴ Id. in 11. Epist. ad Timoth. cap. iv. Hom. x. p. 720.]

[⁵ Id. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Hom. i. p. 729. See before, page 285, note 3.]

[⁶ Bibl. cum Gloss. Ord. et Expos. N. de Lyra, Basil. 1502. Ad Tit. cap. i. Pars VI. fol. 128. See before, page 352, note 4.]

[⁷ Erasm. Op. L. Bat. 1703-6. In Epist. ad Tit. Arg. Tom. VII. cols. 1067, 8. See before, page 132, note 2.]

[⁸ C. Pellican. Comm. in Omn. Apost. Epist. Tigur. 1539. In Epist. ad Tit. Arg. p. 577. See before, page 132, note 3.]

[⁹ Nov. Test. ex Vers. Erasm. cum Gloss. Comp. Flac. Illyr. Basil. 1570. In Quatr. Epist. Timoth. &c. inscr. Præf. p. 1036. See before, page 298, note 3.]

his return from Pathmos, did govern the churches in Asia, and ordained ministers and bishops¹.

James was made by the apostles bishop of Jerusalem; and the government of that church was committed to him. *Euseb. Lib. ii. cap. 23.*²

The 33. or, as some count, 34. of the canons attributed to the apostles, appointeth "one head and chief bishop" to be in every nation or country, to whom all other bishops of the same nation must be subject³.

Dionysus Areopagita was archbishop of Athens, appointed thereunto by St Paul; as Volusianus, a godly and learned writer, testifieth⁴.

Polycarpus was by St John made bishop of Smyrna. *Tertull. De Præscript.*⁵

In the church of Alexandria, from the time of St Mark, the ministers had always a bishop to govern them. *Hiero. ad Evagrium*⁶.

Ignatius, who lived in the apostles' time, doth call a bishop principem sacerdotum: "the prince of priests," in *Epist. ad Smyrnenses*⁷.

Testimonies of the times
next after the apostles.

Anno 180. In Eleutherius his time, which was anno 180., when this realm of England was first converted to Christianity, there was appointed in the same three archbishops, and 28. bishops. M. Fox, Tom. i. pag. 146.⁸

191. Demetrius, who lived anno 191., was bishop of Alexandria, and of Egypt. *Euseb. Lib. vi. cap. 1.*⁹

235. Cyprian, who was anno 235., being bishop of Carthage, had under him Numidia and Mauritania; as he himself saith,

[¹ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. iii. cap. xxiii. p. 73. See before, page 140, note 3.]

[² Id. ibid. Lib. ii. cap. xxiii. p. 50. See before, page 136, note 4.]

[³ Canon. Apost. 33. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 32. See before, page 145, note 4.]

[⁴ Volus. Epist. ii. in Fox, Acts and Monuments, Lond. 1684. Vol. II. p. 396. See before, page 130, note 2.]

[⁵ Tertull. Op. Lut. 1641. De Præscr. Hæret. 32. p. 243. See before, page 119, note 4.]

[⁶ Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Evang. Epist. ci. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 303. See before, page 222, note 3.]

[⁷ Ignat. Interp. Epist. ad Smyrn. 9. in Coteler. Patr. Apost. Amst. 1724. Vol. II. p. 87. See before, page 304.]

[⁸ Fox, Acts and Monuments, Vol. I. p. 118. See before, p. 128, note 5.]

[⁹ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. vi. cap. ii. p. 164. See before, page 164, note 7.]

*Lib. iv. Epist. 8.*¹⁰ And Gregory Nazianzene, in an oration that he made of Cyprian, saith that he ruled and governed not only the churches of Carthage and Afric, but of Spain also, and of the whole east church¹¹. And for this cause doth Illyrius call him a metropolitan¹²; the which name T. C. also doth give unto him in his Reply, pag. 95. sect. 2.¹³

Dionysius called Alexandrinus, who lived anno 250., being bishop of Alexandria, had also under his jurisdiction all the churches in Pentapolis; as Athanasius testifieth in a certain epistle, *Apol. ii.*¹⁴; and yet had these churches their proper bishop; as Eusebius doth witness, *Lib. vii. cap. 26.*¹⁵ Wherefore the bishop of Alexandria did govern them as archbishop.

Gregory, being bishop, did govern all the churches through Pontus, anno 270. *Euseb. Lib. vii. cap. 14.*¹⁶

Epiphanius, Lib. ii. To. 2. Hær. 68., maketh mention of one Peter, who lived anno 304., whom he calleth archbishop of Alexandria, and declareth that Meletius, then bishop in Egypt, was under him; where also he hath these words: *Hic enim mos*¹⁷ *obtinuit ut Alexandriae episcopus totius Ægypti, ac Thebaidis, Mariotaque ac Lybia, Ammonicæque ac Mariotidis, ac Pentapolis ecclesiasticam habeat administrationem*¹⁸: “For this custom hath prevailed, that the bishop of Alexandria should have the ecclesiastical government of all Egypt, Thebais, Mariota, Lybia, Ammonica, Mariotis, and Pentapolis.” And, Hær. 69., he saith: *Quotquot enim ecclesiæ in Alexandria catholicæ ecclesiæ sunt, sub uno archiepiscopo sunt*¹⁹: “For all the churches in Alexandria that be catholic are under one archbishop.”

The same Epiphanius in the same place doth call Meletius archbishop of Egypt, but yet he saith that he was subject to

[¹⁰ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cornel. Epist. xlviii. p. 91. See before, page 164, note 5.]

[¹¹ Gregor. Naz. Op. Par. 1778-1840. Orat. xxiv. 12. Tom. I. p. 445. See before, page 164, note 6.]

[¹² Catalog. Test. Genev. 1608. col. 118. See before, page 194, note 5.]

[¹³ See before, page 365.]

[¹⁴ Athanas. Op. Par. 1698. Epist. de Sentent. Dionys. 5. Tom. I. p. 246. See before, page 165, note 8.]

[¹⁵ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. vii. cap. xxvi. p. 226. See before, page 165, note 9.]

[¹⁶ Id. ibid. Lib. vi. cap. xxx. p. 187. See before, page 165, note 10.]

[¹⁷ Nos, Def. B.]

[¹⁸ Epiph. Op. Par. 1622. Adv. Hær. Lib. ii. Tom. ii. Hær. lxviii. l. Tom. I. p. 717. See before, page 160, note 3.]

[¹⁹ Id. ibid. Hær. lxix. l. p. 727. See before, page 161.]

250.

270.

304.

304.

the archbishop of Alexandria¹. And this Meletius lived also anno 304.

330. The council of Nice, anno 330., in the 4. canon, saith that the confirmation of bishops doth pertain to the metropolitan of every province²; and, in the 6., mention is made of metropolitans to be in every province, and that secundum antiquum morem: "according to the old custom." And it is further said that the bishop of Alexandria hath the regiment of Lybia and Pentapolis in Egypt³.

335. In the 6. and 37. canons of the second council of Arelat., it is decreed that no bishop may be ordained without the consent of the metropolitan; nor anything to be attempted against the great synod of the metropolitan⁴.

344. The council of Antioch, in the 9. canon, willeth that in every province the bishops be subject to their metropolitan bishop, which hath the care of the whole province, &c. And in that canon is this clause also, *Secundum antiquam a patribus nostris regulam constitutam*⁵: "according to the ancient rule appointed by our forefathers."

Athanasius was archbishop of Alexandria, and had jurisdiction over the rest of the clergy, to whom also Mariotes was subject. *Athana. Apo. ii.*⁶

Amphilochius, metropolitan of Lycaonia, governed the whole country. *Theod. Lib. iv. cap. 11.*⁷

Zozomen, Lib. vii. cap. 19., writeth that, though there be many cities in Scythia, yet they have but one bishop⁸.

Aurelius, bishop of Carthage, in the council of Africa saith that he had the oversight and care of many churches⁹.

Ambrose, Lib. de Dig. Sacer. cap. v., maketh mention of

[¹ Id. ibid. 3. p. 729. See before, page 161, note 5.]

[² Concil. Nic. can. 4. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 29. See before, page 158, note 4.]

[³ Ibid. can. 6. ibid. col. 32. See before, page 144, note 1.]

[⁴ Concil. Arelat. II. cans. 6, 56. ibid. Tom. IV. cols. 1012, 17. See before, page 159, note 10. It may be doubted whether Whitgift, though following other authorities, interprets these canons quite correctly. The metropolitans were to do nothing in opposition to "the great synod," i. e. of Nice.]

[⁵ Concil. Antioch. can. 9. ibid. Tom. II. col. 565. See before, page 146, note 1.]

[⁶ Athanas. Op. Par. 1698. Apolog. contr. Arian. 74, 85. Tom. I. pp. 190, 1, 200. See before, pages 162, 3.]

[⁷ Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. iv. cap. xi. pp. 163, 4. See before, page 165, note 12.]

[⁸ Soz. in cod. Lib. vii. cap. xix. p. 595. See before, page 165, note 11.]

[⁹ Cod. Canon. Eccles. Afric. can. 55. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Tom. II. cols. 1078, 9. See before, page 165, note 13.]

archbishops¹⁰, and he himself was a metropolitan, having charge and government of many churches; as the authors of the Centuries testify in their fourth Century¹¹.

Simeon was archbishop of Seleucia. *Zozo. Lib. ii. cap. 8.*¹² He lived about the time of the Nicene council. Basil, metropolitan of Cappadocia. *Zozo. Lib. iii. cap. 16.*¹³

In the council of Constantinople, which is one of the 4. An. 383. general councils, in the 2. and 5. canons, this authority and regiment of primates, metropolitans, and archbishops, is contained. Which thing also Socrates doth note in the same council. *Lib. v. cap. 8.*¹⁴

In the 2. council of Carthage, canon 12. &c., it is evident An. 415. that in every province there was a primate¹⁵.

In the council of Chalcedon, Flavianus is called archbishop An. 453. of Constantinople; Dioscorus, archbishop of Alexandria; Leo, archbishop of Rome; and the authorities of these offices and degrees in¹⁶ divers points specified¹⁷.

In the first canon of the council of Ephesus, it may manifestly be gathered that all other bishops of the same province An. 463. were then subject to their metropolitan bishop¹⁸.

Hierome, ad Rusticum Monachum, saith: *Singuli ecclesiarum episcopi, singuli archipresbyteri, singuli archidiaconi, &c.*¹⁹ I omit his other places *ad Lucif., ad Titum, &c.*²⁰

[¹⁰ Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. De Dign. Sacerdot. cap. v. Tom. II. Append. cols. 362, 3. See before, page 153, note 7.]

[¹¹ Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. iv. cap. x. col. 1150. See before, page 155.]

[¹² Soz. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Lib. ii. cap. ix. p. 371. See before, page 166, note 2.]

[¹³ Id. ibid. Lib. iii. cap. xvi. pp. 427, 8. See before, page 166, note 3.]

[¹⁴ Socr. in eod. Lib. v. cap. viii. pp. 217, 8. Conf. Concil. Constant. cans. 1, 2, 3. in Concil. Stud. Labbe. et Cossart. Tom. II. cols. 946, 7. See before, page 163, notes 9, 10.]

[¹⁵ Concil. Carthag. ii. can. 12. ibid. Tom. II. cols. 1162, 3. Conf. Cod. Canon. Eccles. Afric. can. 13. ibid. col. 1055. See before, page 159, note 12, page 160, note 1.]

[¹⁶ Degrees there in, Def. A.]

[¹⁷ Concil. Calched. Act. i. ibid. Tom. IV. cols. 148, 9, 52.]

[¹⁸ Εἴτις ὁ μητροπολίτης τῆς ἐπαρχίας... προσέθετο τῷ τῆς ἀποστασίας συνεδρίῳ, οὗτος κατὰ τῶν τῆς ἐπαρχίας ἐπισκόπων διαπράττεσθαι τι οὐδαμῶς δύναται, κ. τ. λ.—Concil. Ephes. can. 1. ibid. Tom. III. col. 803. The dates of the councils here cited are, according to Labbe and Cossart, somewhat different from those assigned by Whitgift. The councils of Arles, Antioch, Constantinople, Carthage, Chalcedon, and Ephesus are placed respectively A.D. 452, 341, 381, 390, 451, 431.]

[¹⁹ Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Ad Rustic. Monach. Epist. xcv. Tom. IV. Pars ii. col. 775.]

[²⁰ Id. adv. Lucifer. Tom. IV. Pars ii. col. 295. See before, page 222, note 5.]

Ambrose, in iv. ad Ephe., saith that all orders be in a bishop, because he is *primus sacerdos, hoc est, princeps sacerdotum*¹: “the chief priest, that is, prince of priests.”

Augustine, in his questions in Vetus et Novum Test. cap. ci., saith: *Quid est . . . episcopus, nisi primus presbyter, hoc est, summus sacerdos*²?

Chrysostom, being archbishop of Constantinople, did also govern the churches in Thracia, Asia, and Pontus. *Theod. Lib. v. cap. 28.*³ The authors of the Centuries affirm the same, and call him archbishop. *Cent. v. cap. 10.*⁴

Theodoret, being bishop of Cyrus, had under his government 800. churches; as he himself testifieth in his epistle to Leo⁵.

Gennadius, bishop of Constantinople, writeth to the bishop of Rome thus: *Curet sanctitas tua universas tuas custodias, tibi que subjectos episcopos*⁶.

Ruff. Lib. i.
cap. 29.

Infinite testimonies and examples there are of this sort; and no man that is of any reading can be ignorant but that these degrees of superiority, and this kind of regiment, hath been in the church continually, even from the apostles' time⁷.

M. Bucer, upon the fourth to the Ephe., sheweth that these degrees in the church, bishop, archbishop, metropolitan, primate, patriarch, be not only most ancient, but also necessary⁸.

M. Calvin, in his Instit. cap. viii. sect. 52., upon the place of Hierome in the epistle ad Evagrium, saith that in the old time there was to every city appointed a certain region, province, or diocese, quæ presbyteros inde sumeret, et velut cor-

Id. Comm. in Epist. ad Tit. cap. i. Tom. IV. Pars 1. col. 413. See before, pages 221, 2, note 5.]

[¹ Nam in episcopo omnes ordines sunt; quia primus sacerdos est, hoc est, princeps est sacerdotum.—Ambros. Op. Par. 1636-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Ephes. cap. iv. vv. 11, 12. Tom. II. Append. col. 241.]

[² August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Quæst. ex utroq. mixt. Quæst. ci. Tom. III. Append. col. 93.]

[³ Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. v. cap. xxviii. pp. 235, 6. See before, pages 312, 13, note 5.]

[⁴ Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. v. cap. x. col. 1171. See before, page 316, note 2.]

[⁵ Theod. Op. Lut. Par. 1642-84. Ad Leon. Episc. Rom. Epist. cxiii. Tom. III. pp. 986, 7. See before, page 320, note 5.]

[⁶ Gennad. Epist. Synod. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. IV. col. 1030.]

[⁷ ...ex concilii decreto Asterio ceterisque qui cum ipso erant orientis injungitur procuratio, occidentis vero Eusebio decernitur.—Hyst. Eccles. Par. Lib. x. cap. xxix. fol. 116. 2.]

[⁸ M. Bucer. Prælect. in Epist. ad Ephes. Basil. 1562. cap. iv. pp. 131, 2, 3.]

pori illius ecclesiæ accenseretur, and that the same also was under the bishop of the city. *Quod si amplior erat ager, qui sub ejus episcopatu erat, quam ut sufficere omnibus episcopi munitis ubique possit, per ipsum agrum designantur certis locis presbyteri, qui in minoribus negotiis ejus vices obirent: eos vocabant chorepiscopos, quod per ipsam provinciam episcopum representabant*⁹.

M. Beza, Lib. Conf. cap. 7., calleth the names of archbishops, bishops, &c., “ holy names ;” for thus he saith : “ That pastors in process of time were distinct into metropolitans, bishops, and those whom they now call curates (that is, such as be appointed to every parish) was not in the respect of the ministry of the word, but rather in respect of jurisdiction and discipline. Therefore, concerning the office of preaching the word and administering the sacraments, there is no difference betwixt archbishops, bishops, and curates ; for all are bound to feed their flock with the same bread ; and therefore by one common name in the scriptures they be called pastors and bishops. But what impudency is there in those men (meaning the papists) to use those holy names, and therefore to glory of the succession of the apostles and true bishops¹⁰ !” In the same chapter he maketh two kinds of degrees used in the papistical church ; the one unknown to the apostles and to the primitive church, the other taken out of the word of God, and from the primitive church ; in the second order he placeth archbishops, curates, canons, seniors, or ministers, archdeacons, deans, subdeacons, clerks¹¹.

But what should I stand longer in this matter ? There is not one writer of credit that denieth this superiority to have been always among the clergy, and these degrees to come even from the best time of the church since the apostles, and to be both most ancient and general. Wherefore I cannot but count such as deny so manifest a truth either unlearned and unskilful persons, or else very wranglers, and men desirous of contention¹².

[⁹ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. iv. 2. Tom. IX. p. 286 ; where ecclesiæ illius, and posset.]

[¹⁰ Th. Bezae Confess. Christ. Fid. Genev. 1587. cap. vii. 12. p. 238. See before, page 333, note 3.]

[¹¹ Id. ibid. pp. 230, 1. See before, page 332, note 2.]

[¹² “ Thus we are (by the grace of God) come to an end of this treatise, wherein let the reader judge whether it hath been proved that the offices of archbishops and archdeacons be unlawful, that they came not into the church 300. years after the

A brief comparison betwixt the bishops of our time, and the bishops of the primitive church.

Chap. viii.

I know that comparisons be odious, neither would I use them at this time, but that I am thereunto (as it were) compelled by the uncharitable dealing of T. C., who, by comparing the bishops of our time with the bishops in the old church, hath sought by that means to disgrace them, if it were possible. I may peradventure in this point seem to some to flatter, but the true judgment thereof I leave to him that knoweth the secrets of the heart. In the meantime I will affirm nothing which is not evident to all those that be learned divines, and not overruled with affection. My comparison shall consist in these three points; truth of doctrine, honesty of life, and right use of external things.

Touching the first, that is, truth of doctrine, I shall not need much to labour. For I think T. C. and his adherents will not deny but that the doctrine taught and professed by our bishops at this day is much more perfect and sounder than it commonly was in any age after the apostles' time. For the most part of the ancientest bishops were deceived with that gross opinion "of a thousand years after the resurrection, wherein the kingdom of Christ should here remain upon earth." The fautors whereof were called Millenarii. Papias, who lived in Polycarpus and Ignatius his time, being bishop of Jerusalem¹, was the first author of this error²; and almost all the most ancient fathers were infected with the same.

Euse. Lib. iii.
cap. 39, & 35.

ascension of our Saviour Christ; that their names are likewise unlawful by the word, forbidden by ancient councils, not to be found in any ancient writing before 400. years approached. Further, whether that every congregation ought to have a bishop; that one only may have two or more; that they ought all to have like titles and authority. Saving that in their meetings for order's sake one by consent of the rest governeth that action in such sort as is declared. That all these points of the bishop have ground of the word of God, and most of them shewed to have remained some time after the apostles, and the traces long after. Finally, whether that even the elder bishops when they were declined from the sincerity of God's ordinance, and the archbishops and archdeacons which he never ordained, were much more tolerable than ours; as those whose authority was without comparison less, and pomp none at all."—Sec. Repl. p. 666.]

[¹ "... his [collector] deceived him, and was herein somewhat too well skilled in Greek; which, for Hierapolis a city in Phrygia, whereof Papias was bishop, told him that he was 'of Jerusalem.'"—Ibid. p. 654.]

[² ... χιλιάδα τινα φησὶν [ὁ Παπίας] ἐπὶ τῶν ἔσεσθαι μετὰ τὴν ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀνάστασιν, σωματικῶς τῆς τοῦ Χριστοῦ βασιλείας ἐπὶ ταυτησί τῆς γῆς ὑπο-

Cyprian and the whole council of Carthage erred in “re-baptization³,” and Cyprian himself also was greatly over-Tom. Conc. I.
Lib. epi. ii.
epi. 3. seen in making it a matter so necessary in the celebration of the Lord’s supper to have water mingled with wine, which was, no doubt, at that time common to more than to him; but the other opinion which he confuteth, of using water only, is more absurd⁴; and yet it had at that time patrons among the bishops.

How greatly were almost all the bishops and learned writers of the Greek church, yea, and the Latins also, for the most part, spotted with doctrines of free-will, of merits, of invocation of saints, and such like? Surely you are not able to reckon, in any age since the apostles’ time, any company of bishops that taught and held so sound and perfect doctrine in all points as the bishops of England do at this time.

If you speak of ceremonies, and of the sincere administration of the sacraments, you shall find the like difference; for, compare the ceremonies that Tertullian saith, Lib. de Coro. Mil., then to be used in the church about the sacraments, and otherwise⁵; or those that Basil rehearseth, *Lib. de Sancto Spi.*⁶; or such as we may read to have been in St Augustine’s time⁷, with those that we now retain in this church, and you cannot but acknowledge that therein we are come to a far greater perfection.

I mean not to stand in particulars; I think T. C. and his companions will not contend with me in this point; for, if they do, it is but to maintain contention. Seeing then that in the truth of doctrine, which is the chief and principal point, our bishops be not only comparable with the old bishops, but in many degrees to be preferred before them, we think there is too too great injury done unto them, and to this doctrine which they profess, when as they are so odiously compared, στησιμύνης.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. III. cap. xxxix. p. 90.]

[³ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Concil. Carthag. pp. 229, &c. Conf. Crabb. Concil. Col. Agrip. 1551. Tom. I. pp. 143, &c.]

[⁴ Id. ad Cæcil. Epist. lxiii. pp. 148, &c.]

[⁵ Tertull. Op. Franck. 1597. De Cor. Mil. 3. p. 180.]

[⁶ Basil. Op. Par. 1721-30. Lib. de Spir. Sanct. cap. xxvii. 66. Tom. III. pp. 54, &c.]

[⁷ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Inq. Januar. Lib. II. seu Epist. lv. cap. xix. 35. Tom. II. col. 142.]

and so contemptuously intreated by T. C. and his colleagues.

2. Touching honesty of life, which is the second point, I will not say much; I do not think but that therein they may be compared with the old bishops also, and in some points preferred. Every age hath some imperfections in it; and the best men are most subject to the slanderous tongue. Great contention there was among the bishops in the council of Nice; insomuch that even in the presence of the emperor they ceased not to libel one against another¹. What bitterness and cursing was there betwixt Epiphanius and Chrysostom! what affectionate² dealing of Theophilus against the same Chrysostom³! what jarring betwixt Hierome and Augustine⁴! But I will not prosecute this. Men, be they never so godly, yet they be men; and the common sort of people, when they wax weary of the word of God truly preached, then do they begin to deprave the true and chief ministers of the same.

3. For the third point, that is, the use of external things, if the bishops now have more land and living than bishops had then, it is the blessing of God upon his church; and it is commodious for the state and time. If any man abuse himself therein, let him be reformed; let not his fault be made a pretence to cloak a mind desirous to spoil. I see not how those lands and livings can be employed to more benefit of the church, commodity of the commonwealth, and honour of the prince, than they be now in state and condition wherein they remain. Bishops shall not now need to live by pilling and polling, as it seemed they did in Cyprian's time; for he complaineth thereof, *Ser. de Lapsis*⁵. Nor as some did in Ambrose⁶ or Augustine's⁷. They have (God be thanked) living sufficient without any such unlawful means; and I doubt not but, if their expenses shall be compared with their pre-

Amb. de Dig.
Sacerd.
August. Lib.
iii. advers.
Parmen.

[¹ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. De Vit. Constant. Lib. III. cap. xiii. p. 404.]

[² Affectionate: passionate.]

[³ Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-33. Vit. Chrysost. Tom. XIII. pp. 141, &c.]

[⁴ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Vit. August. Lib. IV. cap. xiii. Lib. v. capp. ix. xii. Tom. XI. cols. 196, &c., 254, 270, &c.]

[⁵ Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. De Laps. pp. 123, 4.]

[⁶ Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. De Dign. Sacerdot. capp. v. vi. vii. Tom. II. Append. cols. 362, &c. See before, page 153, note 7.]

[⁷ August. Op. Contr. Epist. Parmen. Lib. III. cap. ii. 7, &c. Tom. IX. cols. 60, &c.]

decessors', it shall appear that they be according to the proportion that God hath limited unto them^s. But an eye, dimmed with malice, or bent to the spoil, can see nothing that may hinder the desired purpose. God root out of the hearts of men such ravening affections and greedy desires.

[^s "It is high time that he were (to speak no grievouslier) unbishoped, which will take occasion of pillage, having to live on a hundred pound a year."—Sec. Repl. p. 649. The Second Reply goes no farther than the end of this Tractate. Cartwright's observations on the succeeding portion of the Defence are contained in "The Rest of the Second Reply." See Vol. I. page 3, note 3.]

¶ Of the Communion Book.

Tract. ix.

The general faults examined wherewith the public service is charged by T. C.

Chapter i. The First Division.

T. C. Page 102, Sect. 2.

Before I come to speak of prayers, I will treat of the faults that are committed almost throughout the whole liturgy and public service of the church of England; whereof one is that which is often objected by the authors of the Admonition, that the form of it is taken from the church of antichrist, as the reading of the epistles and gospels so cut and mangled, as the most of the prayers, the manner of ministering the sacraments, of marriage, of burial, confirmation, translated as it were word for word, saving that the gross errors and manifest impieties be taken away. For, although the forms and ceremonies which they used were not unlawful, and that they contained nothing which is not agreeable to the word of God (which I would they did not), yet, notwithstanding, neither the word of God, nor reason, nor the examples of the eldest churches, both Jewish and christian, do permit us to use the same forms and ceremonies, being neither commanded of God, neither such as there may not as good as they, and rather better, be established.

JO. WHITGIFT.

In these words are contained two false principles: the one is that "the form" and manner of prayer used in the church of England "is taken from the church of antichrist;" the other, that it is not lawful "to use the same forms (of prayer) and ceremonies" that the papists did. This latter I have already proved to be otherwise, in the beginning where I spake of ceremonies¹, and intend hereafter to answer such arguments as shall be used to prove the contrary: the first will appear to be most untrue, being manifest that such things as we now use in the book of common prayer (though some of them have been used in the time of papistry) were appointed in the church by godly and learned men, before the pope was antichrist, or the church of Rome greatly corrupted; as "the reading of the epistle and gospel," which is of very long continuance in the church, even whilst the church of Rome was as yet, in the principal points of doctrine, pure, being also chosen places of scriptures, apt for the time, and most to Tract. vii.

cap. 5. divis.
3, 4, &c.

Reading of gospels and epistles very ancient.

[¹ See before, pages 31, &c.]

edifying, which no honest heart and godly-disposed person can discommend.

If in "the administration of the sacraments, celebration of marriage, burying of the dead, confirmation," those things that are good and profitable be retained, and "the gross errors and manifest impieties taken away," as you say they be, why do you then on this sort trouble the church for using that which is good, and refusing that which is evil? Is papistry so able to infect the word of God, godly prayers, and profitable ceremonies, that they may not be used in the church reformed, the errors and impieties being taken away? Why do we call our churches reformed churches, rather than newly builded, or as it were wholly transformed, but that we retain whatsoever we find to be good, refuse or reform that which is evil? But of these matters more is to be spoken as occasion is offered. Hitherto you use but words, which have no weight without good and sound reasons.

Things abused may be used, impieties being taken away.

The church is reformed, not transformed.

Chapter i. The Second Division.

T. C. Page 102, Sect. 3.

For the word of God I have shewed before, both by the example of the apostles conforming the gentiles unto the Jews in their ceremonies, and not contrariwise the Jews to the gentiles, and by that the wisdom of God hath thought it a good way to keep his people from the infection of idolatry and superstition, to sever them from idolaters by outward ceremonies, and therefore hath forbidden them to do things which are in themselves very lawful to be done.

JO. WHITGIFT.

What you have spoken in any place of your book concerning this matter is there answered where it is spoken; but you have not as yet, to my remembrance, anywhere shewed that God ever hath "forbidden his people to do things in themselves very lawful to be done," because the same were used by idolaters: I have before proved the contrary, both by the manifest words of the scripture, and by the testimony of St Augustine and divers other learned writers³.

Tract. vii. cap. 5.

[² This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[³ See before, pages 31, &c.]

Chapter i. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 102, Sect. 4.

Now I will add this further, that, when as the Lord was careful to sever them by ceremonies from other nations, yet was he not so careful to sever them from any as from the Egyptians, amongst whom they lived, and from those nations which were next neighbours unto them, because from them was the greatest fear of infection. Therefore, by this constant and perpetual wisdom which God useth to keep his people from idolatry, it followeth that the religion of God should not only in matter and substance, but also, as far as may be, in form and fashion, differ from that of the idolaters, and especially the papists, which are round about us and amongst us. For indeed it were more safe for us to conform our indifferent ceremonies to the Turks which are far off, than to the papists which are so near.

An unadvised assertion.

The gentiles and papists not like in all respects.

The Jews and the gentiles in some respect agreed in ceremonies.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The Egyptians and idolatrous gentiles neither worshipped, nor pretended to worship, the God of Israel, and therefore no marvel though in rites and ceremonies they were utterly severed from them; but the papists either worship, or pretend to worship, the same God which we do; and therefore there is no such cause in all points of rites and ceremonies to differ from them. And it is most untrue that God so severed his people from the Egyptians or other nations near adjoining, that they had nothing common with them, or no ceremonies like unto theirs; for they were like in many things touching the external form. The gentiles had sacrifices; and so had they: the gentiles in worshipping their gods used external pomp of garments, of golden and silver vessels, and such like; and so did they; yea, divers learned men be of this judgment, that God did prescribe unto the Israelites that solemn manner and form of worshipping him by external rites and ceremonies shortly after their return out of Egypt, that they, being therewith not only occupied, but also delighted, should have no desire to return into Egypt, or to worship their gods whom they had seen with great solemnity of ceremonies and external rites adored. And therefore you ground your talk upon false principles, which you have not proved, but imagined.

Now, if we may have ceremonies common with them, or like unto them, from whom we wholly differ in matter and substance of religion, as we do from the gentiles, and from the Turks, much more may we have ceremonies common with them, or like unto them, from whom we do not wholly differ in matter and substance, but in certain material and substantial points. As for this your saying, "That it were better for us to conform our indifferent ceremonies to the Turks which are far off, than to the papists which are so near," I take it to be but spoken in a heat, and that you will otherwise think when you have better considered the matter; the one being a professed enemy unto Christ, and the name of Christ, the other pretending the contrary. But, to put you out of doubt, we do not in any kind of ceremonies conform ourselves to the papists, but, using christian liberty in external things, and knowing that "all things be clean to those that be clean," such things as we find instituted by learned and godly men, and profitable to the church as pertaining to edifying, or comeliness and order (though abused of the papists), we retain in our churches, and restore to the right use; as our forefathers did the temples of idols, turning them to christian churches, and revenues consecrated to idols, transposing them to find the ministers of the church, and such like; as I have declared in another place².

[¹ These references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

We conform not ourselves to the papists in ceremonies.

Tit. i.

Tract. vii. cap. 5. divis. 3, 4, &c.

Chapter i. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 103, Sect. 1.

Common reason also doth teach that contraries are cured by their contraries: now christianity and antichristianity, the gospel and popery, be contraries; therefore antichristianity must be cured not by itself, but by that which is (as much as may be) contrary unto it. Therefore a meddled³ and mingled estate of the order of the gospel and the ceremonies of popery is not the best way to banish popery; and therefore as, to abolish the infection of false doctrine of the papists, it is necessary to establish a divers doctrine, and, to abolish the tyranny of the popish government, necessary to plant the discipline of Christ, so, to heal the infection that hath crept into men's minds by reason of the popish order of service, it is meet that the other order were put in place⁴ thereof.

JO. WHITGIFT.

"Contraries must be cured by contraries" in all things wherein they be contrary. "Christianity and antichristianity,

How contraries must be cured by contraries.

[² See before, pages 31, &c.]

[³ So that a meddled, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ In the place, Repl. 1 and 2.]

the gospel and popery," be not in all things contrary, touching outward profession; and therefore no necessity of abandoning all things from "christianity" that was used "in antichristianity." So much of the papistical doctrine as is contrary to the gospel, that kind of government in the pope's church that is repugnant to the word of God, all such order of service or kind of prayer as is ungodly and superstitious, is to be removed and cured with the contrary; but, as they have some truth in doctrine, so have they some lawful kind of government, and good and godly prayers; all which, being restored to their own purity, are to be retained; for no abuse can so defile anything that is good, that the same thing may not be used, the abuse being taken away.

The order of popish service clean altered in this church.

And yet, if you would speak the truth, you cannot say but that the order of the popish service is clean altered in this church; for what similitude hath the vulgar tongue with a tongue unknown? What likelihood is there betwixt the multitude of ceremonies used by the papists and the fewness of such as are now retained? How much doth the simplicity used in our service differ from the pomp and gorgeousness used in theirs! How contrary is our communion to their mass! What diversity is there in the celebration of our sacraments and theirs! To be short, the difference is as much as either the word of God or the state and condition of the church requireth: the which you might see if you were disposed; but, as I have said before, Cæca malitia non videt apertissima: "Blind malice seeth not those things that are most manifest."

Chapter i. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 103, Sect. 1.

Philosophy, which is nothing else but reason, teacheth that, if a man will draw one from vice which is an extreme unto virtue which is the mean, that it is the best way to bring him as far from that vice as may be, and that it is safer and less harm for him to be led somewhat too far than he should be suffered to remain within the borders and confines of that vice wherewith he is infected. As if a man would bring a drunken man to sobriety, the best and nearest way is to carry him as far from his excess in drink as may be; and, if a man could not keep a mean, it were better to fault in prescribing less than he should drink, than to fault in giving him more than he ought; as we see, to bring a stick which is crooked to be rule.

A crooked

straight, we do not only bow it so far until it come to be straight, but we bend it so far until we make it so crooked of the other side as it was before of the first side, to this end that at the last it may stand straight, and as it were in the midway between both the crooks; which I do not therefore speak as though we ought to abolish one evil and hurtful ceremony for another, but that I would shew how it is more dangerous for us that have been plunged in the mire of popery to use the ceremonies of it, than of any other idolatrous and superstitious service of God.

JO. WHITGIFT.

“Philosophy” also “teacheth” that both the extremes be vices; and therefore your rule doth teach that a man must go from one vice to another, if he will come to virtue, which is a mean; but St Paul teacheth the contrary, saying, Non est faciendum malum, ut inde veniat bonum: “We must not do evil that good may come thereof.” Wherefore, as your rule is heathenish and naught, so do you as naughtily follow it. Is there no way for the prodigal man to come to liberality, but by covetousness? no way for the glutton to come to temperance, but by pining himself? no way for the presumptuous person to come to the true fear and love of God, but by desperation? no way to come from popery to the gospel, but by confusion, and overthrow of all good order and government? Is this divinity? Indeed such divinity it is that Aristotle, a profane philosopher, doth teach in his Ethics, but not that Christ and his apostles do teach in the gospel.

The Replier prescribeth a heathenish rule of reformation.

Rom. iii.

The ordinary means, whereby a Christian man must come from vice to virtue, from an extreme to a mean, is the diligent reading and hearing of the word of God, joined with earnest and hearty prayers. The best way therefore to “bring a drunken man to sobriety” is not to persuade him to a superstitious kind of abstinence or fasting, but to lay before him out of the word of God the horribleness of that sin, and the punishment due unto the same. The similitude of a crooked stick is apt to set forth so crooked a precept, but not so apt to make manifest the way unto virtue. But I may not blame you for using and allowing those profane rules, which you so aptly follow, and so commonly practise in all your doings¹.

The ordinary means to draw men from vice.

[¹ “... he disputeth against me, as though I allowed that a man might run from one vice for remedy against the other; which is an open untruth and intolerable, seeing I added expressly that I did ‘not allow it, but only that of two evils it was the less;’ whereunto he could not answer.”—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 174.]

Chapter i. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 103, Sect. 1, 2.

This wisdom of not conforming itself unto the ceremonies of the idolaters in things indifferent hath the church followed in times passed.

Tertullian saith, "O," saith he, "better is the religion of the heathen; for they use no solemnity of the Christians, neither the Lord's day, neither the Pentecost; and if they knew them they would have nothing to do with them; for they would be afraid lest they should seem Christians; but we are not afraid to be called heathen."

JO. WHITGIFT.

Tertullian in that place speaketh against such Christians as celebrated the feast of the gentiles together with them, remaining in their wicked abuse; as it appeareth in the words that go before, which are as followeth: *Nobis, quibus sabbata extranea sunt et neomenia et feriæ aliquando a Deo dilectæ, Saturnalia et Januariæ et Brumæ et Matronales frequentantur, munera commeant, strenæ consonant, lusus, convivia constrepunt. O melior fides nationum in suam sectam, &c.*¹: "The feasts of Saturn, of Janus, of Bacchus, and of Juno, are frequented of us, unto whom the sabbaths, new moons, and holy-days sometimes beloved of God, are strange, gifts and presents are very rife, sports and banquets keep a stir. O better is the faith of the gentiles in their sect, &c." Wherefore this saying of Tertullian may aptly be alleged against those that frequent the popish solemnities together with them, come to their churches, communicate with them in worshipping their idols, and yet profess the knowledge of the gospel; but it can by no means be drawn unto such as, withdrawing themselves from such kind of communicating with them, do in their several churches use those good things well which the papists have abused; as the scripture, the sacraments, prayers, and such like. Wherefore you do not well to allege Tertullian's words, omitting the circumstances which declare his meaning.

A man being present at idolatrous service must needs give great suspicion that he is an idolater; and therefore no man ought to be present at it which in heart condemneth it. But, as there is no honest and godly man, which can call our service idolatrous or papistical, so is there none that can suspect us to be idolaters or papists; the whole world knowing that both our practice and profession is to the contrary.

[¹ Nobis &c. a Deo aliquando dilectæ, &c. sectam: quæ nullam solennitatem Christianorum sibi vindicat, non dominicum diem, non pentecosten. etiamsi nossent, nobiscum non communicassent; timerent enim ne Christiani viderentur. Nos ne ethnici pronunciemur, non veremur.—Tertull. Op. Franck. 1597. De Idol. 14. p. 155.]

Chapter i. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 103, Sect. 3.

Euseb. Lib. iii. cap. 17. Constantine the emperor, speaking of the keeping of the feast of Easter, saith "that it is an unworthy thing to have anything common with that most spiteful company of the Jews." And a little after he saith that "it is most absurd and against reason that the Jews should vaunt and glory that the Christians could not keep those things without their doctrine²." And in another place it is Socrat. i. Lib. cap. 9. said after this sort "It is convenient so to order the matter that we have nothing common with that nation³."

JO. WHITGIFT.

"Constantine speaketh of the feast of Easter," which he would not have observed according to the manner of the Jews; and yet you know that the churches in Asia, following the examples of Philip and John the apostles, and of Polycarpus, and many other godly men, did celebrate that feast together with the Jews; as it is to be seen in the fifth book of Eusebius' Eccle. History⁴. Wherefore the matter was not of so great importance, before it was for quietness' sake determined by the church; neither doth Constantine in either of the places mean that we should have nothing common with the Jews, but only that we should have no such things common with them as are repugnant to christian liberty, or to the truth of the gospel, or such as may confirm them in their obstinacy and error. For, if his meaning had been generally and simply, then might he have utterly abrogated the feast of Euseb. Lib. v. cap. 23, 24, & 25, 26.

[² Καὶ πρῶτον μὲν ἀνάξιον ἔδοξεν εἶναι, τὴν ἀγιοπάτην ἐκείνην ἑορτὴν τῇ τῶν Ἰουδαίων ἐπομένους συνηθείᾳ πληροῦν...μηδὲν τοίνυν ἔστω ἡμῖν κοινόν μετὰ τοῦ ἐχθίστου τῶν Ἰουδαίων ὄχλου...ἔστι γὰρ ὡς ἀληθῶς ἀποπώπατον, ἐκείνους αὐχεῖν ὡς ἄρα παρεκτὸς τῆς αὐτῶν διδασκαλίας ταῦτα φυλάττειν οὐκ εἴημεν ἱκανοί.—Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. De Vit. Constant. Lib. III. cap. xviii. pp. 405, 6.]

[³ "Ὅθεν ἐπειδὴ τοῦτο οὕτως ἐπανορθοῦσθαι προσῆκεν, ὡς μηδὲν μετὰ τοῦ τῶν πατροκτόνων τε καὶ κυριοκτόνων ἐκείνων ἔθνος εἶναι κοινόν.—Socr. in eod. Lib. I. cap. ix. p. 23.]

[⁴ Euseb. in eod. Lib. v. capp. xxiii. xxiv. xxv. pp. 154, &c.]

Easter, being no commandment for it in the new testament. As therefore Constantine thought that the church had not the feast of Easter common with the Jews, not because the thing itself was abrogated, but the day altered; even so the church of England cannot be said to have anything common with the papistical church, though it retain something used in the same, because the manner is changed, and certain circumstances altered; for, whereas before it was in a strange tongue, now it is in a tongue known; and, whereas it was before abused and mixed with superstition, now it is rightly used and purged from all corruption. And therefore, although the thing remain, yet, because the circumstances be altered, it is not the same, no more than our sabbath is the Jews' sabbath, and our Easter the Jews' Easter.

Chapter i. The Eighth Division.

T. C. Page 103, Sect. 4, 5, 6.

The councils, although they did not observe themselves always in making of decrees this rule, yet have kept this consideration continually in making their laws, that they would have the Christians differ from others in their ceremonies.

The council of Laodicea, which was afterward confirmed by the sixth general council, decreed that the Christians should not take unleavened bread of the Jews, or communicate with their impiety¹.

Also it was decreed in another council, that they should not deck their houses with bay leaves and green boughs, because the pagans did use so, and that they should not rest from their labours those days that the pagans did, that they should not keep the first day of every month as they did².

JO. WHITGIFT.

What is all this to your purpose³? Who saith that either we must use all things that the Jews and gentiles did, or that the church hath not authority to take order therein as shall be thought most convenient? The church at this time did perceive inconveniences in these customs and ceremonies, and therefore did by ordinary authority abrogate them. In like manner, and upon like consideration, hath this church of England abandoned great numbers of papistical rites and ceremonies;

[¹ See below, note 4.]

[² See below, note 5.]

[³ "... you know full well that these go to the heart of your cause."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 176.]

but, because it refuseth some, may it therefore retain none? or, because it rejecteth those which be wicked and unprofitable, may it not therefore keep still such as be godly and pertain to order and decency?

The canon of the council of Laodicea is this: *Non oportere a Judæis azyma accipere, aut communicare impietatibus eorum*⁴: "That we ought not to take unleavened bread of the Jews, or communicate with their impiety." And surely I marvel what you can conclude of it; for no man (as I suppose) doth think that we may use ceremonies proper to the Jews, and abrogated by Christ, or that it is lawful to communicate with their impiety. Canon. 38.

That canon which you call 73. of the council of Bracar. is not to be found in any such council; for there are not so many canons in any council so called; but the canon that you mean, as I think, is among the canons collected out of the Greek synods, by St Martin, and in number 74. The words be these: "Let it not be lawful to use wicked observations of the calends, and to keep the gentiles' holy-days, nor to deck houses with bays or green boughs; for all this is an heathenish observation⁵."

To what purpose do you allege this canon? what doth it prove? Christians are inhibited from observing days, and times, and other frivolous superstitions, after the manner of the gentiles. But what is this to godly prayers grounded upon the word of God, or comely and decent orders and ceremonies?

Chapter i. The Ninth Division.

T. C. Page 103, Sect. ult.

Afric. Conc.
ca. 27⁶.

Another council decreed that the Christians should not celebrate feasts on the birth-days of the martyrs, because it was the manner of the heathen: whereby it appeareth that, both of singular men, and of councils in making or abolishing of ceremonies, heed hath been

A manifest untruth.

[⁴ Concil. Laod. can. 38. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 1504.]

[⁵ Non liceat iniquas observationes agere Kalendarum, et otiis vacare gentilibus, neque lauro aut viriditate arborum cingere domos. Omnis hæc observatio paganismi est.—Capit. Martin. Episc. Brac. 73. in eod. Tom. V. col. 913.]

[⁶ 17, Def. B.]

taken that the Christians should not be like unto the idolaters, no, not in those things which of themselves are most indifferent to be used or not used.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Conc. Afric.
can. 27.

It is marvellous to behold your dealing, and to consider how, under the pretence of avoiding I know not what, in reciting the words of such authors as you allege, you delude the reader with an untrue sense; as it evidently appeareth in this canon of the council of Afric; the words whereof be these: "This is also to be desired (of the emperors) that such feasts as contrary to the commandments of God are kept in many places, which have been drawn from the error of the gentiles (so that now Christians are compelled by the pagans to celebrate them, whereby another persecution in the time of christian emperors seemeth covertly to be raised), might be by their commandment forbidden, and the pain laid upon cities and possessions prohibited; especially, seeing they are not afraid to commit such things in some cities, even upon the birth-days of blessed martyrs, and in the holy places. Upon which days also (which is a shame to tell) they use most wicked dancings throughout the streets; so that the honour of matrons, and the chaste shamefastness of many women which come devoutly unto that holy-day, is by their lascivious injuries invaded, inso-much that those religious meetings are almost shunned¹." In these words the heathenish feasts of the gentiles, which are against the commandment of God, being full of impiety and uncleanness, are forbidden to be used of Christians in the birth-days of martyrs, or at any other time. How this can be applied to your purpose I know not, except that you count all that for fish that comes to net.

Now let the reader consider what weighty reasons you have hitherto used against our order of prayer; nay, rather how unaptly you have alleged both your reasons and authorities. And, whereas you seem to insinuate that the things you have spoken of be “most indifferent;” that is nothing so: for the most of those things prohibited by these canons be things least indifferent; as it may appear by that which is already spoken of them, and even in the very canons themselves.

[¹ Κάκεινο ἔτι μὴν δεῖ αἰτῆσαι παρὰ τῶν χριστιανῶν βασιλέων, ἐπειδὴ παρὰ τὰ θεῖα παραγγέλματα ἐν πολλοῖς τόποις συμπόσια οὕτως ἐπιτελοῦνται ἐκ τῆς ἔθνικης πλάνης προσερχθέντα, ὥς καὶ χριστιανοὺς τοῖς ἑλλησι λάθρα προσσυνάγεσθαι ἐν τῇ τούτων τελετῇ· ἵνα κελεύσωσι τὰ τοιαῦτα κωλυθῆναι καὶ ἐκ τῶν πόλεων καὶ ἐκ τῶν κτήσεων· μάλιστα, ὅτι καὶ ἐν αὐτοῖς τοῖς γενεσίοις τῶν μακαρίων μαρτύρων ἀνά τινας πόλεις καὶ εἰς αὐτοὺς τοὺς ἱεροὺς τόπους τὰ τοιαῦτα πλημμελήματα φωρῶνται· ἐν αἷς ἡμέραις, ὅπερ καὶ λέγειν αἰσχρὴν ἐστίν, ὀρχήσεις μυσταρεῖς εἰς τοὺς ἀγροὺς καὶ εἰς τὰς πλατείας ἐκτελοῦσι, ὥστε τῇ τῶν οἰκοδοσποινῶν τιμῇ, καὶ ἄλλων ἀναριθμήτων γυναικῶν τῇ αἰδοῖ τῶν εὐλαβῶν εἰς τὴν ἀγίαν ἡμέραν παραγενομένων, λάγναις ὕβρεσιν ἐφορμᾷ· ὥς καὶ αὐτῆς τῆς ἀγίας πίστεως σχεδὸν φεύγεσθαι τὴν προσέλευσιν.—Cod. Canon. Eccles. Afric. can. 60. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 1086.]

Chapter i. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 104, Lin. 1.

It were not hard to shew the same considerations in the several things which are mentioned of in this Admonition: as for example in the ceremonies of prayer, which is here to be handled, we read that
Lib. de Anima. Tertullian would not have the Christians sit after they had prayed, because the idolaters did so. But, having shewed this in general to be the policy of God first, and of his people afterward, to put as much difference as can be commodiously between the people of God and others which are not, I shall not need to shew the same in the particulars.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If “it were not too hard,” I doubt not but that you would say something more in the matter than you have done. I know not to what purpose you have alleged Tertullian for not “sitting after prayer, &c.,” except your meaning be that we shall not kneel in praying because the papists did use that gesture. Howbeit there is no such thing to be found in that book of Tertullian. Wherefore you are too careless in alleging your authors, and give too much credit, as it should seem, to other men’s collections. In his book De Oratione he reproveth certain that used to sit after prayer, alleging for their author Hermas, to whom the book called Pastor is ascribed: he sheweth that no such thing can be gathered of Hermas his words; and further addeth that this gesture is to be reprov’d, not only because idolaters did use it in worshipping their idols, but also because it is an unreverent gesture. His words be these: *Eo apponitur et irreverentie crimen, &c.*²: “Hereunto is added the fault of unreverence, that Tertullian.

[² Item quod adsignata oratione assidendi mos est quibusdam, non perspicio rationem, nisi si Hermas ille, cujus scriptura fere Pastor inscribitur, transacta oratione non super lectum assedisset, verum aliud quid fecisset, id quoque ad observationem vindicaremus... Imo contra scripturam fecerit, si quis in cathedra, might be understood even of the gentiles themselves, if they were wise; for it is an unreverent thing to sit in the sight and against the face of him whom thou wouldest especially reverence and worship: how much more is this deed most profane in the sight of the living God, his angel being as yet present at this prayer." Truly, your general reasons hitherto used are neither of sufficient policy nor might to deface a book with so great wisdom, learning, and zeal collected and approved. If your particular reasons be no better, a small confutation will serve.

Chapter i. The Eleventh Division.

T. C. Page 104, Sect. 1.

Furthermore, as the wisdom of God hath thought it the best way to keep his people from infection of idolatry to make them most unlike the idolaters; so hath the same wisdom of God thought good that, to keep his people in the unity of the truth, there is no better way than that they should be most like one to another, and that, as much as possibly may be, they should have all the same ceremonies. And therefore St Paul, to establish this order in the church of Corinth, that they should make their gatherings for the poor upon the first day of the sabbath (which is our Sunday), allegeth this for a reason, that he had so ordained in other churches; so that, as children of one father, and servants of one family, he will have all the churches not only have one diet, in that they have one word, but also wear (as it were) one livery in using the same ceremonies. ^{1 Cor. xvi. 1.1}

JO. WHITGIFT.

You take upon you to tell what "the wisdom of God is," without any warrant of God's word, which is presumption².

aut subsellio sederit. Porro cum perinde faciant nationes adoratis sigillaribus suis residendo, vel propterea in nobis reprehendi meretur quod apud idola celebratur. Eo apponitur et irreverentiæ crimen, etiam ipsis nationibus, si quid saperent, intelligendum. Siquidem irreverens est assidere sub conspectu contraque conspectum ejus, quem cum maxime reverearis ac venereris: quanto magis sub conspectu Dei vivi angelo adhuc orationis astante factum istud irreligiosissimum est, nisi exprobramus Deo quod nos oratio fatigaverit.—Tertull. Op. Franek. 1597. De Orat. 12. p. 123.]

[¹ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[² Cartwright asserts that he had taken one of his reasons out of St Paul, and therefore censures Whitgift for that "in his answer he feareth not to say that I 'speak without any warrant of God's word.' As if St Paul's authority were no word of God with him; which if I had abused, why did he not convince me?"—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 182.]

I told you before, that in outward shew and form the Israelites had many things like unto the gentiles, which cannot be denied. Unity of ceremonies is to be wished in all churches, though it be not so necessary; for from the beginning there hath been therein great variety; but, seeing it is a thing so greatly to be desired, why are you an occasion of the contrary? why do you not submit yourself³ to the church, that unity in all things may be observed?

Chapter i. The Twelfth Division.

T. C. Page 104, Sect. 2.

*Conc. Nic.
can. 20.*

This rule did the great council of Nice follow, when it ordained that, where certain at the feast of Pentecost did pray kneeling, that they should pray standing; the reason whereof is added, which is that one custom ought to be kept throughout all the churches⁴. It is true that the diversity of ceremonies ought not to cause the churches to dissent one with another, but yet it maketh much to the avoiding of dissension, that there be amongst them an unity, not only in doctrine but also in ceremonies.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is to be wished throughout the whole church of Christ, if it were possible; but, as it never was hitherto, so will it not be as long as this world lasteth; and, lest it should be in this particular church of England, Satan hath stirred up instruments to procure the contrary; wherefore in these words, as I think, you condemn yourself and all other disturbers of the church for external rites and ceremonies.

Chapter i. The Thirteenth Division.

T. C. Page 104, Sect. 2.

Now we see plainly that, as the form of our service and liturgy cometh too near that of the papists, so is⁵ it far different from that of other churches reformed, and therefore in both these respects to be amended.

JO. WHITGIFT.

From what “reformed church doth it so far differ?” or to which “reformed church” would you have it framed? or

[³ You self, Def. B.]

[⁴ Ἐπειδὴ τινὲς εἰσιν ἐν τῇ κυριακῇ γόνυ κλίνοντες, καὶ ἐν ταῖς τῆς πεντηκοστῆς ἡμέραις ὑπὲρ τοῦ πάντα ἐν πάσῃ παροικίᾳ φυλάττεσθαι, ἐστῶτας ἔδοξε τῇ ἀγίᾳ συνόδῳ τὰς εὐχὰς ἀποιδιδόναι τῷ Θεῷ.—Concil. Nic. can. 20. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. cols. 37, 40.]

[⁵ It is, Repl. 1 and 2.]

To frame all churches after one is dangerous. why should not other "reformed churches" as well frame themselves unto us? for we are as well assured of our doctrine, and have as good grounds and reasons for our doing as they have; except you will bring in a new Rome, appoint unto us another head church, and create a new pope, by whom we must be in all things directed, and according to whose usage we must frame ourselves.

You know what M. Calvin saith in the argument upon the epistle to the Galatians, speaking of those that came from Jerusalem to other churches: "Many were puffed up (saith he) with vain-glory, because they were familiar with the apostles, or at the least were instructed in their school; therefore nothing pleased them but that which they had seen at Jerusalem: all other rites that were not there used they did not only refuse, but boldly condemn. Such a kind of frowardness is a most pestilent mischief, when as we will have the manner of one church to be in place of an universal law. But this ariseth of a preposterous zeal, whereby we are so affected towards one master or place, that without judgment or consideration we would bind all men and places unto the opinion of one man, and unto the orders of one place, as unto a common rule. Albeit there is always mixed ambition: yea, rather always too much frowardness is ambitious¹." The like saying he hath upon the xv. of the Acts: "Luke doth not express by what affection these varlets were moved; yet is it very like that a preposterous zeal was the cause that they set themselves against Paul and Barnabas; for there are froward wits, whom nothing but their own can please. They had seen at Jerusalem circumcision and other rites of the law to be observed; and whithersoever they come they can abide no new thing or divers; as if the example of one church did bind all other churches, as with a certain law. But, although such men are led with a preposterous zeal to move tumults, yet in-Calv. in argu.

in Epist. ad Gal.

A pestilent mischief.

Preposterous zeal.

Ambitious frowardness.

Idem in 15.
Act.

Froward
wits.

Ambition.

[¹ Sed multi erant stulta gloria inflati, quod familiares fuissent apostolis, vel saltem in eorum schola instituti. Ideo nihil illis placebat, nisi quod Jerosolymis vidissent: alios omnes ritus illic non usitatos, non tantum respuebant, sed audacter etiam damnabant. Talis morositas, deterrima est pestis: quum morem ecclesiæ unius volumus pro universali lege valere. Nascitur autem ex præposito zelo, quum erga magistrum aliquem vel locum ita sumus affecti, ut sine judicio loca omnia et omnes homines velimus ad unius hominis sensum, ad unius loci instituta, tanquam ad commune præscriptum adigere, quanquam semper admista est ambitio: imo semper nimia morositas est ambitiosa.—Calvin, Op. Amst. 1667-71. Arg. in Epist. ad Galat. Tom. VII. p. 278.]

wardly their ambition moveth them, and a certain kind of contumacy pricketh them forward. In the meantime, Satan hath that which he desireth, that the minds of the godly, being darkened with the smoke and mists that he casteth, can scant discern black from white. Therefore this mischief is first to be avoided, that none prescribe unto other a law of their custom; lest the example of one church be prejudicial to the common rule. Then another caution must be added, lest the estimation of men's persons do either hinder or obscure the search and inquiry of the matter and cause. For, if Satan do transform himself into an angel of light, and if he oftentimes usurp with wicked audacity the holy name of God; what marvel is it if through the same wickedness he delude with the names of godly men²?"

To frame all churches after one is dangerous.

A necessary caution.

M. Gualter also upon these words, 1 Cor. xiv., An a vobis sermo Dei profectus est? writeth thus: "Who can think their insolency to be tolerable, that usurp authority over all churches, and will have them servilely to be subject unto them? Therefore that which Paul here presently saith to the Corinthians, the self-same may at this day with better right be spoken to the Romish clergy, which will have all men subject to their laws, and say that it is necessary unto salvation that all souls should be subject to the bishop of Rome. These things may also be applied against those which compel every man to swear unto the opinion of their master, as though it were sin never so little to disagree from those things which he hath once uttered. And their ambition also is no less here re-proved, which go about to bring all churches unto the form of their order and discipline, and cry out that there is no

Gualter in 1 Cor. xiv.

[² Non exprimit quidem Lucas quo affectu impulsī fuerint isti nebulones: verisimile tamen est κακοζήλιαν in causa fuisse, ut se Paulo et Barnabæ opposerent. sunt enim morosa quædam ingenia, quibus nihil placet, nisi suum. Jerosolymæ circumcisionem, et alios legis ritus viderant servari: quocunque veniant, nihil possunt novum aut diversum ferre: quasi unius ecclesiæ exemplum reliquas omnes certa lege obstringat. Etsi autem tales præpostero zelo feruntur ad movendas turbas: intus tamen sua eos sollicitat ambitio, et contumacia quædam instigat. Interea habet Satan quod cupit, ut fumorum objectu confusæ piorum mentes vix nigrum ab albo discernant. Cavenda igitur primum hæc pestis, ne legem alii aliis ex suo more perscribant: ne unius ecclesiæ exemplum communis regulæ præjudicium sit. deinde adhibenda altera cautio, ne hominum personæ, rei et causæ disquisitionem vel impediunt, vel obscurant. nam si Satan se transfigurat in angelum lucis, et si sanctum Dei nomen sacrilega audacia sæpe usurpat: quid mirum est, si eadem improbitate sanctorum virorum nominibus illudat?—Id. Comm. in Act. Apost. cap. xv. l. Tom. VI. p. 134.]

To frame all churches after one is dangerous.

discipline where all things are not correspondent to their orders and statutes; but these men receive a just reward of their arrogance, when as they which come from them to other countries do go beyond all other in saucy malapertness; neither bring they anything with them from home, but a vain and intolerable contempt of all good men; neither can they abide that they should be corrected by any admonition of others. &c.¹

Beware of ambitious morosity, and take heed of a new popedom. I think no church is so bound to the example of another, but that in external rites and ceremonies there is free liberty given unto it to appoint what shall be for the present state and time most convenient. You may not bind us to follow any particular church, neither ought you to consent to any such new servitude².

Chapter i. The Fourteenth Division

T. C. Page 104, Sect. 3.

Another fault there is in the whole service or liturgy of England, for that it maintaineth an unpreaching ministry; and so consequently an unlawful ministry; I say it maintaineth, not so much in that it appointeth a number of psalms and other prayers and chapters to be read, which may occupy the time which is to be spent in preaching, wherein notwithstanding it ought to have been more wary, considering that the devil under this colour of long prayer did thus in the kingdom of antichrist banish preaching—I say not so much in that point, as for that it requireth

Argu. a non causa.

[¹ Aut quis tolerabilem putet esse eorum insolentiam, qui sibi ipsi in omnes ecclesias jus sumunt, et eas sibi serviliter subjectas esse volunt? Quod ergo in præsentī Paulus Corinthiis dicit, hoc ipsum hodie meliori jure Romanensibus dici poterat, qui suis legibus omnes subijci volunt, et de necessitate salutis esse dicunt, ut omnes animæ Romano pontifici subjiciantur. Sed et in eos ista conveniunt, qui quosvis in sui magistri verba jurare cogunt, quasi nefas sit ab iis vel latum unguem discedere, quæ ille semel effutivit. Nec minus illorum quoque ambitio hic arguitur, qui omnes ecclesias ad suæ æconomiae sive disciplinæ formam reducere conantur, et disciplinam illic nullam haberi clamant, ubi non omnia ipsorum traditionibus sive statutis respondent. Sed iidem dignas suæ arrogantiae pœnas exolvunt, quando qui ab illis veniunt ad externos, petulantia quosvis alios superant, nec aliquid domo secum adferunt, quam immanem et intolerabilem optimorum quorumque contemptum, neque ullis aliorum admonitionibus sese coerceri sinunt. &c.—R. Gualther. In Prior. ad Corinth. Epist. Hom. Tigr. 1578. Hom. lxxvi. fol. 223. 2.]

[² “That out of M. Calvin, and Gualter, only serveth for filling. For we confess that for indifferent ceremonies neither the churches ought to fall out with themselves, nor any member sever himself from the church.”—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 183.]

necessarily nothing to be done by the minister which a child of ten year old cannot do as well and as lawfully as that man wherewith the book contenteth itself.

To frame all churches after one is dangerous.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is a strange collection, that the book of common prayer "maintaineth an unpreaching ministry," because "it appointeth a number of psalms and other prayers and chapters to be read, which may occupy the time that is to be spent in preaching." Would you have preaching only, and neither reading nor praying in the public congregation? or do you think that the chapters and prayers that are read occupy too long time? or are you persuaded that there cometh no profit by reading and praying? If you mean the first, you have the examples of the churches in all places, and at all times against you; if you mean the second, the time is not so long that is spent in praying and reading, but that there may be preaching also: the longest time (if there be no communion) is not more than an hour; and can you spend that hour better than in praying and hearing the scriptures read³? If you mean the third, I shall have occasion to speak more of it hereafter.

But you say it doth not so much maintain an unpreaching ministry in that point, "as for that it requireth nothing necessarily to be done by the minister which a child of ten years old cannot do as well and as lawfully as that man wherewith the book contenteth itself." It requireth of him (besides plain and distinct reading) the administration of the sacraments; and may a child of ten years old do that also⁴? Who seeth not that you are of purpose set to deface the book, though it be with childish reasons? Because a child may read the book, doth it therefore maintain an unpreaching ministry? you might as well say that, because a child of ten years old can read the bible translated into English, therefore the bible translated into English maintaineth an unpreaching ministry. This argument is a non causa.

T. C. seeketh to deface the book without reason.

[³ "Whereunto I answer that, if with that hour he allow another for the sermon, the time will be longer than the age of some, and infirmities of other some, can ordinarily well bear. Whereunto also if another hour, at the least, be added for the celebration of the holy communion, he may see that either the preaching must be abridged, or not so due regard had of men's infirmities."—Ibid. pp. 184, 5.]

[⁴ "No forsooth, but yet as well as he which can but barely read, if he have the same calling; which, being that which I affirmed, he is not able to move with one word of reason."—Ibid. p. 185.]

Some may minister the sacraments which do not preach.

Chapter i. The Fifteenth Division.

T. C. Page 104, Sect. 3.

Neither can it be shifted in saying this is done for want of able men to be ministers; for it may be easily answered that first the want of sufficient ministers ought to be no cause for men to break the unchangeable laws of God, which be, that none may be made minister of the church which cannot teach, that none minister the sacraments which do not preach. For, although it might be granted (which thing I would not deny, no, not when there are enough sufficient ministers) that they may appoint some godly grave man which can do nothing else but read to be a reader in the church, yet that may not be granted that they may make of one that can do nothing but read a minister of the gospel, or one which may have power to minister the sacraments.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Some may minister the sacraments which do not preach.

Where is that “unchangeable law of God, that none may minister the sacraments which do not preach?” what scripture or authority have you for it? Chrysostom, Hom. 3. 1 Cor. i., upon these words: Non enim misit me Christus ut baptizare, &c., saith thus: “He saith not, I was forbidden, but I am not sent to do this, but to do that which was more necessary. *Evangelizare enim perpaucorum est, baptizare autem cujuslibet, modo fungatur sacerdotio*¹: for few can preach the gospel; but every man may baptize that is a priest.”

Chrysost.

Ambrose.

And Ambrose, upon the same words and chapter, saith thus: Non omnis qui baptizat idoneus est...evangelizare; verba enim solennia sunt quæ dicuntur in baptismo. &c.²: “Every one which baptizeth is not apt to preach the gospel; for the words that are spoken in baptism are usual: to conclude, the apostle Peter commanded other to baptize Cornelius, neither did he vouchsafe to do it himself, other ministers being present; &c.”

[¹ Οὐ γὰρ εἶπεν, ὅτι ἐκωλύθη, ἀλλ', ὅτι οὐκ ἀπεστάλην ἐπὶ τούτῳ, ἀλλ' ἐπὶ τῷ ἀναγκαιοτάτῳ. τὸ μὲν γὰρ εὐαγγελίζεσθαι, ἐνός που καὶ δευτέρου, τὸ δὲ βαπτίζειν, παντός ἂν εἴη τοῦ τὴν ἱερωσύνην ἔχοντος.—Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Epist. i. ad Corinth. Hom. iii. Tom. X. p. 18.]

[² ... non &c. baptismo. Denique apostolus Petrus credentem Cornelium cum suis jussit baptizari, nec dignatus est, ministris adstantibus, hoc opus facere; &c.—Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Corinth. prim. cap. i. v. 17. Tom. II. Append. col. 114.]

Peter Martyr, writing upon the same words of the apostle, saith likewise: "Therefore the office of baptizing was committed to every one in the church, but not the office of preaching. Neither is it to be doubted but the apostles themselves would have baptized if there had lacked other ministers. But, seeing there was many whom they might win to the gospel by preaching, they committed them to other to be baptized³."

Some may minister the sacraments which do not preach. Peter Martyr.

So saith M. Calvin also upon the same words: "Few there were to whom the office of preaching was committed, but to baptize was committed to many; &c."⁴

Zuinglius, in his book De Baptismo, of this matter speaketh thus: "The disciples administered the external baptism once, with doctrine and the Spirit; for Christ taught; and they did baptize; as it appeareth, Joh. iv. And Paul said, 'Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach;' therefore some taught; and other some baptized⁵."

Zuinglius.

Musculus also, in his Common-places, declareth that "in some churches some were admitted to minister the sacraments that were not admitted to preach⁶." And he doth not disallow that manner, but alloweth it.

Musculus in Loc. Com. de cœna Domini.

And M. Beza, Lib. Conf. cap. v., saith that "it was the office of pastors and doctors generally to dispense the word, and to pray; under the which also we comprehend the administration of sacraments and the celebration of marriage, according to the continual custom of the church; although deacons in these things oftentimes supplied the offices⁷ of Beza.

[³ Munus tingendi cuius in ecclesia committi potest, non item munus evangelizandi. Nec dubium est, quin si alii ministri defuissent, apostoli profecto baptizassent. At quando illorum copia erat, ut hinc videre licet, quos Christo crucifecerant sua prædicatione, aliis tingendos delegabant.—P. Martyr. Comm. in D. Pauli prior. ad Corinth. Epist. Tigur. 1572. cap. i. fol. 9. 2.]

[⁴ ... sed quum paucorum esset docere, pluribus autem baptizare datum foret: &c.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. i. ad Corinth. cap. i. 17. Tom. VII. p. 116.]

[⁵ Baptismum externum, qui aqua fit, citra omnem doctrinam et spiritum, discipuli olim contulerunt. Ii enim Christo docente, sed non baptizante, baptizabant, quemadmodum ex Joan. 4. et 1 Corinth. 1. paulo ante demonstravimus. Paulus enim, Non misit me, inquit, Christus, ut baptizarem, sed ut evangelizarem. Alii ergo docebant, alii vero baptizabant.—H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1581. De Bapt. Lib. Pars II. fol. 61. 2.]

[⁶ Scio quibusdam ecclesiis hoc esse in more, ut ministri verbi loco fungantur prophetarum et doctorum, et interim paracis ac plebanis, ut vocant, cum diaconis sacramentorum administrationem relinquant. &c.—Wolfg. Muscul. Loc. Comm. Theolog. Basil. 1599. De Cœn. Dom. p. 369.]

[⁷ Office, Def. A.]

pastors¹." And to prove this he quoteth 1 Cor. i. verse 14, 15, &c., and John iv. verse 2.

So do other learned men in like manner; who also bring for their purpose that which is written, 1 Tim. v. : Qui bene præsunt presbyteri, &c. So that you may understand that learned men be of this judgment, that some may be admitted to administer the sacraments which are not admitted to preach.

I know it to be true that there may be some appointed to read in the church, which be not admitted either to preach or to administer the sacraments. For so it was in the primitive church; as it is to be seen in ancient stories and writers. But, because you would have nothing used in the church, especially no office appointed without a commandment in the word of God, I pray you, tell where you have either commandment or example for such kind of readers. I do but demand this, that the reader may understand what liberty you challenge unto yourself of allowing and disallowing what you list, and when you list, without that warrant of God's word, to the which you so straitly bind all other.

Chapter i. The Sixteenth Division.

T. C. Page 104, Sect. 4.

Besides that, how can they say that it is for want of sufficient ministers, when as there be put out of the ministry men that be able to serve God in that calling, and those put in their rooms which are not able, when there are numbers also which are fit to serve, and never sought for, nor once required to take any ministry upon them? If therefore it were lawful to plead want of able ministers for this dumb ministry, which is altogether unlawful, yet would this plea never be good until such time as both those were restored which are put out, and all other sought forth, and called upon which are fit for that purpose.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You know what was before alleged out of the confession of the churches of Helvetia, that "the harmless simplicity of some shepherds in the old church did sometimes more profit

Confess.
Helv.

[¹ Horum doctorum [pastorum et doctorum] officium est in genere, administrando sermoni, et precibus habendis incumbere, sub quibus etiam comprehendimus sacramentorum administrationem, et nuptiarum benedictionem ex perpetuo ecclesiæ usu, quamvis sæpe diaconi in his rebus suppleverint pastorum vices.—Th. Bezæ Confess. Christ. Fid. Genev. 1537. cap. v. 25. p. 238.]

the church than the great, exquisite, or fine or delicate, but a little too proud, learning of some others²." A great sort think too well of themselves, and be of nature unquiet; such of necessity (if by no means they can be kept in order) must be removed; for the church may not for their sake be rent and torn in pieces; neither must you that so well allow of discipline burden other men with it, and cast it off yourselves. There is none in this church of England removed from his ministry but upon just causes; and ministers must be subject to laws and orders.

Unquiet natures must be removed.

Those that be willing to come into the ministry lack no provoking nor moving thereunto, if they be known; but it is you and your company which labour by all means possible to dehorte men from the ministry, persuading them that the calling is not ordinary and lawful. And surely your meaning is to make this church destitute of ministers, that it may of necessity be driven to admit your platform and government. But you shall never be able to bring it to pass: the more you labour, the more you are detected. And those wise men that seek the truth in sincerity of conscience will espy your purposes daily more and more, and be moved to a just misliking of them.

The ministry hindered, and by whom.

The restitution of those that "be put out of the ministry" I think is soon obtained, if they will submit themselves to the order of the church, which they ought of duty to do, both the laws of God and man requiring the same.

Chapter i. The Seventeenth Division.

T. C. Page 104, Sect. ult.

Again, it cannot be said justly that they have taken these reading ministers until such time as better may be gotten; for, if the church could procure able ministers, and should desire that they might be ordained over them, they cannot obtain that, considering that these reading ministers have a freehold and an estate for term of their lives in those churches of the which they are such ministers; so that by this means the sheep are not only committed to an idol shepherd, I might say a wolf, and speak no otherwise than Augustine speaketh³, in that a not preaching minister hath entrance into the church, but the door also is shut upon him and sparred¹ against any able minister that might happily² be found out.

[² Confess. et Expos. Fid. Christ. cap. xviii. in Corp. et Syntagm. Confess. Fid. Genev. 1654. p. 38. See Vol. I. page 333, note 1.]

[³ Videtis quam sit tacere periculosum? Moritur ille, et recte moritur: in impietate sua et peccato suo moritur; negligentia enim ejus [pastoris] occidit eum.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Serm. xlvi. 20. De Past. in Ezek. xxxiv. Tom. V. col. 235. This is the passage which Cartwright (Sec. Repl. p. 373) declares he meant.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

And would you so gladly intrude yourselves into some of their rooms? Surely I believe it; and it is not unknown but that some of you have laboured to do it. Well, I have before told you the judgment of the reformed churches touching such ministers as be not able to preach, being otherwise virtuous and godly. I have also set down the opinion of divers learned and godly men concerning ministers admitted to minister the sacraments, which notwithstanding cannot preach. If any man use himself in his ministry lewdly, or otherwise than beseemeth him, "his estate for term of life" is not so sure, but that he may be dispossessed of the same. Otherwise, if he use himself honestly, and as it becometh him, though he have not the gift of preaching (which notwithstanding is to be wished), God forbid that either you or any man else should seek to displace him, that you might enjoy the room yourselves. And surely, if the minister were but tenant at will, or of courtesy (as you would seem to have him), his state should be most slavish and miserable, and he and his family ready to go a begging whensoever he displeaseth his parish.

If you had told me where Augustine speaketh that, I should have quickly let you understand his meaning; but his books be many and large, the sentence you allege short, and therefore it were too much for me to search it out. Moreover, it improveth nothing now in question. But with what face can you flout and jest at me for once or twice not quoting the chapter or leaf, yourself so often offending in quoting neither chapter, leaf, book, nor tome?

Chapter i. The Eighteenth Division.

T. C. Page 105, Sect. 1.

There is a third fault which likewise appeareth almost in the whole body of this service and liturgy of England, and that is that the profit which might have come by it unto the people is not reaped; whereof the cause is for that he which readeth is not in some places³ heard, and in the most places not understood of the people, through the distance of place between the people and the minister; so that a great part of the people cannot of knowledge tell whether he hath cursed them or blessed them, whether he hath read in Latin or in English; all the which riseth upon the words of the book of service, which are that the minister should stand in the accustomed place; for thereupon the minister in saying morning and evening prayer sitteth in the chancel with his back to the people, as though he had some secret talk with God which the people might not hear. And hereupon it is likewise, that, after morning prayer, for saying another number of prayers he climbeth up to the further end of the chancel, and runneth as far from the people as the wall will let him, as though there were some variance between the people and the minister, or as though he were afraid of some infection of plague; and indeed it reneweth the memory of the Levitical priesthood, which did withdraw himself from the people into the place called the holiest place, where he talked with God and offered for the sins of the people.

[¹ Sparred or speared : closed, fastened.]

[² Haply, Answ. 2.]

[³ Place, Def. A. and B.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

This nothing toucheth the order or substance of the book, and therefore no sufficient reason against it, if it were true. But you herein deal as you have done in other matters, that is, corruptly and untruly. For you do not report the words of the book concerning this matter as they be indeed; and it is wonderful, and argueth great impudency, that you are not ashamed to report untruly in so public a cause. The words of the book be these: "The morning and evening prayer shall be used in the accustomed place of the church, chapel, or chancel, except it shall be otherwise determined by the ordinary of the place." And you, leaving out all the rest, say that "the words of the book of service are that the minister should stand in the accustomed place;" as though it bound him of necessity to the chancel, which is nothing so. But you must be borne with; your errors and disorders cannot otherwise be maintained but by falsifying. I think there are but few churches in England where the bishops have not taken a very good order for the place of prayer: if any bishop have neglected it, the fault is in the bishop, not in the book.

Corrupt dealing.

Errors and disorder maintained
by falsifying.

But still I must desire the reader to note the weightiness of the reasons whereby you go about to deface the book of common prayer.

Chapter i. The Nineteenth Division.

T. C. Page 105, Sect. 2.

Likewise for marriage he cometh back again into the body of the church, and for baptism unto the church-door: what comeliness, what decency, what edifying is this? Decency (I say) in running and trudging from place to place: edifying, in standing in that place, and after that sort, where he can worst be heard¹ and understood. St Luke sheweth that in the primitive church both the prayers and preachings, and the whole exercise of religion, was done otherwise. For he sheweth how St Peter, sitting amongst the rest, to the end he might be *Acts i. 15.*² the better heard, rose, and not that only, but that he stood in the midst of the people, that his voice might as much as might be come indifferently to all their ears, and so standing both prayed and preached. Now, if it be said for the chapters and litany there is commandment given that they should be read in the body of the church, indeed it is true; and thereof is easily perceived this disorder which is in saying the rest of the prayers, partly in the hither end, and partly in the further end of the chancel; for, seeing that those are read in the body of the church, that the people may both hear and understand what is read, what should be the cause why the rest should be read further³ off? Unless it be that either those things are not to be heard of them, or, at the least, not so necessary for them to be heard as the other which are recited in the body or midst of the church. And, if it be further said that the book leaveth that to the discretion of the ordinary, and that he may reform it if there be anything amiss, then it is easily answered again that, besides that it is against reason that the commodity and edifying of the church should depend upon the pleasure of one man, so that upon his either good or evil advice and discretion it should be well or evil with the church—besides this (I say), we see by experience of the disorders which are in many churches and dioceses in this behalf, how that, if it were lawful to commit such authority unto one man, yet that it is not safe so to do, considering that they have so evil quitted themselves in their charges, and that in a matter, the inconvenience whereof is⁴ so easily seen and so easily reformed, there is notwithstanding so great and so general an abuse.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Weighty reasons against the book.

These be passing weighty arguments to overthrow the book, and come from a deep and profound judgment: if I should use the like, you would wipe them away with scoffing. The book appointeth that the “persons to be married shall come into the body of the church, with their friends and neighbours, there to be married;” and what fault can you find in this? Is not the midst of the church the most meet place for such a matter? The book speaketh neither of the coming back of the minister, nor his going forward; these be but your jests; and yet must he go both backward and forward, if he

[¹ Hard, Repl. 1; harde, Repl. 2.]

[² This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[³ Farther, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ Being, Repl. 2.]

will either come into the church, or go out of it. For baptism the book appointeth no place; but, because there is no just cause known why the font should be removed, therefore the minister doth stand where that is placed, which is somewhere in one place, somewhere in another; for I know divers places where it is in the midst of the church, some place where it is in the nethermost part; I know no place where it standeth at the church-door. And therefore in saying that "for baptism the minister goeth to the church-door," you do but counterfeit.

No man denieth but that both praying and preaching, &c., ought to be in that place where it may be best heard of all; and therefore the book doth prudently leave it to the discretion of the bishop. But the midst is not the fittest place for that purpose. He that standeth in the midst of the church hath some behind him, some before him, and some of each side of him: those which be behind, or on the sides, cannot so well hear as those that be before; as experience teacheth in sermons at the Spittle, at the cross in Paul's, and other places. Wherefore in my opinion that place in the church is most fittest, both for praying and preaching, where the minister may have the people before him, except the church be so great and the people so many that he cannot be heard of them, then there ought to be some regard thereof.

St Luke telleth what St Peter did in the congregation, he doth not prescribe any general rule: every circumstance that is told in the scriptures is not straightway to be made an inviolable rule of all men to be followed. The place is not material; so that it be such as the people may well hear and understand that which is read and preached.

Concerning the lessons which are to be read, the book prescribeth no place, only it willeth the minister "to stand and to turn him so as he may best be heard of all such as be present:" and are you offended at that? Neither doth the book appoint any certain place for the litany to be said in. And therefore you do but dally and trifle.

The ordinary is the meetest man to whose discretion those things should be left, both for his learning and wisdom, and also that there may be one uniform order in his diocese: if any ordinary be careless in such matters, if you will complain of him, I am sure you shall be heard. But your delight and pleasure is to be girding at bishops, though the cause be forged¹.

Chapter i. The Twentieth Division.

T. C. Page 105, Sect. 3.

Untrue.

And the end of the order in the book is to be observed, which is to keep the prayers in the accustomed place of the church, chapel, or chancel; which how maketh it to edification? And thus for the general faults committed either in the whole liturgy, or in the most part of it, both that I may have no need to repeat the same in the particulars, and that I be not compelled always to enter a new disputation, so oft as M. Doctor saith, very unskilfully and unlike a divine, whencesoever this or that come, so it be not evil, it may be well established in the church of Christ.

These be not my words.

JO. WHITGIFT.

What is "the end of the book" in that matter? why do you not express it? But you say it "is to keep the prayers in the accustomed places, &c." If this be the end, why doth the book admit alteration? do you not see yourself manifestly convinced by the book? I believe, and I am well assured, that the end is edification, whatsoever you imagine to the contrary. And undoubtedly you have found out marvellous weighty and witty reasons against "the whole liturgy, or the most part of it;" and the faults you have noted be very many and exceeding great. But have you no conscience in calling good evil? or are you not afraid upon so light quarrels to make such a schism in the church, and to bring so worthy a book into so great contempt? Well, you will one day be better advised, I doubt not; which truly I wish for, and hope for, how uncourteously soever you have used me.

[¹ "... he answereth nothing worth the naming. But the sum of his defence is, that the 'bishop hath power to order it, to the most edification.' Wherein how unlawful it is that he alone should have the order hereof is before declared; and how dangerous it is, let the practice in this point be judge. For I am assuredly persuaded that the tenth church in England hath not all the service said in that place where the whole church may best hear it; and withal note (as I said) what a shameful disorder is committed in a matter so easily remedied. The place of St Luke is an unchangeable rule to teach...His cavil of the place of the font, said of me to 'be at the church-door,' instead that I should have said, 'over against the church-door,' is unworthy the answer, especially considering that I spake more favourably for the book than he which by this answer sendeth the minister for baptism beneath the church-door...And this both separation of the minister by chancel, as 'monkish,' as also the often shifting of the minister's place, as a thing 'very absurd,' M. Bucer, both generally in all places, and particularly in our church, doth condemn."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. pp. 186, 7.]

That which M. Doctor saith so “unskilfully and unlike a divine” he hath learned of better and more skilful divines than either of us both be; that is, of Ambrose, and of Calvin; for the one saith: *Omne verum a quocumque dicitur a Spiritu sancto est*²: “All truth, of whomsoever it is spoken, is of the Holy Ghost;” the other: *Purus est multarum rerum usus, quarum vitiosa est origo*³: “The use of many things is pure, whose beginning is vicious and unpure.” But M. Doctor’s bare affirmation (if he had so used it) is of as good credit as your bare negation; but, when he hath learned men of his opinion and judgment, for you thus to shift it off is but to bewray your unableness to disprove it, either by authority or reason. You should at the least have made true report of my words, which you have not done, but dealt therein according to your accustomed manner; for my words be these, fol. 82.⁴: “It maketh no matter of whom it was invented, in what book it is contained, so that it be good and profitable, and consonant to God’s word;” and you report them thus: “Whencesoever this or that come, so it be not evil, it may be well established in the church of Christ.” If you have the truth, why do you thus go about to maintain it with lies? In so doing you hurt not me, but yourself, and your cause.

Calvinus in 5. Matt. vers.
37.

Page 82,
sect. 2.

¶ An examination of the particular faults, either in matter or form, wherewith the Book of Common Prayer is charged.

Chapter ii. The First Division.

T. C. Page 105, Sect. 3.

Now I come to the form of prayer which is prescribed, wherein the authors of the Admonition declare that their meaning is not to disallow of prescript service of prayer, but of this form that we have; for they expound themselves in the additions unto the first part of the Admonition.

A proper excuse.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Indeed they have retracted it in some point, which argueth they writ their book at the first with small advice, and less

[² ... quidquid enim verum a quocumque dicitur, a sancto dicitur Spiritu.—Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Corinth. prim. cap. xii. v. 3. Tom. II. Append. col. 150.]

[³ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Harm. Euang. Matt. v. 37. Tom. VI. p. 73.]

[⁴ See below, Tractat. x. chap. ii. div. 8.]

discretion. It is no "exposition," but a retractation or recantation; for the places of scripture which they quoted, and their very words, declare that they meant the contrary, and so doth their practice in secret conventicles. But now you come to my Answer, wherein you take what you list, and leave what you list, as you have hitherto done.

Chapter ii. The Second Division.

Admonition.

The fourteenth.

Then ministers were not so tied to any form of prayers ^ε Rom. viii. 26¹. invented by man, but, as the Spirit ^ε moved them, so they poured ¹ Tim. i. 2. forth² hearty supplications to the Lord. Now they are bound ^h Damascus the first inventor of this stuff, well furthered by Gregory the seventh. of necessity to a ^hprescript order of service and book of common prayer³.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 77, Sect. 3.

To prove that "ministers were not so tied to any form of prayer, invented by man, but that as the Spirit moved them, &c.," you quote Rom. viii. and the 1 Tim. i. In the eighth to the Romans the words be these: "Likewise also the Spirit helpeth our infirmities; for we know not what to pray as we ought; but the Spirit itself maketh request for us with sighs which cannot be expressed." This place speaketh nothing against any prescript form of prayer, for then it should disallow the Lord's prayer; but it teacheth us that it is the Spirit of God that stirreth us up to pray, and maketh us earnestly pour out our supplications unto God. And thus⁴ the Spirit worketh as well by prescript prayers as by prayers suddenly invented. The words to Timothy, Epist. i. ca. i, vers. 2, are far-fetched, and nothing to the purpose: the words be these: "Unto Timothy, my natural son in the faith, grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father, and from Christ Jesu our Lord." What maketh these words against any prescript form of prayers? peradventure you

A prescript order of prayer in the church⁵.

[¹ Adm. omits this reference.]

[² Any one form of prayers but as the Spirit moved them and as necessity of time required so they might pour forth, Adm.]

[³ Here Answ. continues the sentence of Adm. which is found below, page 495, and subsequently.]

[⁴ This, Answ.]

[⁵ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

would have alleged the 1 to Timo. ii. "I exhort therefore that, first of all, supplications, &c.;" which maketh directly against you.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Nothing answered to this.

Chapter ii. The Third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 78, Sect. 1.

If you mean by "prayers invented by man" such prayers as man inventeth against the word of God, as prayer for the dead, prayer unto saints, and such like, then it is true that you say. But, if you mean such prayers as by godly men be framed according to the holy scriptures, whether they be for matters pertaining to the life to come, or to this life, then you shew your ignorance; for it is manifest, that there hath been always in the church of Christ a prescript form of public prayer; as it appeareth in Justinus Martyr, Apol. ii. pro Christianis, and other ancient fathers: neither did ever any learned or godly man, or reformed church, find fault herewith, or not greatly commend the same, except only the sect of anabaptists.

Justinus Martyr.

T. C. Page 105, Sect. ult., and Page 106, Sect. 1.

It is not to any purpose that M. Doctor setteth himself to prove that there may be a prescript order of prayer by Justin Martyr's testimony, which notwithstanding hath not one word of prescript form of prayers; only he saith there were prayers; he saith indeed the ancient fathers say that there hath been always such kind of prayers in the churches; and, although they do say so, yet all men may understand easily that M. Doctor speaketh this rather by conjecture, or that he hath heard other men say so; forsomuch as that doctor which he hath chosen out to speak for all the rest hath no such thing as he fathereth on him. He saith that "after they have baptized they pray for themselves, and for him that is baptized, and for all men, that they may be meet to learn the truth, and to express it in their honest conversation, and that they be found to keep the commandments, that they may attain to eternal life;" but is this to say that there was a prescript form of prayer, when he sheweth nothing else but the chief points upon the which they conceived their prayers? If you had alleged this to prove what were the matters or principal points that the primitive church used to pray for, you had alleged this to purpose; but to allege it for a proof of a prescript form of prayer, when there is not there mentioned so much as the essential form of prayer (which is the asking of our petitions in the name and through the intercession of our Saviour Christ), without the which there is not, nor cannot be, any prayer, argueth that either you little know what the form of prayer is, or that you thought (as you charge the authors of the Admonition so often) that this gear of yours should never have come to the examination.

But, forasmuch as we agree of a prescript form of prayer to be used in the church, let that go: this that I have said is to shew that, when M. Doctor happeneth of a good cause, which is very seldom in this book, yet then he marreth it in the handling.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I have the less laboured in this point, because it is a thing so generally allowed of in all churches, in all times, and so unlearnedly impugned by the authors of the Admonition.

Justinus Martyr maketh much for my purpose; for, in that he doth rehearse those chief points of their prayers then used, it is manifest that they had a prescript order and form of prayer; the which no man can deny that readeth the place¹. I grant that these words, "prescript form of prayer," are not there to be found; yet is there a prescript order and form by him generally described; whereby it is more than probable that at that time there was used a prescript form of prayer. In the 3. council of Carthage we find this canon: "Let no man use the forms of prayer which he hath framed to himself, without conference with brethren that are better learned²." Whereby it may evidently be gathered, that at that time there was a prescript form of prayer used, and that it was not lawful to use any new form of private prayers, except the same were allowed by the brethren. But, forasmuch as in this point you consent with me, and grant that there may be a prescript form of prayer, I will omit whatsoever I had purposed to have said more in that matter; and so I will do also your taunts respecting the matter, rather than Lucian's rhetoric.

Conc. Carth.
III. Can. 23.

[¹ Just. Mart. Op. Par. 1742. Apol. i. 65, 7. pp. 32, 3. See Vol. I. page 215, note 4.]

[² Et quicumque sibi preces aliunde describit, non eis utatur, nisi prius eas cum instructoribus fratribus contulerit.—Concil. Carthag. III. can. 23. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. II. col. 1170.]

Chapter ii. The Fourth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 78, Sect. 2, 3.

Damasus was a good bishop, and therefore no good thing by him appointed to be disallowed; but he did not first ordain a prescript form of public prayers, he only added something thereunto; as Gloria Patri, &c., to the end of every psalm; and decreed that psalms should be sung as well in the night-time as in the day-time in every church⁴; but they were sung in the church before; and, as I have said, there was a prescript form of prayer in Justinus Martyr's time, who was long before Damasus.

Damasus added *Gloria Patri, &c.*³

Gregory added the litany only⁵. I muse what you mean to write so manifest untruths.

Gregory made the litany.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Nothing answered to this.

Chapter ii. The Fifth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 79, Sect. 1.

You note not here (neither are you able) any prayer in the whole communion-book, wherein there is any thing not agreeable to God's word. We may say as St Augustine⁶ saith in his 121. epistle written *ad Probam viduam: Etsi per omnia precationum sanctarum verba discurras, quantum existimo nihil invenies, quod non ista dominica contineat et concludat oratio. Unde liberum est aliis atque aliis verbis eadem tamen in orando dicere; sed non debet esse liberum alia dicere*⁷: "And, if thou runnest through all the words of the holy prayers, I suppose thou shalt find nothing which the Lord's prayer doth not contain and comprehend; therefore we may in Augustine.

[³ Answ. has not &c.]

[⁴ ... ut psalmi quoque alternis vicibus in ecclesia canerentur, in fineque eorum verba hæ[c] ponerentur, Gloria Patri et Filio et Spiritui Sancto, instituit.—Plat. De Vit. Pont. Col. 1551. Damas. I. p. 48.]

[⁵ Præterea vero supplicationes majores, quas Græci letanias vocant, primus instituit.—Id. ibid. Gregor. I. p. 73.]

[⁶ Austine, Answ.]

[⁷ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Prob. Epist. cxxx. cap. xii. 22. Tom. II. col. 391; where quod in ista dominica non contineatur et concludatur oratione.] other words speak the same things in our prayers, but we may not speak contrary things."

T. C. Page 106, Sect. 1, 2.

After he affirmeth that there can be nothing shewed in the whole book which is not agreeable to¹ the word of God.

I am very loth to enter into this field, albeit M. Doctor doth thus provoke me, both because the papists will lightly take occasion of evil-speaking when they understand that we do not agree amongst ourselves in every point, as for that some few professors of the gospel being private men, boldened upon such treatises, take such ways sometimes, and break forth into such speeches as are not meet nor convenient.

JO. WHITGIFT.

In so saying, I do fully agree with such as have learnedly and truly written against the common adversaries of this book; among whom there is one that wrote a book entituled, "A sparing Restraint of many lavish Untruths which M. Doctor Harding doth challenge in the first Article of my lord of Sarisbury's Reply." The author of that book writeth thus: "O M. Harding, turn again your writings, examine your authorities, consider your councils, apply your examples, look if any line be blameable in our service, and take hold of your advantage. I think M. Jewel will accept it for an article." And a little after: "Our service is good and godly, every tittle grounded on holy scriptures; and with what face do you call it darkness?" This was his opinion then of our service. And it both was then, and is now my full persuasion; and I will (God willing) perform that against you which be offered in M. Jewel his name against Harding.

A sparing Restraint.

The Replier
his words
contrary to his deeds.

Your "lothness to enter into this field" is but dissembled; your continual barking against the state and form of this church of England doth convince you of the contrary. Neither have you any respect or regard for giving occasion of evil speech to the papists, much less of provoking your adherents to undutiful speeches (as you pretend), your book tending wholly to the contrary.

[¹ Unto, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² A sparing Restraint, of many laushe Vntruthes, which M. Doctor Harding dothe challenge, in the first Article of my Lorde of Sarisburies Replie. By Edward Dering, Lond. p. 5; where again to your writings, it as an article, and do ye call it.]

Chapter ii. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 106, Sect. 3.

Notwithstanding, my duty of defending the truth, and love which I have first towards God and then towards my country, constraineth me being thus provoked to speak a few words more particularly of the form of prayer, that when the blemishes thereof do appear it may please the queen's majesty and her honourable council, with those of the parliament whom the Lord hath used as singular instruments to deliver this realm from the hot furnace and iron yoke of the popish Egypt, to procure also that the corruptions which we have brought from them (as those with which we being so deeply dyed and stained have not so easily shaken off) may be removed from amongst us, to the end that we, being nearer both joined unto the sincerity of the gospel, and the policy of other reformed churches, may thereby be joined nearer with the Lord, and may be set so far from Rome that both we may comfort ourselves in the hope that we shall never return thither again, and our adversaries which desire it, and, by this too much agreement with them, and too little with the reformed churches, hope for it, may not only be deceived of their expectation, but also, being out of all hope of that which they do desire³, may the sooner yield themselves unto the truth whereunto they are now disobedient.

JO. WHITGIFT.

What "duty" can there be in defacing a known and received truth? what "love," in slandering your country unjustly, and renting it in pieces with sects and schisms, and provoking the subjects to have misliking of their magistrates, and such as be placed in authority over them? these be but cloaks to cover an evil and ungodly purpose. If you shall be able to shew any such blemishes in the book of common prayers, they shall not be covered for me; but if not, then are you not a man to be credited.

I have told you M. Calvin's and M. Gualter's opinion touching the ambitious morosity of such as would have all churches framed after the example of some one⁴; and now I tell you again, that there is no cause why this church of England, either for truth of doctrine, sincerity of public divine service, and other policy, should give place to any church in Christendom; and sure I am, that we are as near joined with the Lord our God as the members are to the body, and the body to the head.

Supra, cap. 1.
the 13. division.

[³ They desire, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁴ See before, pages 452, &c.]

The adversaries' hope is in contention.

Our "adversaries" have no such "hope" upon any such occasion as you pretend; if their hope be any, it is especially in your contentions.

Wherein do we agree with the papists? or wherein do we dissent from the reformed churches? with these we have all points of doctrine and substance common; from the other we dissent, in the most part both of doctrine and ceremonies. From what spirit come these bold and untrue speeches?

Chapter ii. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 106, Sect. 4.

And, as for the papists' triumph in this case, I shall not greatly need to fear it, considering that their discords and contentions are greater, and that our strife is because we would be further from them. For the other that profess the gospel, I will desire in the name of God that they abuse not my labour to other end than I bestow it, and that they keep themselves in their callings, commit the matter by prayer unto the Lord, leaving to the ministers of the word of God, and to the magistrates, that which appertaineth unto them.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is true of the papists; but they deal in their controversies more circumspectly and warely, though they dissent in matters of far greater importance, and in the chief points of their own religion.

To the professors of the gospel you give better counsel than you have taken yourself; and you shew an example contrary to your words; and therefore how shall they believe you? But now to the matter; for hitherto you have uttered nothing but words.

Chapter ii. The Eighth Division.

T. C. Page 106, Sect. ult.

To come therefore to touch this matter, I answer, that there is fault in the matter, and fault in the form. In the matter, for that there are things there that ought not to be, and things there are wanting in the order that should be. Of the first sort is "that we may evermore be defended from all adversity."

The Collect of Trinity Sunday.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The first fault that you find in the matter of prayer is a portion of the collect of Trinity Sunday, wherein we pray “that we may evermore be defended from all adversity.” And is this the matter you mislike? let us then consider your reason.

Chapter ii. The Ninth Division.

T. C. Page 107, Sect. 1.

Now, forasmuch as there is no promise in the scripture that we should be free from all adversity, and that evermore, it seemeth that this prayer might have been better conceived, being no prayer of faith, or of the which we assure ourselves that we shall obtain it. For, if it be said that by the word “adversity” is meant all evil, we know that it hath no such signification, neither in this tongue of ours, neither in other tongues which use the same word in common with us; but that it signifieth trouble, vexation, and calamity; from all the which we may not desire always to be delivered. And, whatsoever can be alleged for the defence of it, yet every one that is not contentious may see that it needeth some caution or exception.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I think no man will contend with you for the signification of this word “adversity;” for it properly signifieth all affliction or trouble that pertaineth either to the body or to the mind. And it is species mali: “a kind of evil;” for malum doth contain not only vice and sin, but adversity also and affliction.

But to come to your reason: you say¹, “there is no promise in scripture that we should be free from all adversity;” and therefore we may not pray to be free from all adversity. If this be a good argument, then will I also reason thus: there is no promise in scripture that we should be free from all sin; therefore we may not pray that we should be free from all sin. There is no promise in scripture that we should be free from persecution, but the contrary rather; and therefore we may not pray against persecution. Likewise, there is no promise that we shall be always delivered from poverty, and from divers other particular evils. To be short, if this rule and reason be good, then must we pray for nothing, except first we search in the scriptures whether there be any promise for the same or no.

But you and all Christians ought to understand that our prayers, and faith annexed to them, are grounded upon these promises: “Whatsoever you ask in my name, that will I do.” And again: “If you ask anything in my name, I will do it,” John xiv. And in the xvi. chap., “Verily, verily, I

The argument re-torted.

Our prayers and faith are grounded upon promises. John xiv.

John xvi.

[¹ Say you, Def. B.]

A condition annexed to petitions for external things.

2 Sam. xv.

Matt. xxvi.

Augustine.

say unto you, whatsoever you shall ask my Father in my name, he will give it you." Upon these promises is both our faith and prayer¹, grounded. But, for because in asking of external things we be uncertain whether they be profitable for us or no, therefore we ask them with a condition (which although it be not expressed, yet it is always understood) "if it be God's will;" being certainly persuaded that, if those things we ask be profitable for us, we shall obtain them for his promise' sake. And, forasmuch as all good things come of God, whether they pertain to the body or to the soul, and at all times "to be delivered from adversity" is one of his singular benefits, we may, no doubt, beg the same at his hands, referring, notwithstanding, the granting of it to him, who knoweth what is better for us than we do ourselves. If you will spoil us of this liberty in praying, you shall not only bring prayer into a narrow room, but deprive us of one of the greatest and most singular consolations that a christian man can have in this world. We cannot assure ourselves that we shall obtain any external benefits by prayer at God's hands, because we know not whether that which we ask be profitable for us or no; and yet God forbid that we should cease from praying even for such things. David, being put out of his kingdom by his son Absolon, was not assured that he should be restored again, and yet did he pray for it, with this condition, "if it pleased God." Christ himself prayed to have the cup of his passion removed from him, which undoubtedly he knew before would not be granted unto him. Many examples there be in the Psalms of prayers made for external things; of the obtaining whereof the prophet could not assure himself. Well saith St Augustine: "When thou dost ask of God health of the body, if he know it be profitable for thee he will give it unto thee; if he give it not, then it is not profitable for thee to have it²." Therefore we may lawfully ask any external benefit at God's hand, because he hath willed us so to do; and the same petition or prayer is a prayer of faith, because it hath a promise in the scripture to ground

[¹ Prayers, Def. A.]

[² The idea is frequent in Augustine. The following passage exhibits nearly the words of the text. Quis enim sanitatem non petat, cum ægrotat? Et tamen forte adhuc ægrotare ei utile est. Potest fieri ut hinc non exaudiaris: non tamen exaudiaris ad voluntatem, ut exaudiaris ad utilitatem.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Enarr. in Psalm. lix. 7. Tom. IV. col. 580. Conf. Enarr. in Psalm. lxxxv. 9. cols. 906, 7.]

upon, which is, "Whatsoever you shall ask my Father in my name, &c.," and such like. But the success of our prayer we must commit to him of whom we ask; as David did. John xvi.

And why should this manner of speaking seem so strange unto you? do we not read in the xci. psalm that a promise is made to those that love God in this manner: "There shall no evil come unto thee; neither shall any plague come nigh unto thy dwelling"? Is not this as much as though he should have said, Thou shalt ever "be defended from all adversity"? for, as learned interpreters say, dictione mali omnis generis afflictiones, miserias, et aerumnas, complectitur: "The psalmist in that place by this word 'evil' doth comprehend all kind of afflictions, miseries, and calamities;" so that you have here the very words expressed that you find fault with in the prayer used on Trinity Sunday. Wherefore they may still remain without any "caution or exception." And I would to God you were as far from contention as those be that think so. Psal. xci.

I might here add and say that we are "delivered from all adversity" after two sorts, that is, bodily and spiritually; bodily, when we are not temporally and externally afflicted with them; spiritually, when we are not overcome by them, or caused to decline from God, or to mistrust in his mercies. That we may pray to be delivered from all adversity in the first signification, I have proved; that we ought so to do in the latter signification, there is no christian man that doubteth⁴. Deliverance from adversity of two sorts.

Chapter ii. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 107, Sect. 2.

In the collect upon the twelfth Sunday after Trinity Sunday, and likewise in one of those which are to be said after the offertory (as it is termed) is done, request is made that God would give "those things which we for our unworthiness dare not ask;" for it carrieth with it still the note of the popish servile fear, and savoureth not of that confidence and reverent familiarity that the children of God have through Christ with their heavenly Father; for, as we dare not without our Saviour Christ ask so much as a crumb of bread, so there is nothing which in his name we dare not ask, being needful for us; and, if it be not needful, why should we ask it?

[³ See for a very similar interpretation Psalmor. Libr. Quinque Explan. eluc. per Aret. Felinum (M. Bucer). Argent. 1529. Psalm. xci. fol. 307.]

[⁴ Cartwright rejoins that, "seeing our prayers made without faith be abominable, and no faith is able to be grounded but upon the word of promise, it must needs follow that the prayer conceived without promise is likewise abominable." He hence insists that we may not pray to be free from all sin in this life, and considers the example of Christ alleged by Whitgift inapposite; for, "as touching his humanity, he knew not the most infinite and extreme weight of sufferances, which God his heavenly Father had measured unto him, or, knowing them, had through the unspeakable force of the pangs 'which he then was in' forgotten them."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. pp. 200, 1.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Humility in prayer.
Luke xviii.

I pray you, whether doth the prayer of the Pharisee, that so extolled himself, or of the publican that so humbled himself, like you better? belike you prefer the Pharisee's prayer, else would you never find fault with us for acknowledging our own unworthiness, which is the root and ground of humility, one of the principal ornaments of prayer. We are not worthy of the least benefit that God bestoweth upon us. And therefore duty requireth that we should not for desert desire anything at his hands; and humility saith that in desiring we ought to acknowledge our own unworthiness. If a man be desirous to obtain anything at his father or friend's hand, of whom he hath received many things, and not recompensed the least, is not this a meet kind of speech for him to use? There is something necessary for me to have, but I dare not ask it at your hands for my unworthiness, who have received so much already without any kind of recompence: surely this is both the next way for him to obtain that which he desireth, and a good token not of servile fear, but of true humility, and of that due reverence that a good child oweth to a most natural and loving father. "The publican durst not come nigh, nor lift up his eyes:" so did he acknowledge his unworthiness, such was his humility. And yet you know what Christ did pronounce of him, and what general rule he groundeth upon that example, even this: Omnis qui se exaltat &c.: "Every one that exalteth himself shall be brought low, &c." You know also what the prodigal son said to his own father, after his father had embraced him, and received him into mercy: Neque posthac sum dignus qui vocer filius tuus: "And I am no more worthy to be called thy son."

Luke xviii.

Luke xv.

God forbid that we should so presume of ourselves, that we should shut humility, and the acknowledging of our own unworthiness, from faithful and hearty prayer. In that therefore we say, "for our own unworthiness we dare not ask it," we both ask it, and yet with all humility acknowledge our own unworthiness; which, if it be spoken unfeignedly, cannot be but greatly accepted of God. And surely this kind of begging is most effectual, and it is used towards those to whom we think ourselves most bound, and whom (for their benefits bestowed upon us) we love most dearly. Neither doth this kind of prayer savour of mistrust, but rather of great confidence, in the mercy of God, at whose hands we crave those things which we are of ourselves unworthy to ask or receive¹.

Chapter ii. The Eleventh Division.

Admonition.

² They pray that they³ may be delivered from thundering and tempest, when no danger is nigh: that they sing Benedictus, Nunc dimittis, and Magnificat, we know not to what purpose, except some of them were ready to die, or except they would celebrate the memory of the virgin, and John Baptist, &c. Thus they profane the holy scripture⁴.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 202, Sect. 4.

You mislike also that we should “pray to be delivered from thundering and tempest, when there is no danger nigh.” You broach many strange opinions. May not we pray to be delivered from perils and dangers, except they be present, and known to be at hand? where find you that? Christ teacheth us to say in our daily prayer, Libera nos a malo: “Deliver us from evil.” What know we when there is any danger of thundering and lightning? have we not examples of divers that have suddenly perished with the same? Is it not therefore necessary to pray for deliverance from thunder and lightning, as well as from other dangers, though they be not present? Well, men may see whereunto this gear tendeth, if they be not blind. Benedictus, also, Nunc dimittis, and Magnificat, be great motives in your eyes; but you shew no reason worthy to be answered; only in derision you say, “except some of them were ready to Prayer to be delivered from thunder, good⁵.

Magnificat and Nunc dimittis, &c.⁶

[¹ Cartwright rejoins that “the very similitudes” which Whitgift uses “condemn him,” and that, “instead of teaching true humility, he openeth a school to hypocrisy, which the Lord detesteth.”—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 203.]

[² This is part of a paragraph, the consideration of the other portions of which comes long after. See Tractat. XXI. chap. vii. div. 1, 2.]

[³ They pray that all men may be saved and that they, Adm. and Answ.]

[⁴ Scriptures, Adm.]

[⁵ Prayers to be delivered from thunder &c. good, Answ. 2.]

[⁶ Singing of Magnificat, &c. Answ. 2.]

Absurdity consequent 1.

die, or would celebrate the memory of the virgin, or John Baptist." As though these hymns or psalms were not profitable for all men, as the rest of the holy scripture is, but these especially, because they contain the mystery of our salvation, and the praise of God for the same. By this your reason we may not use any of the psalms until we be in like case as David was, or other, when they were first made. But I think now the time is come when those shall correct Magnificat, qui nesciunt quid significat. Truly this your doing is a mere profanation of holy scriptures.

T. C. Page 107, Sect. 2.

And, if all the prayers were gathered together, and referred to these two heads of God's glory, and of the things which pertain to this present life, I can make no geometrical and exact measure, but verily I believe there shall be found more than a third part of the prayers, which are not psalms and texts of scripture², spent in praying for, and praying against the incommunities³ of this life; which is contrary to all the arguments or contents of the prayers of the church which are set down in the scripture, and especially of our Saviour Christ's prayer⁴, by the which ours ought to be directed, which of seven petitions bestoweth one only that ways. And that⁵ these foresaid prayers do⁶ not only in general words, but by deducting the commodities and incommunities of this life into their particular kinds; and that we⁷ pray for the avoiding of those dangers which are nothing near us, as from lightning and thundering in the midst of winter, from storm and tempest when the weather is most fair, and the seas most calm, &c. It is true that upon some urgent calamities prayer⁸ may and ought to be framed which may beg either the commodity for want whereof the church is in distress, or the turning away of that mischief which either approacheth, or which is already upon it; but to make those prayers which are for the present time and danger ordinary and daily prayers, I cannot hitherto see any either scripture or example of the primitive church. And here, for the simple's sake, I will set down after what sort this abuse crept into the church.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I think you do confess and acknowledge that it is lawful to pray for things which pertain to this present life: if you

[¹ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[² Scriptures, Repl. 2.]

[³ Praying for and praying against the commodities and incommunities, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Prayers, Def. A. and B.]

[⁵ This, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ Go, Def. B.]

[⁷ And we, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ Calamity a prayer, Repl. 1 and 2.]

should deny it, I could confute you by the prayer that Jacob made to be delivered from the hands of his brother Esau, Gen. xxxii., and by sundry of the psalms, and divers examples in the gospel, of such as craved the like things at Christ's hands, and obtained their desire: how many such prayers be in the book of common prayer, it skilleth not, so long as you cannot prove them to be other than godly and necessary.

If in every prayer we make some petition for temporal things, we do but imitate and follow that prayer which Christ hath prescribed unto us, both as a most necessary prayer, and as a rule also to frame and form all our prayers by. You might as well prove that we ought not so often to ask remission and forgiveness of our sins, because of seven petitions there is but one only bestowed that way. How far therefore this reason is from godliness and reason, the godly and reasonable reader may judge.

All things we pray for tend to the glory of God, who is the author and giver of all things, both eternal and temporal. Things that are to be prayed for are of two sorts, the one temporal, the other eternal; but they both pertain to the glory of God, though not equally and in like manner.

All things to be prayed for tend to the glory of God.

The wise man saith: "In the days of prosperity think of adversity, &c." Christ, Matt. xxiv., forewarning his disciples of the external afflictions and evils which should happen as well before the destruction of Jerusalem, as the end of the world, willeth them to pray before the danger be present, saying: "Pray that your flight be not in winter, nor upon the sabbath;" and will you not have us to pray for deliverance from such perils and dangers whereunto we be subject, except they be present? Shall we not pray "to be delivered from thundering and lightning, storm and tempest, plague and pestilence," and such like, except we be in manifest peril and danger, these things being in God's hands to punish us with, even in a moment, and when we think it most unlike? Have we not sundry examples of such as have suddenly perished with thundering and lightning, and some sithence the publishing of your book? What scripture have you or authority of any learned man to the contrary? Will you be credited upon your bare word against so many grave, learned, wise and godly men, that had the penning and allowing of that Prayers before danger. Eccus. xi.

Matt. xxiv.

The presumption of the Replier.

book? Surely that were against all order and reason; and it is too great presumption for you with so light and slender reasons to go about the overthrow of that which so many godly and learned men have both liked and allowed, except they had allowed that which the scriptures do disallow¹.

Chapter ii. The Twelfth Division.

T. C. Page 107, Sect. 3.

There was one Mamercus, bishop of Vienna, which, in the time of great earthquakes which were in France, instituted certain supplications, which the Grecians, and we of them, call the litany², Plat. cap. Leo. which concerned that matter; there is no doubt but, as other discommodities rose in other countries, they likewise had prayers accordingly. Now pope Gregory either made himself, or gathered the supplications that were made against the calamities of every country, and made of them a great litany or supplication, as Platina calleth it³, and gave it to be used in all churches; which thing albeit all churches might do for the time, in respect of the case of the calamity which the churches suffered, yet there is no cause why it should be perpetual that was ordained but for a time, and why all lands should pray to be delivered from the incommodities that some land hath been troubled with.

JO. WHITGIFT.

As though we were not at all times subject to these perils and dangers, and as though we ought not, by the calamity of other nations, to be moved earnestly to pray against the like, which might also happen to us.

It is not to be doubted but that the prayer of the just is acceptable to God, and that of his mercy he, being thereby moved, doth stay from plaguing us with earthquakes, thundering and lightning, and such like calamities, wherewith he would otherwise punish us.

Truly your reasons be marvellous profane, and they might as well be alleged against any of the psalms, which all were made at the first upon some special occasion, and yet are profitable for ever, in all states of the church to be used.

The reason used against the litany is of the same force against the psalms.

[¹ Cartwright in his rejoinder to this division calls it "idle," "frivolous," "nothing to purpose," and declares that Whitgift "doth but abuse the time."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. pp. 204, 5.]

[² Primus enim Mamercus (ut aiunt) supplicationes, quas Græci litaneias vocant, instituit ob frequentes terræ motus, qui tum maxime Gallias vexabant.—Plat. De Vit. Pont. Col. 1551. Leo I. p. 58.]

[³ Id. ibid. Gregor. I. p. 73. See before, page 469, note 5.]

Whatsoever good and godly prayer in the time of any common misery and calamity hath been invented, the same is at other times profitable to be used in the church, because the like punishments and plagues are in God's hands at all times to execute upon sinners, and therefore continually to be prayed against.

Chapter ii. The Thirteenth Division.

T. C. Page 107, Sect. 4.

The like may be said of the Gloria Patri, and the Athanasius' creed: it was first brought into the church, to the end that men thereby should make an open profession in the church of the divinity of the Son of God, against the detestable opinion of Arius and his disciples, wherewith at that time marvellously swarmed almost the whole Christendom; now that it hath pleased the Lord to quench that fire, there is no such cause why these things should be in the church, at the least why that Gloria Patri should be so often repeated.

A weak reason.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Even as convenient now as it was then; for it is as necessary to maintain truth, and make it known, as it is to suppress errors; and yet it is not unknown that even in our days, and in this church, there have been Arians; and I pray God there be none still. I much suspect the matter, not well understanding whereunto these glances of yours at "Gloria Patri, and Athanasius' creed," do tend. Gloria Patri, besides that it containeth a brief confession of the Trinity, and of the divinity of Jesus Christ, it is a magnifying and glorifying of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, three Persons and one God; and Athanasius' creed is not only an excellent confutation of Arius' heresy, but a plain declaration of the mystery of the Trinity, such as is necessary for all christian men to learn and know; and therefore he that is offended with the oft repetition or saying of either of them, I cannot tell what I should judge of him. But undoubtedly there is great cause why I should suspect him at the least of singularity and unquietness. Shall we not oftentimes rehearse the articles of our belief in God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, because all men be now persuaded therein, and none known that maketh any doubt? The reason is all one, and prevaieth as well against the repeating of this,

The manifestation and maintenance of truth as necessary as the suppression of errors.
Gloria Patri.
Athanasius' Creed.

as of the other. I think your meaning is, that we know too much, and therefore now we must learn to forget.

Well, your authority is little, and your reasons much less; and therefore they are like to stand in statu quo; and this is most sure, that harm they do none, but much good, because a good thing cannot be too oft said or heard¹.

Chapter ii. The Fourteenth Division.

T. C. Page 107, Sect. ult.

Moreover, to make Benedictus, Magnificat, and Nunc dimittis ordinary and daily prayers seemeth to be a thing not so convenient, considering that they do no more concern us, than all other scriptures do, and than doth the Ave Maria, as they called it. For, although they were prayers of thanksgiving in Simeon, Zachary, and the blessed virgin Mary, yet can they not be so in us, which have not received like benefits; they may be added to the number of psalms, and so sung as they be; but to make daily and ordinary prayers of them is not without some inconvenience and disorder.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Here is no reason shewed, nor anything answered to that I have alleged to prove the contrary. Your objection of the Ave Maria is vain, for it pertaineth to the virgin only, and is spoken to her person. But, if it were not so, what kind of reasoning call you this? The church doth not use daily in public prayer to say Ave Maria; ergo, it may not say Benedictus, Magnificat, or Nunc dimittis. These three are most meetest for us, for "they contain," as I have said in my Answer, "the mystery of our salvation, and the praise of God for the same," and therefore cannot be too often either said or sung.

Chapter ii. The Fifteenth Division.

T. C. Page 108, Sect. 2.

Very slenderly; and, if you had said less of them, you had said nothing at all.

And so have I answered unto those things which are contained in the 202. 203. pages; saving that I must admonish the reader that, whereas you will prove that we ought to have an ordinary prayer to be delivered from danger of thunder, lightnings, &c., because there are examples of certain that have been killed thereby, you might as well bring in a prayer that men may not have falls from their horses, may not fall into the hands of robbers, may not fall into waters; and a number such more sudden deaths, wherewith a greater number are taken away than by thunders or lightnings, and such like; and so there should be never any end of begging these earthly commodities; which is contrary to the form of prayer appointed by our Saviour Christ.

[¹ "To prove that 'Gloria Patri &c. may be oft repeated at one meeting,' he answereth that 'a good thing cannot be too oft said.' Which...is as much to say that a man cannot take too many purgations."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 206.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

The punishment of God by thundering and lightning is more notorious and terrible, not by any help of man to be repelled; whereas the other things that you speak of come oftentimes and most commonly through negligence, wilfulness, unruliness, too much boldness, indiscreetness of the parties themselves. Besides this, there are ordinary means to avoid them. And yet I think it most convenient that we should pray against those evils; and so doth the church daily in the last collect used in the morning prayer; which thing also is most consonant to the Lord's prayer, petitions to the like end, and purpose being there expressed.

Chapter ii. The Sixteenth Division.

T. C. Page 108, Sect. 2.

And, whereas you allege the petition of the Lord's prayer, "Deliver us from evil," to prove this prayer against thunder, &c.; besides that all the commodities and discommodities of this life are prayed for and prayed against in that petition, whereby we desire our daily bread, it is very strange to apply that to the thunder that is understood of the devil, as the article ἀπὸ τοῦ πονηροῦ doth declare; and it is a marvellous conclusion that, forsomuch as we ought daily and ordinarily and publicly desire to be delivered from the devil; ergo, we ought daily and² ordinarily and publicly desire to be delivered from thunder. It is one thing to correct Magnificat, and another thing to shew the abuse of it. And therefore I see no cause why you should use this allusion between magnificat and significat; unless it be for that you, purposing to set out all your learning in this book, would not so much as forget an old rotten proverb, which trotted amongst the monks in their cloisters; of whom I may justly say which Tully said in another thing: Nec quicquam ingenuum potest monasterium³: that is, "the cloister could never bring forth any witty thing;" for here, although there be rythmus, yet it is sine Rhyme without reason.
ratione.

[² Add, Repl. 1.]

[³ Nec enim quidquam ingenuum potest habere officina.—Cic. Op. Lond. 1681. De Offic. Lib. i. 42. Tom. IV. pp. 409, 10. Def. A. has ingenium, following probably Repl. 2, which however corrects the reading in the list of errata.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

The interpretation of the last petition.

All men may see that you hunt for contention and strife, and not for the truth; otherwise you would be more upright and sincere in your dealing. The effect of my Answer to the Admonition is that, forasmuch as this word malum in the last petition of the Lord's prayer doth contain all kind of evil, whether it pertain to the body or to the mind, therefore all such prayers as are for our deliverance from external perils and dangers, being grounded upon that petition, are lawful, whether they be daily used or otherwise; in which sort and kind those prayers are wherein we desire to be delivered from thundering and lightning, the dangers thereof being so frequent, and so terrible.

Cyprian.

And, whereas you say that the word "evil" doth there signify the "devil," and therefore not adversity, and external evil that happeneth to the body, you shall understand your error, by the expositions both of the old and new writers. Cyprian, in his exposition upon the Lord's prayer, interpreting these words, saith thus: "In the last place we put, 'But deliver us from evil;' comprehending all kind of adversities which the enemy worketh against us in this world." And a little after: "But when we say, 'Deliver us from evil,' there remaineth nothing which ought further to be desired, seeing we pray at once for the protection of God against evil; which being obtained, we stand secure and safe against all things which the world and devil worketh¹."

Augustinus.

Augustine likewise, in his epistle ad Probam viduam, in number 121. and cap. 11., expoundeth the same words in like sort: "When we say, 'Deliver us from evil,' we admonish to consider that we are not as yet in that good (estate) where we shall suffer no evil; and this, which is last placed in the Lord's prayer, is extended so far, and so plainly, that a christian man moved with any kind of tribulation may in this petition sigh, in this shed his tears, begin herein, continue herein, and end his prayer herein²."

[¹ In novissimo enim ponimus: Sed libera nos a malo, comprehendentes adversa cuncta, quæ contra nos in hoc mundo molitur inimicus;... Quando autem dicimus: sed libera nos a malo, nihil remanet quod ultra adhuc debeat postulari: quando semel protectionem Dei adversus malum petamus, qua impetrata contra omnia quæ diabolus et mundus operantur, securi stamus et tuti.—Cyp. Op. Oxon. 1682. De Orat. Domin. p. 151.]

[² Cum dicimus, Libera nos a malo; nos admonemus cogitare, nondum nos

M. Bucer, expounding the same words in his commentaries upon the vi. of Matthew, saith: "Satan is therefore Bucer. called a tempter, because he doth tempt and exercise us; especially labouring for this, that he may withdraw us from a right faith in God; but, if he cannot bring that to pass (such is his hatred) then he doth rejoice in afflicting and molesting us with external evils; as we read that he hath done against Job and other holy men." And a little after: "Wherefore, forasmuch as Satan is as it were our tormenter, by whose ministry God doth also outwardly exercise us, in this respect the prayer, 'to be delivered from bodily evils,' is included in this last petition³." In like manner doth Musculus expound the same⁴. And do you think that these men did not understand their Pater-noster? You see therefore that, although the word signify the "devil," yet it nothing hindereth my interpretation, but maketh much for it; because the devil is the author of all evil that cometh either to the body or to the soul; and therefore, being delivered from him, there is no cause why we should be any longer careful.

There is no "abuse of Magnificat" as yet shewed, but there is a very unlearned reason in the Admonition put why it should not be used, to the answer whereof you have not replied; and therefore I may justly say of their correcting of Magnificat that which I have said; and the proverb is meet for such unskilful persons; but your childish or rather profane jests and scoffs be not seeming for a divine, and him that would be counted so greatly learned and mortified.

esse in eo bono, ubi nullum patiemur malum. Et hoc quidem ultimum quod in dominica oratione positum est, tam late patet, ut homo christianus in qualibet tribulatione constitutus in hoc gemitus edat, in hoc lacrymas fundat, hinc exordiat, in hoc immoretur, ad hoc terminet orationem.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Prob. Epist. cxxx. cap. xi. 21. Tom. II. col. 390.]

[³ Tentator enim Satanas ideo dicitur, quod nos tentat et exercet, potissimum quidem hoc agens, ut a recta in Deum fide nos detorqueat, si tum id ei non succedit, quo est in nos odio, gaudet malis externis nos obruere et excruciare, uti contra Iob egisse legimus, et sanctos alios....Quatenus igitur Satanas velut tortor noster est, cujus ministerio etiam externe nos Deus exercet, eatenus et corporalium malorum deprecatio, huic ultimæ petitioni inclusa est.—M. Bucer. Enarr. Perp. in Quat. Evang. Argent. 1530. In Evang. Matt. cap. vi. fol. 67.]

[⁴ Wolfg. Muscul. Comm. in Matt. Evang. Basil. 1611. cap. vi. Tom. I. pp. 135, 6.]

Chapter ii. The Seventeenth Division.

T. C. Page 108, Sect. 3.

As these are divers things more than ought to be conveniently, so want there some things in the prayers: there are prayers set forth to be said in the common calamities and universal scourges of the realm, as plague, famine, &c. And indeed so it ought to be, by the word of God, joined with a public fast commanded, not only when we are in any calamity, but also when any the churches, round about us, or in any country, receive any general plague, or grievous chastisement at the Lord's hand. But, as such prayers are needful whereby we beg release from our distresses, so there ought to be as necessarily prayers of thanksgiving when we have received those things at the Lord's hand which we asked in our prayers. And thus much touching the matter of the prayers, either not altogether sound, or else too much or too little.

Great faults in little matters.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If anything lack in the book, that derogateth nothing from that which is good and godly in the same; neither is it any cause why any man should deprave it or make such a stir and schism in the church for it.

It is meet that we should as well give thanks for the benefits received, as to pray for the receiving of them; neither is the book void of any such kind of prayers. These be but very small quarrels against the book, and slender faults (if they were faults) to make so great a schism for. But, as I said with St Augustine, against the authors of the Admonition, so say I unto you: "If thou runnest through all the words of the holy prayers, I suppose thou shalt find nothing which the Lord's prayer doth not contain; therefore we may in other words speak the same things in our prayers, but we may not speak contrary things¹." You have not as yet, neither will you ever be able to shew one line in any prayer contained in that book to be contrary to the word of God, or not consonant or agreeable unto the same. And this dealing of yours against it upon so weak reasons (or rather none at all) argueth that you seek only contention, and that your chief quarrel is at the maintainers of the book, and not at the matter.

Aug. Epist.
121.

[¹ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Prob. Epist. cxxx. cap. xii. 22. Tom. II. col. 391. See before, page 469, note 7.]

Chapter ii. The Eighteenth Division.

T. C. Page 108, Sect. 4.

Concerning the form, there is also to be disliked: a great cause whereof is the following of the form used in popery; against which I have before spoken. For, whilst that service was set in many points as a pattern of this, it cometh to pass that, instead of such prayers as the primitive churches have used, and those that be reformed now use, we have divers short cuts and shreddings, which may be better called wishes than prayers. And, that no man think that this is some idle fancy, and that it is no matter of weight what form of prayer we use, so that the prayers be good, it must be understood that, as it is not sufficient to preach the same doctrine which our Saviour Christ and his apostles have preached, unless the same form of doctrine and of teaching be likewise kept, so is it not enough that the matter of our prayer be such as is in the word of God, unless that the form also be agreeable unto the forms of prayers in the scripture. Now we have no such forms in the scripture as that we should pray in two or three lines, and then, after having read awhile some other thing, come and pray as much more, and so to the xx. and xxx. time, with pauses between.

These are unseemly terms for godly prayers, be they never so short.

Where learn you that?

The Lord's prayer is not much more: the prayers of the publican, of Stephen, and of Christ, are much less.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You have very aptly answered yourself, though you would seem to make it an objection, and to wipe it away; for undoubtedly, when you thought that other men would count this device of yours "an idle fancy," you thought truly, and your own thought therein condemneth you. But I add that it is not only "an idle fancy," but an untrue surmise; for, first, which be those "prayers that the primitive church used, instead whereof we have but short cuts and shreddings?" Why do you not name them? Will you still speak without proof? Will you raise up a general slander, and shew no particulars?

Touching your charging us with "following of the form used in popery," I have answered before, where you have in like manner objected it, and only objected it.

How prove you that "it is not sufficient to preach the same doctrine that our Saviour Christ and his apostles have preached, unless the same form of teaching be likewise kept?" For I take that to be "an idle fancy," and utterly untrue. I am persuaded that, if the same doctrine be preached, the manner and form of preaching is left for every one to use according to the gift that God hath given unto him, as he shall think it to be most expedient to edifying; but this is an old

The fancy of the Replier concerning the form of preaching.

“fancy” of yours, partly grounded upon an arrogant opinion of yourself, whose manner and form of preaching you would bind all men unto; partly of emulation and envy, because you have perceived other men’s manner and kind of preaching to have been much better liked than yours. But, to let this pass, Christ and his apostles did not usually pray before nor after their sermons, or at the least it is not expressed in scripture that they did; they, when they preached, did not usually take any one certain place or portion of scripture to entreat of¹; and it is manifest that they used not any uniform manner of preaching, but they spake as God gave them utterance; neither did they labour or study for their sermons, but preached as present occasion served; and therefore, for my part, until I hear very good reasons of this new device, I must needs account it a very fond imagination.

Shew me wherein the form of our prayers doth differ from the manner and form of praying contained in the scripture. Or shew me in the scripture any prescript form of public and daily prayers commanded, the Lord’s prayer only excepted. Or let me understand what scripture you can allege why in the public congregation we may not sometime pray, and sometimes read the scriptures. And what do we else in the whole order of our service? Will you still more and more utter your contempt against God, against his church, against a most pure and godly kind of public prayer and service, and that with such unreverend speeches? But I omit them: it is enough to have noted them in the margent, for they are confutation to themselves.

Chapter ii. The Nineteenth Division.

T. C. Page 108, Sect. ult.

If a man should come to a prince, and keep such order in making his petitions unto him that, having very many things to demand, after he had demanded one thing, he would stay a long time and then demand another, and so the third, the prince might well think that either he came to ask before he knew what he had need of, or that he had forgotten some piece of his suit, or that he were distracted in his understanding, or some other such like cause of the disorder of his supplication. And therefore how much more convenient were it that, according to the manner of the reformed churches, first the minister, with an humble and general confession of faults, should desire the assistance of the Lord for the fruitful handling and receiving of the word of God; and then, after that we have heard the Lord speak unto us in his word by his minister, the church should likewise speak unto the Lord, and present all those petitions and suits at once, both for the whole church and for the prince, and all other estates, which shall be thought needful.

[¹ “... that of our Saviour ‘Christ’s and the apostles’ usual preaching without texts’ hath no ground. That of their ‘preaching without prayer before or after their sermons’ is a shameful untruth. For, prayer being assigned for a piece of the duty of the ministry (Acts vi. 4), although it had been never (as sometime (John xvii. 1) it is) expressed, yet it must of necessity be intended.”—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 211.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

As much difference as there is betwixt man and God, so far is your similitude from proving your purpose; except you will admit the like similitude used by the papists, to prove praying to saints; for the one hath as much strength to prove anything as the other, and yet neither of them both worth a rush. And here you do injury to God, to compare him to an earthly prince, especially in this behalf. For what prince would not think himself abused if a man should daily and hourly sue unto him? But it is not so with God; for we have a commandment to pray continually, Luke xviii.; 1 Thess. v.; and he doth not respect the form of words, but the affection of the heart. And in very deed it is most convenient that reading of the scriptures and praying should be intermingled.

The dissimilitude of the Replier's similitude.

All the scripture that you have to allege is "the reformed churches:" let other men think what they will, I verily believe that in our manner and kind of worshipping God in our public and common prayers, there is no cause why we should think ourselves one whit inferior unto them: they also, or the most part of them, have allowed the same order of ours, at what time the like contention was about the same book among our Englishmen which were in Q. Mary's time banished for the gospel².

Chapter ii. The Twentieth Division.

T. C. Page 109, Sect. 1.

And, if any will say that there are short prayers found in the Acts, it may be answered that St Luke doth not express the whole prayers at large, but only set down the sums of them, and their chief points. And, further, it may be answered that always those prayers were continued together, and not cut off and shred into divers small pieces.

[² This contention broke out among the exiles at Frankfort. There is an account of it in "A brieff discours off the troubles begonne at Franckford in Germany Anno Domini 1554." 1575; a work subsequently reprinted.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

The scripture hath not prescribed any form of public prayer.

How know you that "St Luke doth not express the whole prayers at large, but only set down the sums of them and their chief points?" What scripture have you that teacheth you so to think? and, if this be a sufficient answer to say, the "scripture hath not expressed the whole, &c.," why is it not also a sufficient answer for me to that which followeth, that the scripture hath not expressed any certain or determinate form of public prayer to be used in all churches (as indeed it hath not), but only in the Lord's prayer given certain general points according to the which all our prayers must be framed? Surely your fancy is strong; but your arguments be exceeding weak. For tell me, I pray you, where have you in the whole new testament (the Lord's prayer only excepted) any form of public prayer used in the church described? If you cannot shew this, why do you so childishly dally?

Chapter ii. The Twenty-first Division.

T. C. Page 109, Sect. 2.

Another fault is that all the people are appointed in divers places to say after the minister, whereby not only the time is unprofitably wasted, and a confused voice of the people, one speaking after another, caused, but an opinion bred in their heads, that those only be their prayers which they say and pronounce with their own mouths; which causeth them to give the less heed to the rest of the prayers which they rehearse not after the minister; which, notwithstanding, are as well their prayers as those which they pronounce after the minister, otherwise than the order which is left unto the church of God doth bear. For God hath ordained the minister to this end, that, as in public meetings he only is the mouth of the Lord from him to the people, even so he ought to be only the mouth of the people from them unto the Lord, and that all the people should attend to that which is said by the minister, and in the end both declare their consent to that which is said, and their hope that it should¹ so be and come to pass which is prayed, by the word "Amen;" as St Paul declareth ^{1 Cor. xiv. 16.} in the epistle to the Corinthians, and Justin Martyr sheweth ^{2. Apol. pro Christianis.} to have been the custom of the churches in his time³.

Untruth.

[¹ Shall, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[² The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[³ Just. Mart. Op. Par. 1742. Apol. i. 65. p. 82. Conf. 67. p. 83. See Vol. I. page 215, note 4.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

God be thanked that the book is so perfitte that you are constrained, for saving your credit with your disciples, thus triflingly to deal with it. You unchristianly say that "the time is unprofitably wasted" which is spent in prayer; you imagine that of the people that never entered into their thoughts; you call it "a confused voice," that is a most acceptable sound unto the Lord; and, if to surmise or to imagine be sufficient, then may we imagine your doctrine to tend to the contempt of prayer, and the over-thwarting of all good and godly order. But you must know that there is more special cause why the people should rather rehearse after the minister those things that the book appointeth them so to do, than the other prayers, because they contain a general confession of sins, which all Christians together, as well in voice as in heart, ought to confess; neither doth the book prescribe the people to say anything after the minister (the Lord's prayer after the communion only excepted) but these general and public confessions; and yet, if it did, I see not how you can justly therefore reprove it. Musculus, expounding these words: Et cum hymnum cecinissent, &c., thinketh it not unlikely *ipsum . . . ita præloquutum esse, ut verba ipsius ab illis sint excepta et vicissim reddita*⁴: "That Christ did in that order speak before his disciples, that they repeated his words after him." Whereby it appeareth that he was so far from thinking this order to be "an unprofitable wasting of time," that he doubteth not to ascribe it to our Saviour Christ and his apostles. But, if it be such "an unprofitable wasting of time" to rehearse prayer after the minister, how happeneth it that you and all other your partners that be preachers use to cause the people to pray after you in your sermons⁵? Is it lawful for you so to do in the pulpit, and is it not lawful for the minister to do the same in the church? Belike nothing is well done that you do not yourselves, or are not the authors of.

Muscul. in 26. Matth.

But here I cannot omit that which you so boldly affirm of

The minister not the only mouth of the people.

[⁴ Wlfg. Muscul. Comm. in Matt. Evang. Basil. 1611. cap. xxvi. Tom. III. p. 524.]

[⁵ "'That I used that form in my sermons' (for anything that I know) I learned it of the book; which use, forsomuch as some years after, whilst I yet preached, I corrected in myself, it declareth that I first misliked and condemned myself in that point, or ever I found fault with the book."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 213.]

the minister, whom you say "God hath ordained to be the only mouth of the people from them unto the Lord in public meetings:" are you of that opinion, that the people may join with the minister in pronouncing public prayers at no time? Or that they should only "attend to that which is said by the minister, and in the end give their consent by this word, Amen?" Hath God ordained this? I pray you, where find you this ordinance? Sure I am that the place by you alleged doth not prove it. For, although it be true that the minister is the mouth of the people to God, yet doth it not follow that he is the "only mouth of the people unto the Lord;" and, although we read that the people used to give their consent unto the prayer pronounced of the minister by this word, "Amen;" yet, if you will hereof conclude that they ought only to say "Amen," and at no time join as well in voice as in heart with the minister (which you seem to affirm in saying he is the only mouth), then, besides the weakness of your conclusion, the practice of the church of God will sufficiently confute you. We read that, when Peter and John were let go, after their examination before the priests and elders, for healing the man that was lame from his mother's womb, they came to the rest of his disciples, and declared to them what had happened; "and, when they heard that, they lift up their voices to God with one accord, and said, Lord, thou art God, &c." So that the minister here was not "the only mouth of the people," but the whole company that was assembled joined together in this prayer, lifted up their voices and spake with one accord. And surely it is not unlike that they used herein that order which you before accounted "an unprofitable wasting of time;" for, seeing that this prayer was framed according to the present occasion, I am persuaded that the rest did rather repeat the words after him that conceived the prayer, than that they all miraculously joined upon the sudden in one and the same form of words¹. Pliny, in an epistle to Trajan the emperor, concerning the Christians, writeth that their custom was stato die ante lucem convenire, carmenque Christo quasi Deo dicere secum invicem: &c.²: "to meet together

Acts iv.

Plinius Epist.
Lib. x.

[¹ "The Greek is they 'with one accord lifted up a voice to God,' not 'voices;' so that St Luke noteth that there was but one 'voice' amongst them all; which, because it was with consent, he doth aptly call the voice lifted up of them all, and wherewith they all prayed: &c."—Ibid. p. 212.]

[² C. Plin. Secund. Epist. Lib. x. Epist. xcviij.]

early at an appointed day, and to sing together a song unto Christ, as unto God.” Chrysostom, going about to prove that in some respect there is no difference betwixt the priest and people, useth this for an example, that in public prayer they sometime join together. His words be these: Quin et precibus &c.³: “A man may also see the people to offer many prayers together, for those that are possessed and penitentiaries (as they term them); for common supplications are made both of the priest, and of them, and they all say one prayer, &c.” And again: *Quid miraris si cum sacerdote populus loquitur*⁴? “Why dost thou marvel if the people speak together with the priest? &c.” You cannot be ignorant, I am sure, that Basil likeneth “the sound of men, women, and children, praying in the church, to the roaring of the waves against the sea-banks⁵.” This might you have seen also even in that place of Justin Martyr which you quote; for there, describing the liturgy, he saith that, after the exhortation or sermon, *omnes surgimus et comprecamur*⁶: “we do all rise and pray together, &c.” This you skipped over, and took that which followed, because it made more for your purpose; for indeed Justin doth describe both, that is, both the prayer of the whole church together, and of the bishop alone, the people giving their consent by this word “Amen.” I need not to use more testimonies: these may suffice to declare by the practice of the church, that “the minister is” not “the only mouth of the people in public meetings,” which you have only set down without any proof, for what purpose you know best yourself, surely I cannot conjecture, except it be that the people should wholly depend upon the minister’s words, and as it were hang upon his lips, which whereunto it would in time grow, wise men can consider.

Chrysost.
Hom. 18, in
2. Cor.

Basil.
Hex. 4.

Apol. 2.

But what need I to stand so long upon this point, seeing you yourself afterward affirm as much? For, finding fault with the order of singing psalms side by side, you have these

The Replier
contrary to himself.

[³ ... καὶ ἐν ταῖς εὐχαῖς δὲ πολλὸν τὸν λαὸν ἴδοι τις ἂν συνεισφέροντα. καὶ γὰρ ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐνεργουμένων, ὑπὲρ τῶν ἐν μετανοίᾳ, κοιναὶ καὶ παρὰ τοῦ ἱερέως, καὶ παρ’ αὐτῶν γίνονται αἱ εὐχαῖ· καὶ πάντες μίαν λέγουσιν εὐχὴν, κ.τ.λ.—Chrysost. Op. Par. 1718-38. In Epist. 11. ad Corinth. Hom. xviii. Tom. X. p. 568.]

[⁴ Καὶ τί θαυμάζεις, εἴ ποτε μετὰ τοῦ ἱερέως ὁ λαὸς φθέγγεται, κ.τ.λ.—Id. ibid.]

[⁵ ... πῶς οὐχὶ καλλίων ἐκκλησίας τοιαύτης σύλλογος, ἐν ᾗ συμμεγίης ἡχος, οἶόν τινος κύματος ἡϊόνι προσφερομένου, ἀνδρῶν καὶ γυναικῶν καὶ νηπίων, κατὰ τὰς πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν ἡμῶν δεήσεις, ἐκπέμπεται.—Basil. Op. Par. 1721-30. In Hexaem. Hom. iv. Tom. I. p. 39.]

[⁶ Just. Mart. Op. Par. 1742. Apol. i. 67. p. 83.]

Pag. 163. in the midst.

words: "From whencesoever it came, it cannot be good, considering that, when it is granted that all the people may praise God (as it is in singing of psalms), there this ought not to be restrained unto a few, and, where it is lawful both with heart and voice to sing the whole psalm, there it is not meet that they should sing but the one half with their heart and voice, and the other with their heart only. For, where they may both with heart and voice sing, there the heart is not enough." Than the which what can be more contrary to this, that "the minister ought to be the only mouth of the people to the Lord?" For here you affirm that all the people may praise God, and sing psalms, not with heart only, but with voice, and so to be their own mouth unto the Lord. How you can reconcile this gear I see not; sure I am that truth is not contrary to itself.

Chapter ii. The Twenty-second Division.

T. C. Page 109, Sect. 3.

Conscientia mille testes.

Although these blots in the common prayer be such as may easily enough appear unto any which is not wedded to a prejudicate opinion, and that there is no great difficulty in this matter; yet I know that this treatise of prayer will be subject to many reprehensions, and that there will not be wanting some probable colours also whereby these things may be defended, if men will set themselves to strive and to contend. Yet, for the desire that I have that these things should be amended, and for the instruction of the simple¹ which are studious of the truth, I have been bold to utter that which I think, not doubting also but that the light of the truth shall be able to scatter all those mists of reasons which shall go about to darken the clearness thereof.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Surely if the "blots" be so manifest as you would seem to make them, it is not wisely done of you so slenderly to pass them over.

The pith of the reply concerning prayer.

You do well to think that "this treatise" of yours "touching prayer will be subject to many reprehensions;" and why should it not? What is there in it worthy of commendation? What learning? what reason? what truth? what godliness? except vain words be learning, fancies reason, lies truth, contempt of good laws and orders, with unseemly jests, be godliness; for what is there else in this treatise? Truly, if you had not settled yourself to strive and to contend, and had not been desirous to pervert the simple, rather than to instruct them, you would never, upon so weak a ground, and with so feeble reasons, or rather vain fancies, have gone about to deprave so worthy a book; in the which, as I have said before, you are not able to shew anything, especially touching the order, manner, and matter of prayer, that is not consonant to the word of God. Neither have you, for all that is spoken against the form of prayer, alleged one text of scripture, or one sentence of any one ancient or late writer; and do you think that men will believe you upon your bare words, against so many martyrs and learned men as have allowed and do allow that book? Your credit is not so great as you think it is; and that which you have, when you are accordingly detected, will utterly vanish and fade away.

[¹ Simpler, Repl. 1 and 2.]

Of baptism by women, wherewith the communion book is falsely charged.

Chapter iii. The First Division.

Admonition.

¹ Matt. xxviii.
19; 1 Cor.
xiv. 35.

*The first appointed hereof was Victor I.²
Anno 198.*

In which a great number of things contrary to God's word are contained, as baptism ¹by women.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 79, Sect. 2, 3, 4, 5.

But you say, "a number of things contrary unto God's word are contained in this book, as baptism by women, &c.³"

All prayers good in the communion book.

Here is not one prayer in all the communion book⁴ found fault with; and yet your quarrel is against a prescript form of prayers invented by man.

You marvellously forget yourself, and confusedly go from matter to matter, without any consideration.

Digressing, therefore, from prayers contained in the communion book, you come to other matters in the same, against God's word (as you say); and first you allege baptizing by women.

I deny baptizing by women to be expressed in that

[² See below, page 507, note 3.]

[³ Here Answ. proceeds with the sentence which is continued subsequently.]

[⁴ The whole communion book, Answ.]

book; and, when you have proved it to be necessarily gathered out of the same, then shall you hear my judgment thereof.

T. C. Page 109, Sect. 4.

Master Doctor requireth that it should be proved unto him that by private baptism is meant "baptism by women." First, it is meant that it should be done by some other than the minister, for that the minister is bid to give them warning that they should not baptize the child at home in their house without great cause and necessity; secondarily, I would gladly ask him who they be that are present when the child is so shortly after it is born in great danger of death; and, last of all, Master Doctor doth not see how he accuseth all the magistrates of this realm of the neglect of their duty, in that they allow of the daily practising by women in baptizing children, if so be that the book did not so appoint it, or permit it. If he meant plainly herein, there needed not so much ado.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Here is nothing said which the authors of the Admonition have not alleged before, either in their book or in their additions; and therefore the same answer that was made unto them will serve for you. I told you there that the book of common prayer doth call it "private baptism," in respect of the place, which is a private house, and not in respect of the minister; which evidently appeareth in these words, which you yourself allege in this place, that is, that "the minister is bid to give them warning that they should not baptize the child at home in their houses, &c.;" but you cannot thereof conclude the meaning of the book to be, that women should baptize; for even in that necessity the curate may be sent for, or some other minister that may sooner be come by.

Why baptism is called private.

Your question is soon answered; for no man doubteth of the persons that be present at such a time; but I have told you that, when such necessity requireth, the curate, or the next minister, is soon sent for, as oftentimes he is in as great extremities as that; and what a reason call you this: Women be present when the child that is born is in great danger of death; therefore the minister cannot be sent for to baptize the child?

To your objection of "the magistrates allowing the practice of baptizing by women," I answer, first, that your general proposition is untrue (as I think); for all the magistrates of this realm do not so. Secondly, that, if they did, yet it followeth not that they do it by the authority of the book; for many things be permitted as tolerable, which are not established by any law: and therefore, if you had done well, you should rather have reprov'd the custom that doth use it, than the book that speaketh never a word of it.

I deal as plainly as I can, for I keep me to the book. But your vain conjectures and frivolous reasons against that book may not be yielded unto, but opened, that they may appear in their colours.

Chapter iii. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 79, Sect. ult.

Your places of scripture alleged against it are not of sufficient force to prove your purpose. Christ, in the xxviii. of Matthew, said to his disciples, "Go and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, &c.;" ergo, women may not baptize. I say this argument followeth not, no more than this doth; ergo, pastors may not baptize; for it is manifest that an apostle is distinct from a pastor.

Feeble arguments.

T. C. Page 109, Sect. 5.

Chap. xxviii.
19.²

The place of the xxviii. of St Matthew¹ is as strong against women's baptizing as it is against their preaching. For the ministry of the word and sacraments cannot be pulled in sunder, which the Lord hath joined together from time to time. For Noah, which was a preacher unto the old world of the will of God, was ordained also of

2 Pet. ii. 5.²

God to make the ark, which was a sacrament and seal of his preaching, touching the destruction of the world. And Abra-

Gen. vi. 14.²
Gen. xviii.
19.²

ham, whom the Lord would have to be the doctor of his church, which was then in his family, was also commanded to minister the sacrament of circumcision unto his family.

Gen. xvii. 23.²

The priests and Levites, which were appointed to teach the people, were also appointed to sacrifice, and to minister other sacraments in the church. Likewise the same prophets, which God stirred up to preach, he also ordained to confirm the same by signs and sacraments.

Luke ix. 1.²
Luke x. 1, 17.²

The same may be also drawn throughout the new testament, as unto every of the twelve, and afterward to the seventy, power was given both to preach the gospel, and also to confirm with signs and miracles, which were seals of their doctrine. And St

Acts. xvii. 15.²
1 Cor. i. 17.²

Paul, by the commandment that our Saviour Christ gave him to preach, undertook also to baptize, although there were no express words

Untruth, as hath been proved.

These examples prove not the purpose.

[¹ The place of St Matthew, Repl. 2.]

[² These marginal references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

that licensed him thereunto; for he knew right well that it was the perpetual ordinance of God that the same should be the ministers of the word and sacraments. Whereupon it followeth that, forasmuch as women may not preach the gospel, no, not by the laws of the realm, that they ought not to minister baptism.

JO. WHITGIFT.

My reason alleged in my Answer to the Admonition, why this place doth not make any necessary conclusion against the baptizing by women, is not answered; but there is a new collection made of the same place, which is of as great force as the other; for you might as well conclude thus; ergo, pastors may not preach, because pastors be not apostles. I speak of the argument, not of the thing. For I would not have the scriptures abused to confirm, no, not a truth, lest it make men the bolder to wrest them at their pleasure, and for the confirming of error. M. Zuinglius, in his book De Baptismo, saith that "Christ did not in this place of Matthew institute baptism, nor prescribe either time, place, or any other circumstance, pertaining to the same¹."

Zuinglius.

Tract. ix.
cap. i. sect.
15.

I have proved before that the adminisration of the sacraments may be committed to some to whom the public preaching of the word is not committed²; and your examples here alleged do not prove the contrary, except you will have us to ground points of doctrines upon bare examples; which if we should do, many inconveniences would follow, yea, even baptizing by women, which you so greatly mislike. A facto ad jus, or a non facto ad non jus, be the usual reasons of the anabaptists, but of no force³.

The example of Noah helpeth you not, except you will either allegory, or prove that the minister of the word may make sacraments, because "Noah made the ark." The ark cannot be properly termed a sacrament in the signification

[¹ Christus enim eo in loco [Matt. cap. xxviii.] nec baptismum instituit, nec de ordine baptismi et doctrinæ disputat.—H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1561. De Bapt. Lib. Pars II. fol 92. 2.]

[² See before, pages 456, &c.]

[³ "As for M. Calvin, he useth this place expressly, which the Adm. doth, to prove that women ought, at no hand, to baptize, but 'only the ministers ordained to preach the gospel:' [Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. xv. 22. Tom. IX. p. 354.]...Neither is it anything excused by Zuinglius. For, although 'baptism be not instituted here,' which was instituted in the ministry of John Baptist, 'nor here be mentioned any circumstance;' yet the minister of that institution, which is no 'circumstance,' but a subordinate efficient cause, may well be appointed."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 117.]

that ours be; for it had no promise of eternal life annexed unto it; neither was it any seal of God's promise, but a means to save Noah and his family from perishing by the waters, and a type and figure of the church of Christ; as you have before confessed⁴.

Page, 63,
sect. 1.

Your examples which follow (although some of them be very unapt, for miracles be no sacraments, neither yet every kind of signs and wonders) may, as examples, shew that the administration of the sacraments was committed to such as were preachers of the word. But they cannot prove that it was only committed unto them, and to no other. It is not required of you to prove whether he that may preach may also administer the sacraments, but whether it be of necessity that none should be admitted to minister the sacraments, except the same also be admitted to preach; the contrary whereof I have shewed before.

T. C., omitting the purpose, proveth that which is not denied.

Chapter iii. The Third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 80, Sect. 1.

The second place you do allege is 1 Cor. xiv.; where Paul saith "it is a shame for women to speak in the congregation." Paul saith not, it is⁵ a shame for women to speak at home in private houses; for women may instruct their families, yea, and they may speak also in the congregation in time of necessity, if there be none else there that can or will preach Christ; and hereof we have examples.

T. C. Page 110, Lin. 13, and Sect. 1.

But M. Doctor riseth up, and saith that "a woman in time⁶ of necessity, and where⁷ there is none other that either can or will preach, may preach the gospel in the church."

This is strange doctrine, and such as strengtheneth the anabaptists' hands, and savoureth stronger that ways than any one thing in all the Admonition, which is so often condemned of anabaptism. His first reason to prove it is that there are examples thereof. When we allege the examples of all the churches of the apostles' times to prove the election of the minister by the church, and in other cases, which are general examples, approved and executed by the apostles, contrary to no commandment nor institution of God; yea, and, as hath been proved, according to the com-

How vain
this brag is, hath been shewed, Tract. iii.⁸

[⁴ See before, page 92.]

[⁵ Saith not that it is, Answ.]

[⁷ When, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ In the time, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ See Vol. I. pages 339, &c.]

mandment of God, M. Doctor giveth us our answer in a word, that examples prove not. Now that the question is to make good women's preaching in the church, examples I will not say of all churches, but of no one church, only of a few singular persons, not according to the commandment of the word of God, but clean contrary to the prescript word of God—I say now examples, and such singular examples, are good proofs and strong arguments.

JO. WHITGIFT.

In what point doth he “strengthen the anabaptists?” If you could have told, I trust it should not have been kept in silence. I have charged the authors of the Admonition with nothing but I have shewed my author for it; deal you with me in like manner, and spare not; otherwise your words do but savour choler. Examples without precepts make no general or necessary rule; but they sometimes declare what was done, and what may be done extraordinarily, upon like occasion, and the same circumstances, if they be commendable examples².

What force is in examples.

Matt. xxviii.
John xx.
John iv.

Women were the first that preached Christ's resurrection; a woman was the first that preached Christ in Samaria, John iv.; and yet undoubtedly none of these did contrary to the prescript word of God. Women may not speak ordinarily in the congregation, nor challenge any such function unto themselves; but upon occasion they may speak; as I have said in my Answer.

Chapter iii. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 110, Sect. 2.

A cavil.

Now, if the speech be a true messenger of the heart, I perceive Master Doctor is of this mind, that he would have women preach in the church of England at this time; for he cannot deny, and he also confesseth it

[¹ The verses are added from Repl. 2.]

[² “But note, I beseech you, what horrible confusion he bringeth into the world by this saying. For, if extraordinary examples do prove that ‘such things may be done in such cases,’ then may private men execute malefactors, because Phinees did so; and men may borrow and never pay, as did the Israelites. If he say that he addeth ‘upon like occasion and circumstance,’ it is true, but thereby he meaneth, if like need or necessity be. For, if he mean as he ought, having a particular commandment of God by word, or a rare and extraordinary instinct by the Spirit of God, his answer is nothing to purpose, considering that he will not, I think, say that the midwives have any of these two; and, if they had, they do it not in respect of the former example, but only by reason of the extraordinary either commandment or motion.”—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 122.]

sometimes, that this is the time of necessity; and indeed it must be needs an extreme necessity that driveth to make one man pastor of two churches, especially so far distant; that driveth to make men, which are not able to teach, ministers; and divers more things, which are contrary to the word of God. Therefore, this being a time of necessity, by M. Doctor's judgment we ought to have women to preach. Besides this, he saith, "if neither none other can or will preach," that then women may preach; but in the most churches of this realm there is none that either can or will preach; therefore there, and in those churches, women (at the least if they be able) may preach the gospel, and consequently minister the sacraments.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You wander from the matter, and do but seek occasion to quarrel; there is no such necessity in this church (God be thanked) as M. Doctor speaketh of; for there is none in any place or corner thereof that be ignorant of Christ, or do not profess the name of Christ. In all places they have the scriptures read unto them, which contain matter sufficient to salvation; and therefore there is no cause why women should take upon them to preach in the congregation; neither doth M. Doctor mean any such thing, as you know very well, but that it is your pleasure to dally. He meaneth such places where all be infidels, where they have neither heard of Christ, nor have his word, neither yet any other means to come by the knowledge of the same; which is nowhere in this church.

In what time a woman may preach Christ.

Chapter iii. The Fifth Division.

Admonition³.

^h 1 Cor. xiv. Women, that may ^hnot speak in a congregation, may yet, ^{34.}
¹ Tim. ii. 11. in time of necessity, minister the sacrament of baptism, and that in a private house.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 186, Sect. ult.

You say, "women, that may not speak in a congregation, may yet, in time of necessity, minister the sacrament of baptism, and that in a private house." And to prove that women may not speak in a congregation you quote 1 Cor. xiv., 1 Tim. ii.; whereas you should rather have proved that women may not, in time of necessity, minister baptism, for that is the question, and not the other. Women may speak in the congregation, if neces-

[³ The order of the Admonition and Answer is again interrupted.]

Women may speak in the church some-times¹.

sary occasion do require; as M. Calvin teacheth in his Institutions, chap. xiii. sect. 32.²

T. C. Page 110, Sect. 3.

An argument of your ignorance.

In the 187. page he citeth M. Calvin, in the 13. chap. section 32., to prove that women may teach; wherein I marvel what he meaneth so to allege M. Calvin continually: he allegeth the 13. chap. and no book, as though he had written but one book; and indeed there is no such thing in no such chapter³ of any book of his Institutions, or in any other place throughout his whole works, as I am persuaded. If this fault had been but twice or thrice, I would have thought it had been the printer's; but now that it is continual, and so oftentimes, surely he giveth great suspicion that either somebody hath mocked him with these places, or else he would abuse others, and especially him that should answer his book, setting him to seek that he should never find.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Pag. 19,
sect. 2.

You plead ignorance of such an edition of M. Calvin's Institutions; but it is because you cannot answer the place (for other places which I have in like manner alleged, for the which you might have any colour of answering, you have found out at the first; yea, and the self-same place now in question); but, when there is no shift to avoid that which is alleged, then you quarrel with the book, and suspect "that either somebody hath mocked him, or that he would abuse others, &c." No, no, T. C., I thank God I use no such dealing; I do allege nothing which I have not read in the authors themselves. I study not to encumber the Answerer; for either I set down the whole place, or else quote it so that it may easily be found. Touching this book of Institutions of M. Calvin's, which I now follow, I have spoken before, and declared why I do use it rather than any other⁴; I have laboured it, noted it, I am acquainted with it, and belike, I read it before you knew whether there was any such book or no; and, if there be no such book of M. Calvin's Institutions, only divided into chapters and sections, and not into books, I will give you all M. Calvin's works, because you so complain of lack of books.

But, to come to the thing itself, M. Calvin, in that place

[¹ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[² Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. x. 31. Tom. IX. p. 323. See Vol. I. pages 245, 6, note 3.]

[³ Chapter, Repl. 1.]

[⁴ See before, pages 268, 9, also page 326, note 1.]

speaking of such laws and orders in the church, as are not perpetual, but alterable as occasion serveth, useth this commandment of St Paul's touching the silence of women in the church, for one example to make the matter more manifest: his words be these: "Or is the commandment touching her silence such as it may not be broken without wickedness?" Chap. 13. sect. 32. And a little after: *Et est, ubi loqui non minus opportunum illi sit, quam alibi tacere*⁵: "And there is a time and place when and where it is as fit for her to speak as elsewhere to hold her peace." These words be plain, and do sufficiently answer all that you can object to the contrary.

Chapter iii. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 110, Sect. 4.

As for M. Calvin's judgment what it is of women's preaching, it may appear by that he will not by no⁶ means, no, not in time⁷ of necessity (as they term it), suffer either woman or any layman to baptize or minister any sacrament, and therefore not to preach⁸.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I doubt not of M. Calvin's judgment in that point, and yet I know other learned and notable men that think otherwise, and namely Zuinglius, in his book *De Baptismo*⁹; neither do I go about to teach that women may preach. I tell you only what extreme necessity may extraordinarily permit, without just cause of reprehension.

Chapter iii. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 110, Sect. ult.

And, as for the examples of Mary the sister of Moses, of Olda, of Anna, and the daughters of Philip the evangelist, which are all called prophetesses (for I think M. Doctor meaneth these examples); as for them, I say it will be hard for to shew that they ever prophesied or taught openly in any public meeting or congregation. But the surer answer is that, although the Lord do sometimes, not being under any law, change the order which he hath set, in raising up certain women, partly to the shame of men and to humble them, partly to let them understand that he can, if he would, want their ministry; yet it is not lawful for us to draw that into example, and to follow it; or that, forasmuch as he breaketh the law which is not subject unto it, and which he made not for himself, that therefore we may break the law whereunto we be subject, and to whom it is given. But we must go in the broad high-way of the commandment, and of the ordinary usage of God in governing his church, and not in the by-path of certain singular examples, which have been in divers ages. And, as often as God hath used this extraordinary means of the ministry of women, so often also hath he confirmed their calling either by miracle, or some wonderful issue, or with some other singular note and mark, whereby he hath made their calling, otherwise strange and monstrous, most certain and undoubted to all men.

[⁵ See above, note 2.] [⁶ Any, Repl. 2.] [⁷ In the time, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ Hoc etiam scire ad rem pertinet, perperam fieri si privati homines baptismi administrationem sibi usurpent: ... Neque enim aut mulieribus aut hominibus quibuslibet mandavit Christus ut baptizarent: sed quos apostolos constituerat, iis mandatum hoc dedit. &c.—Calvin. Op. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. xv. 20. Tom. IX. p. 354.]

[⁹ H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1531. De Bapt. Lib. Pars II. fol. 96. 2. See below, page 511, note 7.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

There be other examples also besides these, and yet these be sufficient to prove anything that I have spoken touching this matter: he that well considereth what is written of Mary the sister of Moses, Num. xii., or of Olda, 2 Reg. xxii., will not doubt whether they spake "openly in the congregation," or no; but you will not stick upon this point. And in your second answer I agree with you in this, that we must make no general rule of these particular examples; and that women may not presume to preach in the congregation, except they be extraordinarily called thereunto, and have certain and sure signs of their calling. And surely I muse what you mean to spend so much labour about this matter, wherein there is no controversy. I might say unto you, as it hath pleased you to say unto me, that you have some old rusty notes which you would gladly utter, and you know not how otherwise to make merchandize of them than by picking such a quarrel to utter them.

Chapter iii. The Eighth Division.

T. C. Page 111, Sect. 1.

There is a greater difficulty than M. Doctor mentioneth in the words of St Paul, where he saith, "a woman praying or prophesying ought to be veiled, and have her head covered;" in which words ^{1 Cor. xi. 5, 1} it seemeth that the apostle licenseth a woman to prophesy, so that she do it with her head covered. But to him that shall diligently consider the place, it shall appear that the women of Corinth did pass the bounds of modesty and of shamefastness two ways; whereof one was that they came into the congregation, contrary to the custom of those countries, with their heads and faces uncovered; another was that they also took upon them to speak in the congregation; both which faults St Paul condemned, but in their several and proper places. Although therefore, speaking against the abuse of uncovering their head, he doth not condemn their boldness in teaching, yet he did not therefore approve it; the confutation whereof he reserved to a more commodious place.

[¹ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

To what end bring you in this saying of St Paul? I do not remember that I have at any time used it for any proof; and yet you have objected more than you can well answer. Howbeit, because it pertaineth not to improve anything that I affirm, I will not examine your answer (and yet not yours, but M. Calvin's²), nor trouble the reader with frivolous and vain digressions.

Chapter iii. The Ninth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 80, Sect. 2, 3.

If women do baptize, they baptize in private houses, not in the congregation.

Surely you are able to mar a good matter for lack of skilful handling.

T. C. Page 111, Sect. 1, 2.

But saith he, "if women do baptize, it is in private houses." I have shewed before that they may not baptize at all, therefore not in private houses; besides that that I have in the reply unto the section in the one-and-twenty page shewed how it is not lawful neither to preach the word, nor to minister the sacraments in private corners³.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I answer to their argument, and go not about to confirm the baptizing by women. I say this argument followeth not: St Paul forbiddeth them to speak in the congregation; ergo, they may not baptize; for they baptize in private houses, not in public places; and St Paul doth bid them to speak in private places. Whatsoever you have replied unto, I have there answered where you have replied; and it is manifest that both the word may be preached, and the sacraments ministered in private places, upon just occasion.

[² Nam quum reprehendit quod prophetabant nudo capite, non tamen illis permittit prophetare alio quovis modo: quin potius hujus quoque vitii reprehensionem in alium locum differt, nempe in caput 14.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. ad Corinth. cap. xi. 5. Tom. VII. p. 178.]

[³ See Vol. I. pages 207, &c.]

Chapter iii. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 111, Sect. 2, 3, 4.

For the which matter of not ministering the sacraments in private houses, to the authors of the Admonition, citing the eleventh chapter of the first epistle unto the Corinthians, M. Doctor answereth that he reproveth the profanation of the supper, by banqueting and contempt of their brethren, and exhorteth to tarry one for another.

The places be interpreted to shew how far out of square they be alleged in the Admonition.

But what is this to the purpose? we ask not M. Doctor the interpretation of this place, as we do not of all the rest which he interpreteth, where there is no occasion in the world to interpret them, being of themselves very clear; and the interpretation which is brought never almost making anything for the solution of that which is objected; which I desire the reader to mark throughout his whole book. For what if St Paul reprove the profanation of the supper of the Lord? doth it follow therefore that he doth not give to understand that the sacrament should be administered in a common assembly? What if he exhort to tarry one for another? therefore doth he not dehort from celebrating of the sacrament in a private house?

And surely methink you cannot be so ignorant as you make yourself, that you should not understand their argument; and therefore I think you do rather dissemble it, as you do in divers other places; for all men may easily perceive that, as St Paul opposeth the supper of the Lord to the common supper, his banquet to the common banquet, so he opposeth there manifestly the church and congregation unto the private house, and declareth that, as the common supper or banquet ought to be kept at their houses, so the Lord's supper and his banquet ought to be celebrated in the congregation.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I think indeed that M. Doctor's interpretations trouble you shrewdly; for they detect much of your vanity, and make manifest the lack of discretion and learning in the authors of the Admonition. I say lack of discretion and learning; for otherwise so evidently and so oft to abuse the scriptures were great dishonesty, or rather impiety. If I have missed in interpreting, or wrongfully accused them, why do not you make it known as occasion is offered? It stands you upon, for it is much to your dishonesty, and a great discredit to your whole cause.

Touching this place of St Paul, 1 Cor. xi., I say as I said before; and I add that he only reproveth such abuses as were used among them in their public assemblies; he speaketh not of celebrating the communion in private places.

[¹ This reference is introduced from Repl. 2.]

St Paul maketh no such opposition in that place as you speak of, neither doth he speak anything sounding that way, only he reproveth the abuse which was then crept into the supper of the Lord among the Corinthians: *Quod sacro et spirituali epulo profana symposia permiscerent, idque cum pauperum contumelia*²: “In that they mingled profane banquets with that holy and spiritual feast, and that with the contumely of the poor;” as M. Calvin saith. Wherefore it appeareth that either you are disposed to make good whatsoever they have written, be it never so absurd, or else you wittingly dissemble the true sense and meaning of this place.

Calv. in
1 Cor. xi.

Chapter iii. The Eleventh Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 80, Sect. 4.

You say in your margent, that Victor, anno 198., did first appoint that women might baptize. By this you³ add more credit to the cause than you are aware of; for Victor was a godly bishop, and a martyr, and the church at that time was in great purity, not being long after the apostles' time. But truly I can find no such thing in all his decrees, only this he saith, that “such as be converted of the gentiles to the faith of Christ in time of necessity, or at the point of death, may be baptized at any time in any place, whether it be in the sea, or in a river, or in a pond, or in a well, so that they make a confession of their faith⁴ :” he maketh no mention at all of any baptizing by women; and therefore you have done your cause great injury.

Victor a good bishop and martyr.

Jo. WHITGIFT.

Nothing answered hereunto.

[² Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. i. ad Corinth. cap. xi. 20. Tom. VII. p. 180.]

[³ Ye, Answ.]

[⁴ Et constituit, ut necessitate faciente, ubicumque inventus fuisset quicumque hominum ex gentibus veniens, sive in flumine, sive in mari, sive in fonte, sive in stagno, baptizaretur: tantum christianæ credulitatis confessione declarata, integer efficeretur Christianus.—Ex Lib. Pont. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 591.]

¶ Of ministering the sacraments in private places.

Chapter iv. The First Division.

Admonition.

*Then they were ministered in public "assemblies, now in " Mar. i. 5.
private houses¹. 1 Cor. xi. 18.*

Answer to the Admonition, Page 92, Sect. 2.

Baptism ministered in private places².

The places of scripture, whereby you prove that sacraments were then ministered in public assemblies, be taken out of the first of St Mark and 1 Cor. xi.; which places of scripture prove that John did baptize openly, and that the Lord's supper was ministered in the public congregation; but neither of them both conclude that these sacraments may not also be ministered upon any occasion in private houses; for what sequel is there in this reason? "All the country of Judea, and they of Jerusalem, went out unto him, and were baptized of him in the river of Jordan, confessing their sins;" ergo, baptism may not be ministered upon any occasion in private houses: you may as well conclude that none ought to be baptized but in the river of Jordan, and none but such as be able to confess their sins; and so you should seclude children from baptism, as the anabaptists do.

Arg. non³ sequitur.

T. C. Page 111, Sect. ult.

*To the Admonition objecting, in the ninety-and-two page, that John baptized openly amongst the congregation, he answereth and Mark i. 5.⁴
saith, that it may be as well concluded that we should baptize only in the river of Jordan, and none but those that be of age; by which saying he giveth to understand that to baptize in the church hath no greater necessity than the baptizing in Jordan; nor it skilleth no more whether baptism be ministered in the public assembly than it is necessary or skilleth whether we be baptized in the river of Jordan; and that the baptism of young infants hath no better grounds than private baptism hath. The latter⁵ whereof (both being absurd) is too too injurious unto the baptism of young infants. For, as of our Saviour Christ's preaching⁶ in*

Nay, I give you to understand the fondness of the argument.

[¹ This is a sentence from a paragraph of the Admonition, the rest of which is considered below, Tractat. XII. Answ. repeats it at the head of the portion which here follows, with the introduction: The second general reason is this: Then sacraments were ministered &c.]

[² This marginal note is not in Answ.]

[³ Non is not printed in Answ.]

[⁴ This marginal reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[⁵ Later, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ Preachings, Repl. 1 and 2.]

public places, and refusing private places, we do gather that the preaching of the word ought to be public; even so of St John's preaching and baptizing in open meetings we conclude that both preaching and baptizing ought to be in public assemblies.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I refer it to the learned reader to judge whether this be a good argument or no: John baptized openly in the river Jordan; ergo, baptism may at no time upon any occasion be ministered in a private house. And, if any will judge it to be good, then will I demand of them, why this should not be as good: John did baptize in Jordan; ergo, none ought to be baptized but in the river Jordan. Or this: John baptized such as confessed their sins; ergo, none must be baptized but such as are able to make a confession of their sins. This is that unskilful kind of reasoning that Zuinglius so oft reproveth the anabaptists for, and he calleth it an argument *a facto ad jus*⁷. I do not in any respect speak against baptizing in the church, but do greatly commend it, as a thing most convenient; but I do not so tie the sacrament to the place, or public congregation, that I make it of the necessity of the sacrament, so that it may not upon any occasion be ministered in a private house. I compare not baptizing in the church and in the river Jordan together; neither do I say that baptizing of young infants "hath no better grounds than private baptism hath;" but I disallow this kind of proof, which the Admonition useth; and I see not why it is not of like force in all other the circumstances of that place, and those examples that I have alleged.

Christ preached both privately and publicly, in the temple and in private families, in great assemblies and severally to his own disciples, and at all times as occasion served; and therefore you cannot conclude by the example of Christ that the preaching of the gospel ought only to be public in the open congregation, and at no time private upon any occasion.

Chapter iv. The Second Division.

T. C. Page 112, Sect. 1.

And, although to some one action there concur divers things, which partly are not to be followed at all, partly are indifferent to be followed or not followed, yet neither the unlawfulness of the one to be followed, nor the indifferency of the other can hinder, but there are some other things¹ in the same action necessary to be followed, which may be considered both of the place of the Acts, touching the election, where I have proved Acts i.² some things there mentioned to be necessary to be done in elections, although other some be not convenient nor fit for us to follow. And I have shewed it also by M. Calvin, which M. Doctor allegeth for himself, and by Cyprian³, whose authority he would be loth to reject, I am sure, lest he should lose the opinion of his studiousness of the old writers, which he hunteth so diligently after in this book, and whereof he maketh the authors of the Admonition so great contemners. And it is not hard to shew the same in twenty places more, as in the tenth of St Matt.⁴ and St Luke; where, as there are divers things not Matt. x.² Luke ix.² Luke x.² to be followed of the ministers now, other things indifferent to be followed, so are there also other things that be as well commanded to all the ministers that now are as they were then either to the 12. or 70. disciples.

[⁷ H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1531. Elench. contr. Catabapt. Pars II. fol. 9. 2. See Vol. I. page 353, note 7.]

It is said, but not proved.

A digression from the matter to the person.

JO. WHITGIFT.

And of those circumstances whereof there is no commandment, how prove you which be “indifferent,” which be unlawful or “not convenient to be followed,” which “necessary?” why is it not as necessary by this example of John that they should be baptized in Jordan, or that they should confess their sins before they be baptized, as it is that they should be publicly baptized? If you take upon you to interpret without authority and ground of scripture, it is meet that you should shew very good and substantial reason. I demand the like touching the places alleged out of the Acts, where you retain what you list, refuse what you list, alter as you list, as though you were lord over the scripture, and had omnia jura tam divina quam humana in scrinio pectoris⁵: “all laws as well divine as human in the coffer of your breast,” like to the pope. But to these places of the Acts I have answered in their due place. Your scoffs make not your cause one whit the better.

Of “twenty places,” you recite not one; and of “divers things, some indifferent, some not to be followed, other some

[¹ Are other some things, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² These marginal references are inserted from Repl. 2.]

[³ See Vol. I. pages 297, 358.]

[⁴ As in St Matthew, Repl. 2.]

[⁵ ... pontifex (qui jura omnia in scrinio pectoris sui censetur habere) &c.—Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Sext. Decretal. Lib. I. Tit. ii. cap. l. col. 11.]

commanded to all ministers, spoken to the twelve or seventy disciples in the x. of Matthew, and Luke, you name none:" speaking without ground or reason is but prattling. I know that in one action there be divers circumstances, of divers conditions and natures; but, if any of them be necessary at all times to be observed, the same is contained in some commandment in the scriptures; and therefore well saith Zuinglius that an argument a facto ad jus is then strong, when as we are able to shew that that which is done is done according to some rule or commandment⁶. Now, if you can shew me either rule or commandment in scripture, that upon no occasion we may preach or baptize in private families, I yield unto you. But, if you cannot this do, your examples prove what was then done, and what in the like cause may be done now, but they make not any general and perpetual rule.

Necessary circumstances are commanded.

What examples do prove without commandment.

Now touching these and such like circumstances, in my opinion M. Zuinglius, in his book De Baptismo, maketh a full resolution, which may satisfy any reasonable man. His words be these: "There is here three errors about circumstances, that is, the elements of the world. The first is of the time; for they thought that baptism was not rightly administered, except it were in the first day; for the time is of no great weight, so that we take diligent heed of this, that none rashly or negligently defer it longer than is convenient, for by this occasion it may come to pass that the baptism of children might be taken away. Another error is touching the circumstance of the person; for they thought that baptism could not be administered of no other than of a priest; when as notwithstanding every man may minister it, even a woman, if necessity require. The third error is in the circumstance of the place, because it is not necessary that the infant should only be baptized in the church⁷."

[⁶ II. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1581. Elench. contr. Catabapt. Pars II. fol. 9. 2. See Vol. I. page 353, note 7.]

[⁷ Triplex enim hic circa circumstantias, id est, elementa mundi error versatur. Primus enim temporis erat, quo baptismum non nisi primo die rite conferri posse arbitrabantur: cum temporis ratio non adeo multum hic momenti habeat, modo hoc caveatur sedulo, ne quis temere vel negligenter rem hanc diutius, quam par sit, differat. Facile enim hujusmodi occasione fieri posset, ut parvulorum baptismus e medio tolleretur. Alter error circa personæ circumstantiam versabatur, quod baptismum a nemine alio, quam a solo sacerdote, conferri posse putarent, cum interim quivis hominum hoc facere possit, imo fœmina quoque, si quando necessitas sic postulare videatur. Tertio in loci circumstantia non minus

Chapter iv. The Third Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 92, Sect. 3, 4.

Baptism was ministered in Cornelius' house, Acts x. The place is not of the substance of the sacraments.

Baptism in an house.

To the 1 Cor. xi. it is answered before. Surely this church of England doth not permit the sacraments to be ministered in private places, except there be a congregation, and then not usually, but only in certain cases.

T. C. Page 112, Sect. 1.

Another reason he addeth there, that St Peter baptized in Cornelius' house. But M. Doctor maketh not the best choice of his arguments. For St Paul's baptizing in the house of the jailor had been more fit for him. For unto his place it may be easily answered, that Acts xvi. 33.¹ Cornelius, having so great a family as it is like he had, and besides that divers soldiers underneath him, and, further, his friends and his acquaintance which he had called, had a competent number, and as many as would make a congregation, and as could commodiously be preached unto in one place. But the answer to both these examples, and other such like, as that St Paul baptized in the house² of Stephana, is easy. For, there being persecutions at that time, so that it was not safe neither 1 Cor. i. 16.¹ for the minister nor for the people to be seen, it was meet that they should do it in houses, which otherwise they would have done in open places; and then those houses which receive the congregation are not³, as I have shewed, for the time to be counted private houses; and, further, in places where the gospel hath not been received, nor no church gathered, but one only household embracing the gospel, I say in such a case, and especially in the time of persecution, where should the ministers preach, or minister the sacraments, more conveniently than in that house where those professors of the gospel be? Now, to draw this into our churches which may safely come into open places, and where the church and congregation standeth of divers households, is a token of great want of judgment in shuffling those things together which, for the great diversity of their natures, will not be mingled.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The example of Peter's baptizing in Cornelius' house is sufficient to prove that then it was lawful to baptize in quam primis istis, errabatur, eo quod non opus erat, infantem in templo tantummodo baptizari.—Id. De Bapt. Lib. Pars II. fol. 96. 2.]

[¹ These references are added from Repl. 1 and 2: the former does not give the verses.]

[² Baptized the house, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[³ Received the congregation were not, Repl. 2.]

private families: the example of Paul baptizing the jailor and his family proveth the same; but it ministereth a more ready answer to a quarreller, because Paul, then being prisoner, had not such liberty to make choice of his place as Peter had. But they are both very fit examples for my purpose: the bigness of Cornelius' family or the smallness is not material to this question; for we speak of the place, not of the persons. And, whereas you say that in Cornelius' house "there was a competent number, and as many as would make a congregation," I answer that so it is with us when baptism is ministered in private families; for, "whosoever two or three be gathered together in the name of Christ," there is a congregation. Matt. xviii.

To your second answer of the difference of time, "because that was in time of persecution, &c.," I say that, as persecution was then a cause why baptism was usually ministered in private houses, so necessity is now the cause why the same is ministered sometimes in private families. Neither do I maintain or allow the administering of the sacraments in private families to be usual, or without urgent cause, but only upon extreme necessity of sickness, peril of death, and such like. In which cases, as never any learned man misliked ministering of the sacraments in such places, so are not you able to shew either scripture, doctor, or reason to the contrary; and, whatsoever you say of the time of persecution touching the matter, the same may be said of the time of necessity also. But here I would have the reader to note, that you are now driven to confess a difference in the church betwixt the time of persecution and the time of prosperity, and that to be convenient in the one which is not convenient for the other; which distinction and diversity of times you would not before acknowledge to make any difference in the election of ministers, and government of the church; and yet the case is all one.

Chapter iv. The Fourth Division.

Admonition.

They should first prove that⁴. . . private communion, &c. are agreeable to the written word of God⁵.

[⁴ Prove by the word that, Adm.; prove by the word of God that, Answ.]

[⁵ Adm. and Answ., instead of &c., have the enumeration of several other things, and conclude word of the Almighty. The paragraph appears below, page 562; also Tractat. xxi. Chap. i. Div. 4.]

Answer to the Admonition, Page 152, Sect. 2.

Of the communion ministered in private places¹.

If you mean by “private communion” the communion ministered to one alone, there is no such allowed in the book of common prayers; but, if you call it private, because it is ministered sometimes² in private houses to sick persons, then have we the example of Christ, who ministered the supper in a private house, and inner parlour, Mark xiv. Luke xxii. Matt. xxvi.; we have also the example of the apostles themselves, who did minister the supper in private houses, especially if that place be understood of the supper which is in the second of the Acts, and before alleged of you to prove that common and usual bread ought to be in the supper; likewise of the primitive church; as appeareth in the second apology of Justinus Martyr, Tertull. De Corona Militis, and others³.

T. C. Page 112, Sect. 2.

And in the page 152. he bringeth other reasons to prove that the sacraments may be ministered in a private house; whereof the first is that our Saviour Christ celebrated his supper in a private house, and in an inner parlour; the reason whereof is easily to be known; for the law of God ordained that every householder in his house should eat the passover with his own family, if it were so great as that they might well eat up a whole lamb.

JO. WHITGIFT.

That is a reason why Christ did eat the passover in a private house; but it is no reason why he did celebrate his supper there in like manner. Wherefore my reason holdeth as yet.

Chapter iv. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 112, Sect. 3.

Our Saviour Christ therefore with his household observeth this law, and, for because he would declare that the passover had his end, and that his holy sacrament should come in place thereof, he doth forthwith celebrate his supper in the same place⁴, which if he had not done, neither could he have done it at all, the hour of his apprehension then approaching; neither should it so lively have appeared that either the passover was abolished, or that the supper came in place of it, being celebrated both at another time, and in another place.

[¹ Communion in private houses, Answ. 2.]

[² Sometime, Answ.]

[³ Just. Mart. Op. Par. 1742. Apol. i. 65, 7. pp. 82, 3; Tertull. Op. Franek. 1597. De Cor. Mil. 3. p. 180. In these places descriptions are given of the christian rites then celebrated; but it seems doubtful whether private houses were used as the places of ministration. See Bingham, Orig. Eccles. Book viii. chap. i. sect. 13, &c.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Our Saviour Christ's example of instituting and ministering his supper in a private family, giving afterward no commandment to the contrary, is a manifest proof that the place is not of the substance of the sacrament, and that upon occasion it may be ministered in a private house. You shew a reason why Christ, at that time and in that place, did minister his supper, but you shew no reason why we may not in like manner upon necessary occasion celebrate the communion in the like place. Unnecessary proof.

Chapter iv. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 112, Sect. ult.

For the celebrating of the supper in houses in the apostles' times, and in Justinus'⁵ and Tertullian's times, which were times of persecution, I have spoken before; where also I declared that such houses for the time are not private, but public.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This answer is as fit for me as it is for you; for admit that the sacraments may be administered in private families in the case of necessity, and I ask no more. For, if persecution be a necessary cause, why is not sickness and peril of death so in like manner? again, if a private house be "no private" but a "public" place, when for the fear of persecution the sacraments be ministered in it, why is it not so likewise when they be there ministered for extremity of sickness and fear of death? the reason is all one, and the case of necessity like; and therefore you have not said anything against me, but with me.

Chapter iv. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 113, Sect. 1.

And these are his reasons wherewith he would prove that the sacraments, and therefore also the sacrament of baptism, may be ministered in a private house.

[⁴ And that his holy sacrament of the supper should come in place thereof he doth forthwith celebrate it in the same place, Repl. 2.]

[⁵ Justins, Repl. 1 and 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Circumcision
in private houses.

And these reasons have you confirmed rather than confuted; but to the contrary you have shewed no reason at all; and therefore these stand in full force; to the which I might add that circumcision was celebrated in private families; as M. Calvin truly gathereth, upon the 58. verse of the first chapter of Luke¹; which is a better argument to prove that the sacraments may be ministered in private places, than you have shewed any to the contrary.

[Admonition.

The seventh.

And as for private baptism, that will abide the touchstone. "Go ye," saith Christ, "and teach, baptizing them, &c."^g Now teaching is divorced from communions and sacraments. They may go alone without doctrine.] ^{8Matt.xxviii. 19.}

[Answer to the Admonition.]

[Of private baptism I have spoken before: here is nothing alleged against it but the xxviii. of Matt.: "Go ye and teach, baptizing them, &c.;" which text doth prove that it was a portion of the apostles' office to baptize, but in what place, at what time, how many at once, is not there prescribed; and therefore "private baptism" may "abide this touchstone" for any thing that I see to the contrary.

*The anabaptists use this text, Matt. xxviii, Euntes docete omnes gentes, baptizantes eos, &c., to improve the baptism of infants; because he saith in that text docete, before he saith baptizantes, &c.; and "infants cannot be taught," as that learned man Zuinglius declareth in his book De Baptismo, fol. 64. and 65.; where also he saith that "Christ did not in this place institute baptism, nor prescribe either time, place, or any other circumstance pertaining to the same;" as appeareth in divers other places of that book². But, because this text is shamefully abused of the anabaptists, to overthrow the baptizing of infants, even as it is also abused of these men, both against private baptism, and also to prove that preaching of necessity must go before baptism, which tendeth to the same end the anabaptists use it for, therefore I will set down the very words of Zuinglius touching that text. In his book De Baptismo he saith thus: "The first foundation that those bring for themselves which deny baptism to infants is the words of Christ, Matt. xxviii.: 'Go and teach all nations, baptizing them, &c.' For they urging the bare order of words cry this one thing, Docete et baptizate: 'Teach and baptize, &c.'" And a little after: "Although we grant you this order of words to be something, yet they pertain not so to children and infants, but that they may be baptized before doctrine. For these words pertain to them that may be taught. But it is certain that infants cannot be taught; and therefore these words cannot prove that they may not be baptized. But the anabaptists do object, if these words pertain not to infants, then infants ought not to be baptized; for Christ did here institute the sign and use of baptism. You are far deceived, not understanding the scriptures; for the institution of baptism is not begun in this place; the ignorance whereof hath made you fall into this error. &c. Neither can you prove anything, although the order of words be taken according to the letter. The order of words prove nothing; for, if we shall admit that, there is many places of scripture that we shall be compelled to take in a preposterous and false sense; which I could prove by divers examples. In the first of John, John Baptist, pointing to Christ with his finger saith, 'Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sins of the world;' and a little after he saith, 'And I knew him not.' How shall it be said that he knew him not, when as he testified before, that he was the Lamb of God? Likewise Paul in the tenth to the Romans saith, 'If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and believe in thine heart that God raised him from death, thou shalt be saved.' In the which words we see the confession of the mouth to be put in the first place, the which, notwithstanding, is vain and unprofitable, without the inward faith of the mind; and therefore the order of words in this place of Matthew is not so stiffly to be urged¹." Furthermore the same Zuinglius in the same book declareth how that preaching before baptism is necessary when such are baptized as have discretion, and may be taught, but not when children and infants be baptized to whom preaching can do no good². But of this matter I will say no more until I understand further of your meaning. In the meanwhile you give great cause for a man to suspect that you would have none baptized but such as be taught; which is to seclude children from baptism*.

[¹ Colligimus ex Lucæ verbis, quamvis domi circumciderent suos infantes, non tamen id facere solitos sine hominum frequentia et conventu.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Harm. Evang. Luc. i. 58. Tom. VI. p. 16.]

[² See before, p. 498, note 1.]

Slanderous speech.

You say untruly when you do affirm that "teaching in this church is divorced from communions and sacraments;" but such forged slanderous speeches be usual to you. Of this matter also I have spoken in the former part.]³

[¹ E quibus primum esto, quod pro sese adducere solent, qui infantibus baptismum negant. Christus Jesus apud Matthæum cap. 28. ait, Euntes docete omnes gentes, baptizantes eos &c....Nudum enim verborum ordinem urgentes hoc unum clamitant, Docete et baptizate...Nam etiamsi demus vobis, hunc verborum ordinem aliquid hoc loco posse, ad parvulos tamen et infantes hæc nequaquam pertinent, quo minus ante doctrinam baptismi initiari debeant. Verba enim hæc ad eos pertinent, qui doctrina verboque externo instituuntur. Parvulos autem non doceri certo constat. Verba ergo hæc ad illos referri non possunt, quo minus baptizari debeant. Sed obijciunt hic nobis catabaptistæ, Si ad infantes hæc referri non possunt, infantes quoque baptizandi non sunt. Christus enim hoc loco baptismi signum et usum instituit. Toto cælo erratis, o viri, non intelligentes scripturas... Nec enim hoc loco baptismi institutio cæpta est: cujus ignorantia vobis erroris vestri causam præbuit...Nec enim quicquam efficietis, etiamsi verborum ordo juxta nudam literam alicujus momenti hoc loco esse queat. Sed ordinis ratio nihil urget. Si enim hoc admiserimus, jam plures sunt scripturæ loci, quos præposterò et fallaci omnino sensu recipere cogemur. Cujus rei exempla plura proferre possum. Apud Joannem enim capite i. Baptista servatorem Christum digito demonstrans, dicit, Ecce Agnus ille Dei, qui tollit peccatum mundi. Et paulo post idem ille inquit, Et ego non noveram eum. Qua autem ratione eum non novisse dicetur, cum antea testatus sit, ipsum esse Agnum Dei? &c. Item Paulus ad Romanos scribens, cap. x. ait, Si confessus fueris ore tuo Dominum Jesum, et credideris in corde tuo quod Deus illum excitavit a mortuis, salvus eris. In quibus verbis oris confessionem primo loco poni videmus, quæ tamen, nisi fides animi interna accedat, vana est et inutilis. Non igitur verborum ordo in hoc Matthæi loco pertinaciter urgendus est.—II. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1581. De Bapt. fol. 64. 2, 65.]

[² Interim tamen hoc illis non inviti concedimus, doctrinam et institutionem baptismi præmittendam esse si quando incredulos perveniamus. &c.—Id. ibid. fol. 92. 2.]

[³ The portions of Admonition and Answer between brackets do not appear in the Defence: it is thought desirable to introduce them here. The piece of the Admonition, p. 516, immediately precedes that in page 501: the paragraph of Answer between the asterisks is only in Answ. 2.]

¶ The sacraments ministered by other than ministers.

Chapter v. The First Division.

Admonition.

^{19.} ¹ Matt. xxviii Then by ministers ^wonly, now by midwives and deacons
¹ Cor. iv. 1. equally⁴.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 93, Sect. 2.

That then the sacraments were ministered only by ministers, you allege the xxviii. of Matt.; which place is answered before. Likewise 1 Cor. iv.: "Let a man so think of us as of the ministers of Christ, and disposers of the mysteries of God." Here is not one word for your purpose, except you take mysteries for sacraments, which if you do, you are much deceived; for by the word "mysteries" here he understandeth the word of God, and gospel of Christ; as all learned writers do interpret it.

Whether any may minister the sacraments besides the minister⁵.

What mysteries be⁶.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Nothing answered to the unapt allegation of the 1 Cor. iv.

Chapter v. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 93, Sect. 2.

We read in the eighth of the Acts, that Philip, a⁷ deacon, did baptize; we read also that Moses' wife did circumcise. But where doth this church of England allow any woman to baptize, or deacon to celebrate the Lord's supper? And, if it did, the dignity of the sacraments do not depend upon the man, be he minister or not minister, be he good or evil. [*Well saith Master Calvin in his Institutions, cap. 17: "Now, if it be true that we have set down, the sacrament is not to be esteemed of his hand by whom it is ministered, but as it were of the hand

Philip, deacon, baptized. Moses' wife did circumcise.

[⁴ This is a sentence from a paragraph in Adm. and is repeated at the head of the portion of the Answer which here follows, with the introduction: The third general reason is this.]

[⁵ This marginal note is not in Answ.]

[⁶ Mysteries what they be, Answ. 2.]

[⁷ Philip being a, Answ.]

of God from whom it certainly cometh: hereof we may gather that nothing is added or taken from the dignity of it by him by whom it is ministered. And therefore, as among men if an epistle be sent, so that the hand and seal be known, it skilleth not who or what manner of person carrieth it; even so it is sufficient for us to know the hand and seal of the Lord in his sacraments, by whomsoever they be delivered. Hereby is the error of the Donatists confuted, who measured the virtue and worthiness of the sacrament by the worthiness of the minister. Such be now-a-days our anabaptists, which deny us to be rightly baptized, because we were baptized by wicked and idolatrous persons in the pope's church. And therefore they furiously urge re-baptization; against whose folly we shall be sufficiently defended, if we think that we were baptized not in the name of any man, but in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and therefore baptism not to be of man, but of God, by whomsoever it be ministered¹." Hæc Calvinus. ² Let³ every one take heed that they do not usurp that authority whereunto they be not called.

[These be your general reasons, which indeed be no reasons, but bare words. Your particular reasons, whereby you seem to prove that neither of the sacraments be sincerely ministered, be these that follow. And first concerning the Lord's supper you reason on this sort.]⁴

[¹ Porro si verum est quod constituimus, sacramentum non ex ejus manu æstimandum esse a quo administratur, sed velut ex ipsa Dei manu, a quo haud dubie profectum est: inde colligere licet nihil illi afferri vel auferri ejus dignitate per cuius manum traditur. Ac perinde atque inter homines, siqua missa epistola fuerit, modo satis et manus et signum agnoscatur, minime refert quis aut qualis tabellarius fuerit: ita nobis sufficere debet manum et signum Domini nostri in sacramentis suis agnoscere, a quocunque tandem tabellario deferantur. His Donatistarum error pulchre refutatur, qui vim ac pretium sacramenti metiebantur ministri dignitate. Tales hodie sunt catabaptistæ nostri, qui rite nos baptizatos pernegant, quod ab impiis et idololatræ in regno papali baptizati sumus: itaque anabaptismum furiose urgent. Adversus quorum ineptias satis valida ratione munimur, si cogitemus nos baptismo initiatos, non in nomen alicujus hominis, sed in nomen Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus sancti: ideoque baptismum non esse hominis, sed Dei: a quocunque tandem administratus fuerit.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. xv. 16. Tom. IX. p. 353.]

[² This portion between the brackets is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[³ But let, Answ. 2.]

[⁴ This paragraph is inserted from Answ. The last words are introductory to the matters treated on in Tractat. xv.]

T. C. Page 113, Sect. 1, 2, 3.

He hath certain other to prove that women may baptize, whereof the first is in the 93. page; and that is, that Sephora, Moses' wife, circumcised her child; whereunto I have answered partly before, that particular examples, especially contrary to general rules, are not to be followed; and will further answer, if I first admonish the reader whereupon this baptism of midwives and in private houses rose, that, when we know of how rotten a stock it came, the fruit itself may be more loathsome unto us. It first therefore rose upon a false interpretation of the place of St John: "Un-

John iii. 5.⁵ less a man be born again of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." Where certain do interpret the word "water" for the material and elemental water wherewith men are washed, when as our Saviour Christ taketh water there, by a translation or borrowed speech, for the Spirit of God, the effect whereof it shadoweth out. For, even as in another place by the fire and Spirit⁶

Matt. iii. 11.⁵ he meaneth nothing but the Spirit of God, which purgeth and purifieth as the fire doth; so in this place by the water and the Spirit he meaneth nothing else but the Spirit of God, which cleanseth the filth of sin, and cooleth the broiling heat of an unquiet conscience, as water washeth the thing which is foul, and quencheth the heat of the fire. Secondly, this error came by a false and unnecessary conclusion drawn of that place. For, although the scripture should say that none can be saved but those which have the Spirit of God, and are baptized with material and elemental water, yet ought it to be understood of those which can conveniently

John iii. 18.⁵ and orderly be brought to baptism; as the scripture, saying that whoso doth not believe the gospel is already condemned, meaneth this sentence of those which can hear the gospel, and have discretion to understand it when they hear it, and cannot here shut under this condemnation either those that be born deaf, and so remain, or little infants or natural fools, that have no wit to conceive what is preached.

And hereupon St Augustine concludeth that all not baptized are condemned; which is as absurdly concluded of him as that of our Saviour Christ's words, "Except one eat the flesh of the Son of man he hath not life," he concludeth that whatsoever he be which receiveth not the sacrament of the supper is damned⁷.

Upon this false conclusion of St Augustine hath risen this profanation of the sacrament of baptism in being ministered in private houses, and by women or laymen; as also upon his other absurd conclusion sprung a horrible abuse of the Lord's supper, whilst they did thrust the bread and wine into young infants' mouths; for that men were persuaded that otherwise, if their children should die before they were baptized, or had received the supper, that¹ they were damned for ever. And what better token can there be that this was the cause of this blind baptism, than that the papists, from whom this baptism by women is translated, were of the same judgment, and for that cause brought in their baptism by women. Hereunto may be added another cause, which is that, as (when the church began not only to decline, but to fall away from the sincerity of religion) it borrowed a number of other profanations of the heathen, so also it borrowed this. For, as the heathen had women priests, so it would have also her women priests; and that this was another occasion of bringing in the baptism by women it appeareth by your Clement², if he can speak any Lib. iii. cap. 9. truth.

[⁵ The verses are supplied from Repl. 2.]

[⁶ And the Spirit, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ Si ergo ut tot et tanta divina testimonia concinunt, nec salus nec vita æterna sine baptismo et corpore et sanguine Domini cuiquam speranda est, frustra sine his promittitur parvulis.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. De Pecc. Mer. et Remiss. Lib. i. cap. xxiv. 34. Tom. X. cols. 19, 20. Conf. ad Bonifac. Episc. Epist. xcvi. 10. Tom. II. col. 263.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is untrue that I use any reasons at all “to prove that women may baptize:” only I bring this and such like examples to improve this general assertion of the Admonition, that “then sacraments were ministered by ministers only, and not by midwives or deacons.” For deacons then did baptize; and Moses’ wife long before that time did circumcise. I know that “particular examples” make no general rules; but you are not ignorant that particular examples may in the like cases and circumstances be followed, when there is no rule to the contrary.

Particular examples may sometimes be followed.

The place in the iii. of John by you alleged hath divers interpretations; and the most part of the ancient writers do take water in that place for material and elemental water; as Augustine³, Chrysostom⁴, Ambrose⁵, Cyril⁶, and sundry others, even as many of the ancient fathers as I have read upon that text. But, because I do mislike as much as you the opinion of those that think infants to be condemned which are not baptized, therefore I will not contend with you, either in the interpretation of that place, or in any other thing that you have spoken touching this error: only this I say, that you must take heed lest, in avoiding an error, you fall into an heresy, and give place to anabaptists in not baptizing in-

Chr. in 3. Jo.
iii. Lib. de Spirit. sanct.
Lib. ii. de Abraham. pa-
triar. c.
Cyril. in 3 Jo.

[¹ That is not in Repl. 2.]

[² ... τοῦτο γὰρ τῆς τῶν Ἑλλήνων ἀθεότητος τὸ ἀγνόημα, θηλείαις θεαῖς ἱερεῖαι χειροτονεῖν· ἀλλ’ οὐ τῆς Χριστοῦ διατάξεως.—Const. quæ trib. Apost. Lib. iii. cap. ix. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 315.]

[³ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. In Johan. Evang. cap. iii. Tractat. xi. xii. Tom. III. Pars II. cols. 374, &c. Conf. De Bapt. Parvul. Sermon. ccxciv. 8. Tom. V. cols. 1186, 7.]

[⁴ Chrysost. Par. Op. 1718-33. In Joan. Hom. xxv. Tom. VIII. p. 144.]

[⁵ Ambros. Par. Op. 1686-90. De Spir. Sanct. Lib. iii. cap. x. 63, &c. Tom. II. cols. 677, 8. Conf. De Abrah. Lib. ii. cap. xi. 79, 84. Tom. I. cols. 348, 50, 1.]

[⁶ Cyril. Alex. Op. Lut. 1633. Comm. in Joan. Evang. Lib. ii. cap. i. Tom. IV. p. 147.]

phants. And I know not what you can say against private baptism, in that case of necessity, which they do not in like manner allege against the baptizing of young infants. Master Calvin, in his Introduction adversus Anabap., though he allow not this error, which condemneth children not baptized, yet doth he approve and allow the necessity of baptizing infants: his words be these: "But some man will say, that the grace of God towards us is not diminished if infants be not admitted to baptism, so that it be not denied that God is as merciful unto them as unto the children of the Jews; but I will shew that it is much diminished; for we must esteem the grace of God especially by the declaration thereof which he maketh both by his word and sacraments. Seeing therefore baptism is now ordained, that the promise of salvation may be sealed in our bodies, as it was in times past in the people of the Jews, Christians should be deprived of a singular consolation, if their children should be secluded from this confirmation, which all the faithful have at all times enjoyed, that they should have the visible sign whereby the Lord doth shew and witness that he receiveth their children into the communion and fellowship of the church⁷."

Calvin. advers. Ana-bapt.

If the authors of the Admonition say truly, that Victor, who lived anno 198., did first appoint that women might baptize, then came it neither from the papists, nor yet from the gentiles⁸. But, whensoever this began, or from whomsoever it was taken, the baptizing of infants hath always been thought necessary in the church, by all such as have not divided themselves by any schism or heresy from the same.

[⁷ At dicet quispiam, non imminui gratiam Dei erga nos, si infantes ad baptismum non admittentur: modo non negetur Deum ipsos pari misericordia prosequi, qua liberos Judæorum. Ego vero valde imminui ostendo. Nam gratiam Dei præcipue æstimare debemus ex declaratione, quam tum verbo, tum sacramentis facit. Quum igitur baptismus hodie institutus sit, ut promissio salutis in corporibus nostris obsignetur, ut olim in populo Judaico fiebat: singulari consolatione privarentur Christiani, si hæc confirmatio liberis suis adimeretur, qua semper potiti sunt fideles omnes: ut visibile signum haberent, quo Dominus ostendit ac testatur se liberos ipsorum in ecclesiæ communionem recipere.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Instr. adv. Anabapt. Art. i. Tom. VIII. p. 358.]

[⁸ "It may well stand that this 'profanation came from the gentiles, from Victor, and from the papists;' Victor borrowing it of the heathen, and the papists of him. For both popery is like a bundle of corruptions, which, being picked out of sundry times and places, it hath cocked up together; and the pope is like a hog, which when he cometh into a garden, leaving the sweet flowers, taketh himself always to that which is most filthy in all the place."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 125.]

Chapter v. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 113, Sect. 4.

Now I return to the example of Sephora, and say that the unlawfulness of that fact doth appear sufficiently, in that she did it before her husband Moses, which was a prophet of the Lord, and to whom that office of circumcision did appertain; so that, unless M. Doctor would have midwives baptize in the presence of the bishop or the minister, there is no cause why he should allege this place. Besides that, she did cut off the¹ foreskin of the infant, not of mind to obey the commandment of God, or for the salvation of the child, but in a choler only, to the end that her husband might be eased, and have release; which mind appeareth in her, both by her words and by casting away in anger the foreskin which she had cut off. And, if it be said that the event declared that the act pleased God, because that Moses forthwith waxed better, and was recovered of his sickness, I have shewed before how, if we measure things by the event, we shall oftentimes justify the wicked, and take the righteousness of the righteous from them.

JO. WHITGIFT.

In the 170. page of your book, you say that "God took the priesthood from Moses, and gave it to Aaron," and now you seem to affirm the contrary in saying that "Moses was a prophet of the Lord, to whom that office of circumcision did appertain;" for hereby you do insinuate that Moses was a priest². Moreover, Moses at this time was extremely sick, and therefore could not execute that office himself. And in the Geneva bible there is this note: that it "was extraordinary; for Moses was sore sick; and God even then required it³." Sephora therefore did circumcise in a point of extremity, and not wilfully or of purpose; and that circumcision was a true circumcision, though it were not done ordinarily: even so baptism is true baptism, though it be sometimes ministered by such as be not ordinary ministers.

The event doth oftentimes declare the thing: Exitus acta probat, though not necessarily; but this is certain, that these events are better reasons to justify the fact, than you can shew any out of that place to the contrary.

[¹ That, Repl. 2.]

[² Cartwright calls this a "foul oversight." For "the time of the deliverance over of the priesthood unto Aaron was long after the time here spoken of."—Ibid. p. 127.]

[³ The Bible, transl. according to the Ebrew and Greeke. Lond. 1578. Exod. iiii. v. 24. fol. 23.]

Moses by reason of sickness was not able to do it himself. This is contrary to that he hath, pag. 170, sect. 1.

Pag. 170, sect. 1.

Baptism true though not ordinarily ministered.

Chapter v. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 113, Sect. ult.; and Page 114, Sect. 1.

Another reason he hath, which is that the dignity of the sacraments doth not depend upon the man, whether he be minister or no minister, good or evil.

Indeed, upon this point, whether he be good⁴ or an evil minister, it dependeth not; but on this point, whether he be a minister or no, dependeth not only the dignity, but also the being of the sacrament; so that I take the baptism of women to be no more the holy sacrament of baptism, than I take any other daily or ordinary washing of the child. Neither let any man think that I have at unawares slipped into this asseveration, or that I have forgotten that soon after the times of the apostles it was the use of certain churches that deacons should baptize in the time of necessity (as they call it); for, as for the baptism of deacons, I hold it to be lawful, for because, although (as it is with us) they give him the name of deacon, yet indeed he is, as he then was in the elder times, a minister, and not a deacon. And, although he did then provide for the poor, and so had two functions (which was not meet), yet his office ought to be esteemed of the principal part of his function, which was preaching and ministering of the sacraments in certain cases. And, as for the baptizing by laymen, considering that it is not only against the word of God, but also founded upon a false ground, and upon an imagined necessity (which is none indeed), it moveth me nothing at all, although it be very ancient; forsomuch as the substance of the sacrament dependeth⁵ chiefly of the institution and word of God, which is the form, and, as it were, the life of the sacrament, of which institution this is one, and of the chief parts, that it should be celebrated by a minister.

A strange assertion avouched without proof.

Urge hoc, &c.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If this be true and sound doctrine, then is there many that go under the name of Christians which were never baptized; for, besides divers that have been baptized by women, some there are, and not a few, that have been baptized by such as have taken upon them the ministry, not being thereunto either ordinarily or extraordinarily called; and it may so be that T. C. hath hereby proved himself to be no Christian⁶.

The inconvenience of the Replier's doctrine.

[⁴ Be a good, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ Depended, Repl. 2.]

[⁶ "In another place he said (see below, page 533) 'that it is a probable sign of reprobation, if children die without baptism;' but here he setteth down flat, that 'they be no Christians which are not baptized.' So that the children of the faithful by his doctrine are not Christians, before they be baptized; and consequently condemned. Whereas the truth is otherwise, that, if he be not a Christian before he come to receive baptism, baptism can make him no Christian, which is only the seal of the grace of God before received."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 134.]

The assertion hath no sufficient patrons.

Baptism by laymen.

Tertull.

Ambrose.

Hierome.

Augustine.

Zuinglius.

Calvin.

And surely, if you peruse all the writings of the ancient fathers, and of the late writers in like manner, I believe that you shall not find the like proposition affirmed; for, although divers, both old and new, do not allow that laymen should be suffered to baptize, yet is there none of them (such only excepted as err in re-baptization) that think “the being of the sacrament so to depend upon the minister, that it is no sacrament if it be not celebrated by a minister.” Tertull., in his book De Baptismo, saith that “laymen may baptize¹.” Ambrose, in the fourth ad Ephes., saith that “in the beginning it was lawful for all men to baptize².” Hierome, ad Luciferianos, affirmeth that “it is lawful for laymen to baptize, if necessity do require³.” And hereunto also doth St Augustine agree, in his second book against the epistle of Parmenian, the xiii. chapter⁴. M. Zuinglius, in the place before by me alleged, writeth that “the second error in the circumstances of baptism is about the person, because they think that baptism cannot be given of any but of a priest only; whereas, if necessity do require, any man may do it⁵.” And a little after he saith that “this and such like circumstances are not *de ipsa baptismi essentia*⁶: not of the being of the sacrament.” Which is directly contrary to your assertion. M. Calvin also, in his Institutions, cap. xvii. sect. 16, doth sufficiently confute this error in these words: “Now, if it be true that we have set down, the sacrament is not to be esteemed of his hand by whom it is ministered, but as it were of the hand of God, from whom it certainly cometh: hereof we may gather that nothing is added or taken from the dignity of it by him by whom it is ministered. And therefore among men, if an epistle be sent, so that the hand and seal be known, it skilleth not who or what manner of person carrieth it; even so it is

[¹ Proinde et baptismus æque Dei census ab omnibus exerceri potest: ...sufficiat scilicet in necessitatibus ut utaris, sicubi aut loci, aut temporis, aut personæ conditio compellit. &c.—Tertull. Op. Franck. 1597. Lib. de Bapt. 17. p. 225.]

[² Primum enim...omnes baptizabant, &c.—Ambros. Op. Par. 1686-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Ephes. cap. iv. vv. 11, 12. Tom. II. Append. col. 241.]

[³ Quod frequenter [jus baptizandi], si tamen necessitas cogit, scimus etiam licere laicis.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Adv. Lucif. Tom. IV. Pars II. col. 295.]

[⁴ August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Contr. Epist. Parm. Lib. II. cap. xiii. 29. Tom. IX. col. 44. See below, page 532, note 1.]

[⁵ H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1581. De Bapt. Lib. Pars II. fol. 96. 2. See before, page 511, note 7.]

[⁶ Hujusmodi circumstantiæ omnes non sunt de ipsa baptismi essentia.—Id. ibid.]

sufficient for us to know the hand and seal of the Lord in his sacraments, by whomsoever they be delivered. Hereby is the error of the Donatists confuted, who measured the virtue and worthiness of the sacrament by the worthiness of the minister. Such be now-a-days our anabaptists, which deny us to be rightly baptized, because we were baptized by wicked and idolatrous persons in the pope's church. And therefore they furiously urge re-baptization; against whose folly we shall sufficiently be defended, if we think that we were baptized not in the name of any man, but in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and therefore baptism not to be of man, but of God, by whomsoever it be ministered⁷." Hæc Calvinus.

Undoubtedly, if this your assertion were true, there had need be some general re-baptization throughout all Christendom, as well of men as of children; for certain it is that that sacrament hath been ministered to many by such as be in no degree of the ministry.

Your opinion of a deacon, that he should nothing differ from a minister, is very strange, and unheard of in any writer old or new. Shew any author, any example, any scripture that proveth or alloweth it: diaconus and presbyter or sacerdos be distinct in all authors. But I know wherefore this is affirmed of you, even to stop a gap; but it will not serve. I will say no more: the opinion is very absurd and unlearned, contrary to the scriptures and all learned authors. Neither do you shew any reason of your paradox, which you ought to do, seeing it is contra opinionem omnium: "contrary to all men's opinions," not one excepted.

Against "baptizing by laymen" in time of necessity you have no scripture. But for the allowing of it you have the authority of learned men, even such as were far from the opinion of Augustine in condemning infants not baptized; as namely Zuinglius, who also in the place before recited sufficiently answered whatsoever is here by you barely without any kind of proof set down.

You have also examples thereof in ecclesiastical histories. Socrates, Lib. i. cap. 14, and Sozom., Lib. ii. cap. 17, write that "Alexander, bishop of Alexandria, together with the rest Baptism by laymen not condemned in scripture.

Examples of baptism by laymen. Socrates. Sozomen.

[⁷ Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Inst. Lib. iv. cap. xv. 16. Tom. IX. p. 353. See before, page 520, note 1.]

Athanasius being a child baptized.

Cent. ii.
cap. 6.

of the clergy, determined that baptism which was ministered by Athanasius, being but a child, to certain other children, to be true baptism, and not to be iterated, because after examination he was found to have used the words and right form of baptism¹." Whereby it is plain that the opinion of the church at that time was, the minister not to be of the substance or being of baptism. There is recited a story in the Centuries, of a Jew baptized in the case of necessity by laymen, and with sand, because there was no water. Afterward the bishop of Alexandria, being demanded of the matter, *De sententia ecclesiæ respondit, baptizatum esse Judæum si modo aqua denovo perfunderetur*²: "He answered by the judgment of the church, that the Jew was baptized, if so be he were again sprinkled with water." This argueth that the church then made no doubt in the respect of the persons that ministered this baptism, but only because there lacked water. This story is cited out of Nicephorus, Lib. iii. cap. 37, and alleged by the authors of the Centuries, to prove the simplicity of the church at that time about baptism; neither do they in any respect shew any misliking of it. And surely I know not wherein this opinion of yours doth differ from the Donatists, or anabaptists, except it be in this, that you speak of laymen, and they of ministers.

The Replier
in so weighty a matter useth no proofs.

The essential point of baptism.

And, whereas you say that "the minister is one of the chief parts, and as it were of the life of the sacrament," in so weighty a cause, and great a matter, it had been well if you had used some authority of scripture, or testimony of learned author; for, so far as I can read, the opinion of all learned men is that the essential form, and as it were the life of baptism, "is to baptize in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost;" which form being observed, the sacrament remaineth in full force and strength, of whomsoever it be ministered, or howsoever by ceremonies or other additions it is corrupted. This I am sure is the answer of Zuinglius, both in his book De Baptismo, and in his Elench. contra Anabap., to the anabaptists, who would have them all to be re-baptized that have been baptized in the pope's church³. And the same is the opinion of M. Calvin in the place before recited⁴, and of all other learned men that I have read.

[¹ ... ἐπιμεινάντος δὲ αὐτοῦ τῇ βασιάνῳ, κατεμήνηυσαν ἐπίσκοπον μὲν καὶ ἀρχηγὸν γενέσθαι τὸν Ἀθανάσιον. βαπτισθῆναι δὲ παρ' αὐτοῦ τινὰς τῶν ἀμυήτων παίδων· οὓς ἐπιμελῶς ἀνέκρινεν Ἀλέξανδρος, τί μὲν αὐτοὺς ἤρετο ἢ ἐποίησεν ὁ τῆς παιδείας ἱερεὺς· τί δὲ αὐτοὶ ἀπεκρίναντο ἢ ἐδιδάχθησαν· ἀνεν- ρῶν δὲ πᾶσαν τὴν ἐκκλησιαστικὴν τάξιν ἀκριβῶς ἐπ' αὐτοῖς φυλαχθεῖσαν, ἐδοκίμασεν ἅμα τοῖς ἀμφ' αὐτὸν ἱερεῦσι βουλευσάμενος, μὴ χρῆναι ἀναβαπ- τίσαι τοὺς ἅπαξ ἐν ἀπλότητι τῆς θείας χάριτος ἀξιοθέντας.—Soz. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. II. cap. xvii. p. 380. Conf. Socr. ibid. Lib. I. cap. xv. p. 37.]

[² Centur. Eccles. Hist. Basil. 1560, &c. Cent. II. cap. vi. col. 110. Conf. Niceph. Eccles. Hist. Lut. Par. 1639. Lib. III. cap. xxxvii. Tom. I. pp. 276, 7.]

And certainly, if "the being of the sacrament" depended upon man in any respect, we were but in a miserable case, for we should be always in doubt whether we were rightly baptized or no; but it is most true that the force and strength of the sacrament is not in the man, be he minister or not minister, be he good or evil, but in God himself, in his Spirit, in his free and effectual operation. And therefore saith St Paul, "What is Paul, what is Apollo? &c." This I speak not to bring confusion into the church (for, as I said before, let men take heed that they usurp not an office whereunto they be not called; for God will call them to an account for so doing), but to teach a truth, to take a yoke of doubtfulness from men's consciences, and to resist an error, not much differing from Donatism and anabaptism⁵.

The force of baptism dependeth not upon man, but upon God.

1 Cor. iii. Confusion and disorder is not maintained.

Chapter v. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 114, Sect. 1.

For, although part of the institution, in that the name of the holy Trinity is called upon, be observed, yet, if the whole institution be not, it is no more a sacrament than the papists' communion was, which, celebrating it in one kind, took a part of the institution, and left the other.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you can shew as manifest scripture that the minister is of the substance of baptism, as I can do that the cup is one of the essential parts of the supper, then it is something that you say; but, if there be no likelihood betwixt the one and the other, then can you not want just reprehension, for so confidently avouching that which you cannot prove.

[³ H. Zvingl. Op. Tigur. 1581. Elench. contr. Catabapt.; De Bapt. Lib. Pars II. foll. 19. 2, 20, 83. 2.]

[⁴ See before, page 520, note 1.]

[⁵ Cartwright makes a long rejoinder to this division of Whitgift, in order, as he says, "to cut his comb, that he crow not so loud hereafter." He accuses him of "untruth," of "a plain asking of that in controversy," and maintains that his authorities "for the most part are idly set down."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. pp. 127, &c.]

The distribution of the cup in the Lord's supper is commanded in manifest and express words as a part of the supper; but you cannot shew me the like commandment that only a minister shall celebrate baptism, or else that it is no baptism. We know that circumcision, the figure of baptism, was ministered sometimes by such as were no priests, and yet right and true circumcision.

Chapter v. The Sixth Division.

T. C. Page 114, Sect. 1.

And, forasmuch¹ as St Paul saith that a man cannot preach which is not sent, no, not although he speak the words of the scripture and interpret them; so I cannot see how a man can baptize unless that he be sent to that end, although he pour water and rehearse the words which are to be rehearsed in the ministry of baptism.

JO. WHITGIFT.

St Paul, in that x. chap. to the Rom., speaketh of the extraordinary calling to the office of preaching; so saith M. Martyr in his commentaries upon this place: "And, although Paul intreateth in this place of calling, and sending, and this is, as I said, ordinary and extraordinary; there is no doubt but that he now speaketh of the extraordinary calling, &c."³ And M. Calvin likewise, upon the same place, saith that Paul doth not there speak, *de legitima cujusque vocatione*⁴: "of the lawful calling of every man." Wherefore, if you will ground any such reason upon this place, it must be thus: St Paul saith that a man cannot preach which is not sent; and he meaneth of an extraordinary sending; therefore no man may preach unless he be extraordinarily called thereunto; and so consequently not minister baptism, except he be called in like manner. If you will reason thus, then do you confirm the

[¹ And for so much, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[² The verse is supplied from Repl. 2.]

[³ Et licet Paulus hoc loco de vocationibus et missione agat, eaque, ut dixi, ordinaria sit et extraordinaria, dubium non est, quin loquatur modo de extraordinaria, &c.—P. Martyr. Comm. in Epist. ad Rom. Basil. 1568. cap. x. p. 473.]

[⁴ Quia autem hic nequaquam de legitima cujusque vocatione agit Paulus, &c.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. ad Rom. cap. x. 15. Tom. VII. p. 74.]

baptizing by laymen, who do it not ordinarily, but extraordinarily, upon necessity.

St Paul doth not say, "that a man cannot preach which is not sent, no, not although he speaketh the words of the scripture, and interpret them." These words be so added by you, that the simple and ignorant may think they be the words of St Paul. "He that speaketh the words of the scripture, and doth interpret them," preacheth, though he be not thereunto called; and it is the true word of God he preacheth, if he truly interpret, but he intrudeth himself into a vocation whereunto he is not called, and therefore offendeth God; but that doth derogate nothing from the word preached. The same reason is of the administration of the sacraments; for, as the word of God is the word of God, by whomsoever it be preached, minister or other, so is the sacrament of baptism true baptism, by whomsoever it be celebrated: the usurper of the office hath to answer for his intrusion; but the sacrament is not thereby defiled.

The Replier addeth to the text, and for what purpose.

Usurpers both in preaching and ministering the sacraments offend God.

It is no hard matter to shew that in the primitive church laymen were suffered to preach: you know that Euseb. saith that Origen being a layman was sent into Arabia to preach the gospel; which he also did, both before and after in the church of Alexandria, and likewise in Cæsarea. And, although Demetrius, then bishop of Alexandria, found fault that Origen being a layman should preach in the presence of bishops at Cæsarea; yet is it manifest that he allowed laymen to preach if bishops were not present. And in the same chapter by divers examples it is shewed (as of Euelpis at Laranda, of Paulinus at Iconium, of Theodorus at Synada) that the custom of the churches both then and before that time was, that laymen might preach even in the presence of bishops⁵; so that you have erred both in applying the place of St Paul, and in saying that laymen may not preach the word upon occasion, and so consequently baptize.

Laymen suffered to preach. Euseb. Lib. vi. cap. 20.

Chapter v. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 114, Sect. 1.

I know there be divers difficulties in this question, and therefore I was loth to enter into it, but that the Answerer setteth down so confidently that

The more to blame you are without proof to enter into such difficulties.

[⁵ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. vi. cap. xix. p. 180.]

This is not intended.

it maketh no matter for the truth of baptism, whether he be minister or no minister, and so whether one have a calling or no calling; wherein, notwithstanding, he doth not only by his often handling of one thing confound his reader, but himself also, and forgetteth that he is in another question than which is propounded. For, although it should be granted him that the sacrament doth not depend upon that, yet hath he not that which he would have, that women may baptize. For it is one thing to say the baptism which is ministered by women is good and effectual, and another thing to say that it is lawful for women to minister baptism. For there is no man doubteth but that the baptism which is ministered by an heretical minister is effectual; and yet I think that M. Doctor will not say that therefore an heretical minister may baptize, and that it is lawful for heretics to baptize in the church. And therefore men must not only "take heed (as M. Doctor saith) that they usurp not that which they are not called unto," but they must also take heed that they receive not functions and charges upon them whereof they are not capable, although they be thereunto called.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Baptism true baptism, though unlawfully ministered.

August. Lib. ii. contr. Epist. Parmen. cap. 13.

There are more "difficulties" in this question than you can well determine; and therefore it had been best, either not to have spoken of it at all, or else to have handled it more substantially; but the scarcity of matter and reasons argueth the weakness and faintness of the cause. I pass over your words. I go not about to prove "that women may baptize," only I withstand this error, that "the substance and being of the sacraments dependeth upon the man" in any respect. I say that baptism ministered by women is true baptism, though it be not lawful for women to baptize, as the baptism also ministered by heretics is true baptism, though they be usurpers of that office. And the same St Augustine affirmeth of baptism by laymen in the place before alleged: "Although" (saith he) "it be usurped without necessity, and is given of any man to any man, that which is given cannot be said not to be given, although it may be rightly said not to be rightly given¹." And I further say that, if "the baptism, ministered by heretical ministers," which be no members of the church, be notwithstanding good and "effectual," I see no cause why it should not be so rather if it be ministered by laymen, which are members and parts of the church².

[¹ Quamquam etsi laicus aliquis pereunti dederit necessitate compulsus, quod cum ipse acciperet, quomodo dandum esset addidicit, nescio an pie quisquam dixerit esse repetendum...Sed et si nulla necessitate usurpetur, et a quolibet cuilibet detur, quod datum fuerit non potest dici non datum, quamvis recte dici possit illicite datum.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Contr. Epist. Parm. Lib. II. cap. xiii. 29. Tom. IX. col. 44.]

Chapter v. The Eighth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 153, Sect. 2.

[If you mean by "private baptism" baptism ministered in private houses and families, you have thereof example in the scriptures, Acts x.: other private baptism allowed in the church of England I know none.]³

M. Bucer, in his Censure upon the communion-book, speaking of the order appointed in the same for private baptism, writeth thus: "In this constitution all things are godly appointed; I would to God they were so observed, and especially this, that the baptism of infants be not deferred; for thereby is a door opened unto the devil, to bring in a contempt of baptism, and so of our whole redemption, and communion of Christ, which through the sect of anabaptists hath too much prevailed with many⁴."

[For women to baptize we have no rule that I know in the whole communion-book, but in scripture we have an example of Moses' wife that did circumcise; and circumcision is correspondent to baptism. But I know no general doctrine can be grounded of a singular example; and therefore most of your arguments be very feeble.]³

T. C. Page 114, Sect. 2.

In the 153. page, M. Bucer's Censure upon the communion-book is cited for the allowance of that it hath touching private baptism, and consequently of the baptism by women. It may be that, as M. Bucer, although otherwise very learned, hath other gross absurdities, so he may have that. But it had been for the credit of your cause, if you had shewed

[² "... a foul error."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 131.]

[³ These paragraphs are introduced from Answ.]

[⁴ In hac constitutione sunt omnia sancte proposita, utinam ita servantur: et maxime illud, ne baptisma infantum differatur. Nam eo patet diabolo ostium introducendi contemptum ecclesiæ, ac ita totius redemptionis et communionis Christi; quod per sectam anabaptistarum nimis optate obtinuit opinionem apud quamplurimos.—M. Bucer. Script. Anglic. Basil. 1577. Censur. in Ordinatio Eccles. cap. xv. p. 481.]

Private baptism.

Bucer.

Deferring of baptism not expedient.

This is but gross courtesy.

that out of those writings which are published and known to be his, and not out of those whereof men may doubt whether ever he wrote any such or no; and, if he wrote, whether they be corrupted by those into whose hands they came. And, if you would take any advantage of M. Bucer's testimony, considering that a witness is a public person, you should have brought him out of your study into the stationer's shop where he mought have been common to others as well as to you, whereby his style and manner of writing, as it were by his gestures, and countenances, and by those things that go before and come after, as it were by his head, and by his¹ feet, we might the better know whether it were the true Bucer or no.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is very gross courtesy that you shew to so worthy and learned a man: modesty and charity would not have been so rash as to answer that which he well speaketh, in opprobriously objecting unto him his other errors, which you call "gross absurdities²." But this is the reverence that you give to all learning, and learned men, that are contrary to your opinions. I have sometimes heard a papist burst out into this rage against M. Bucer, being pressed with his authority; but you are the first professor of the gospel that ever I heard so churlishly to use so reverent, so learned, so painful, so sound a father, being also an earnest and zealous professor. It causeth me the less to regard what you speak of me, when I hear such bitterness against all other, be they never so zealous and excellent. Well, Bucer's reasons (which touch the quick) would have been reasonably answered without spite; and you should rather have considered them than the author. There is nothing in these words by him affirmed which is not in as plain terms avouched by Zuinglius in the words before recited³. The book of M. Bucer's is forthcoming to be shewed; and he affirmeth nothing therein contrary to his books published: he had more special occasion here offered to speak both of this and other matters now in controversy, and therefore the more he is to be credited.

[¹ And his, Repl. 2.]

[² "And, if it be judged of the godly that I might have spared that speech, it is a thing wherein I will not stand against them in mine own defence."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 132.]

[³ See before, page 511, note 7.]

Chapter v. The Ninth Division.

T. C. Page 114, Sect. 2.

For, although I will not say but that this may be Bucer's doing, yet it seemeth very strange that Bucer should not only, contrary to the learned writers now, but also contrary to all learned antiquity, and contrary to the practice of the church, whilst there was any tolerable estate, allow of women's baptizing. Tertullian saith "it is not permitted to⁴ a woman to speak in the church, nor to teach, or⁵ to baptize, nor to do any work of a man, much less of a minister⁶." And in another place, although he do permit it to be done by⁷ laymen in the time of necessity (as it is termed), yet he giveth not that licence to the woman⁸. Epiphanius upbraideth Marcion that he suffered women to baptize⁹. And in another book he derideth them that they made women bishops¹⁰. And in another book he saith it was not granted unto the holy mother of Christ to baptize her Son¹¹.

*De Virgin.
Velan.*

Lib. De Baptis.

*Epiph. Li.
i. contra Hæres.*

*Lib. ii. Ubi de Phrygib. et Priscil.
Lib. iii.*

JO. WHITGIFT.

M. Bucer speaketh not one word in this place of baptizing by women, but of private baptism; which neither Tertullian nor Epiphanius in these places by you alleged do disallow.

Chapter v. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 115, Line 6.

Augustine, although he were of that mind that children could not be saved without baptism¹², yet in the time of necessity (as it is called) he doth not allow either of baptism in private houses, or by women, but when there was danger the women hasted to carry the children unto the church; and, although he do seem to allow of the baptism of a layman in the time of necessity, yet there also he mentioneth not women's baptism. And further he doubteth

*i. Li. de Merit. et Remission. 24.
cap.*

An untruth.

[⁴ Unto, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ Nor, Repl. 2.]

[⁶ Non permittitur mulieri in ecclesia loqui, sed nec docere, nec tinguere, nec offerre, nec ullius virilis muneris, nedum sacerdotalis officii sortem sibi vendicare.—Tertull. Op. Franek. 1597. De Virg. Veland. 9. p. 192.]

[⁷ Of, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁸ Petulantia autem mulierum quæ usurpavit docere, utique non etiam tinguendi jus sibi pariet, &c.—Id. Lib. de Bapt. 17. p. 225. See before, page 526, note 1.]

[⁹ Δίδωσι καὶ ἐπιτροπὴν γυναιξὶ βάπτισμα διδόναι.—Epiph. Op. Par. 1622. Adv. Hær. Lib. 1. Tom. III. Hær. xlii. 4. Tom. I. p. 305.]

[¹⁰ Ἐπίσκοποι τε παρ' αὐτοῖς γυναῖκες, καὶ πρεσβύτεροι γυναῖκες, καὶ τὰ ἄλλα.—Id. ibid. Lib. II. Tom. I. Hær. xlix. 2. p. 418.]

[¹¹ Ἀλλ' οὐδὲ βάπτισμα διδόναι πεπίστευται [Μαρία].—Id. ibid. Lib. III. Tom. II. Hær. lxxix. 3. p. 1059.]

[¹² August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. De Pecc. Mer. et Remiss. Lib. 1. cap. xxiv. 34. Tom. X. cols. 19, 20. See before, page 521, note 8.]

whether the child should be baptized again which was baptized by a layman.

Contra Epist. Parmen. Lib. ii. 13. cap.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Where doth St Augustine disallow baptism by women, or in private houses? he uttereth no such thing in any of the places quoted in the margent. Will you still counterfeit? is there no end with you of falsifying? In his second book Contra Epistolam Parmeniani, cap. 13, he doth not only say that a layman may baptize in the time of necessity, but he also addeth that, if it be ministered without necessity, yet notwithstanding that it is baptism; as appeareth in these words (as I have before said): "But, although it be usurped (he meaneth baptism by laymen) without necessity, and is given of any man to any man, that which is given cannot be said not to be given, although it may be rightly said that it is not lawfully given¹." And he doth make the same manifest by two pretty similitudes following, which I omit for to avoid tediousness. The learned reader may in that place of Augustine soon perceive what an error this is to say, that "the minister is of the substance and being of the sacrament;" neither doth he, in either of the places, either disallow "baptism by women, or in private houses," as you affirm, but ad Fortunatum he saith thus: "In necessity, when the bishops, or priests, or any other minister cannot be found, and the danger of him that requireth doth constrain, lest he should depart this life without this sacrament, we have heard that even laymen have given this sacrament that they have received²."

August. Lib. ii. contra Epist. Parm. cap. 13.

Aug. ad Fortunatum.

Chapter v. The Eleventh Division.

T. C. Page 115, Line 12.

And in the fourth council of Carthage it is simply decreed³ that "a woman ought not to baptize."

Tom. i. Conc. ca. 100.

[¹ Id. contr. Epist. Parm. Lib. ii. cap. xiii. 29. Tom. IX. col. 44. See before, page, 532, note 1.]

[² In necessitate, cum episcopi, aut presbyteri, aut quilibet ministrorum non inveniuntur, et urget periculum ejus, qui petit, ne sine isto sacramento hanc vitam finiat, etiam laicos solere dare sacramentum, quod acceperunt, solemus audire.—Id. ad Fortunat. in Corp. Jur. Canon. Lugd. 1624. Decret. Gratian. Decr. Tert. Pars, De Consecr. Dist. iv. can. 21. col. 1983.]

[³ Simply without exception decreed, Repl. 1 and 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

This canon in Gratian, De Conse. Dist. 4, is thus reported: *Mulier, quamvis docta et sancta, viros in conventu docere, vel aliquos baptizare non præsumat, nisi necessitate cogent[e]*⁴: “Let not a woman, although learned and godly, presume to teach men in an assembly, or to baptize any, except necessity constrain.” So that the canon inhibiteth women to preach or to baptize in the open church and public assemblies. And this is a sufficient answer to this place, neither doth it impugn anything affirmed in the Answer.

Chapter v. The Twelfth Division.

T. C. Page 115, Line 13.

The authors of the Admonition object that necessity of salvation is tied to the sacraments by this means, and that men are confirmed in that old error, that no man can be saved without baptism; which indeed is true. For must it not be thought to be done of necessity, and upon great extremity, for the doing whereof the orders that God hath set, that it should be done in the congregation, and by the minister of the gospel, are broken? Yes, verily. And I will further say that, although that the infants which die without baptism should be assuredly damned (which is most false), yet ought not the orders which God hath set in his church to be broken after this sort. For, as the salvation of men ought to be dear unto us, so the glory of God, which consisteth in that his orders be kept, ought to be much more dear, that, if at any time the controversy could be between his glory and our salvation, our salvation ought to full that his glory may stand.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Yet the avoiding of that error is no sufficient cause to debar infants from baptism; except you will therein join with the anabaptists. The outward sacramental signs are seals of God's promises, and whosoever refuseth the same shall never enjoy the promises; and, although the necessity of salvation is not so tied to the sacraments, that whosoever hath the external signs shall therefore be saved, yet is it so tied unto them, that none can be saved that willingly and wittingly is void of them, and not partakers of them. Circumcision, which is a figure of baptism, had that necessity joined unto it, that whosoever Gen. xviii. lacked it was not counted nor reckoned amongst the people of

There is necessity of baptism, though the necessity of salvation be not tied to the sacraments.

[⁴ Ex Concil. Carthag. iv. cap. 99 et 100. ibid. can. 20. ibid. Conf. Crabb. Concil. Col. Agrip. 1551. Tom. I. p. 441. It would seem that the last three words are the addition of Gratian, or some other. Lombard, Lib. iv. Dist. vi. has them.]

Mark xvi.

The doctrine
tendeth to the deroga-tion of the sacraments.

God. It is not nothing that Christ saith : Qui crediderit et baptizatus fuerit, &c. But your manner of doctrine is such that it maketh men think that the external signs of the sacraments are but bare ceremonies, and in no sense necessary to salvation ; which must in time bring in a contempt of the sacraments, and especially of baptism for infants.

M. Zuinglius, Bucer, and Calvin, as you heard before, although they do not think children without baptism to be damned, yet do they judge the baptism of children to be necessary, and that for just causes ; as is before declared¹. And what Christian would willingly suffer his child to die without the sacrament of regeneration, the lack whereof (though it be not a necessary) yet may it seem to be a probable token and sign of reprobation.

What either "order of God," or commandment, is broken in private baptism ? or where hath God appointed that baptism must be ministered "in the open congregation" only, and not upon any cause in private families ? Will you yet deal on this sort without ground or proof ? In private baptism used upon necessity there is neither order nor commandment of God broken. If there be, shew it.

Chapter v. The Thirteenth Division.

The Admonition.

And yet this is not to tie necessity of salvation to the sacraments, nor to nousel men up in that opinion. This is agreeable with the scriptures, and therefore, when they bring the baptized child, they are received with this special commendation : "I certify you that you have done well and according to² due order, &c."

But now we speak in good earnest ; when they answer this let them tell us how this gear agreeth with the scriptures, and whether it be not repugnant or against the word of God.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 187, Sect. 1.

"And yet (you say) this is not to tie necessity of salvation to the sacraments, nor to nousel men up in that opinion, &c."³ No surely, no more than it is to teach that children ought to be baptized, and not to tarry until such time as they be able to answer for themselves. [You should have proved this to be re-

[¹ See before, pages 511, 23, 33.] [² Unto, Adm.] [³ &c. is not in Answ.]

pugnant to the scriptures (because you say it is), and therefore you refuse to subscribe. When you set down the scriptures to the which it repugneth, if it fall out so indeed, you shall have me a conformable adversary: I will say with St Augustine: *Errare possum, hæreticus esse nolo*⁴: “Err I may, an heretic I will not be;” and I would to God you could learn that lesson.]⁵

Error and heresy dif-fereth.

T. C. Page 115, Sect. 1.

Now, in the 187. page M. Doctor answereth hereunto, that this implieth no more that the salvation is tied to the sacraments than⁶ when it is taught that infants must be baptized, and not tarry until they come to the age of discretion. The⁷ which, how truly it is spoken, when as the one hath ground of the scripture, the other hath none, the one approved by the continual, and almost the general practice of the church, the other used only in the corrupt and rotten estate thereof, let all men judge.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This verifieth my saying; for, if baptism of children be grounded upon the scriptures, as it is, then is the necessity of baptizing them the more; so that, if not for fear of damnation, yet because of God's commandment and institution, children are of necessity to be baptized; and this is a received opinion in the church, even from the beginning; and therefore laymen in the time of necessity, from the beginning, have been permitted to baptize; as may appear by the authors before alleged.

Chapter v. The Fourteenth Division.

T. C. Page 115, Sect. 1.

Therefore, forsomuch as the ministry of the word and sacraments go together, and that the ministry of the word may not be committed unto women, and for that this evil custom hath risen first of a false understanding of the scripture, and then of a false conclusion of that untrue understanding, which is that they cannot be saved which are not baptized; and for that the authors themselves of that error did never seek no remedy of the mischief in women's or private baptism; and last of all, for that, if there were any remedy against the⁸ mischief in such kind of baptism, yet it ought not to be used, being against the institution of God and his glory, I conclude that the private baptism, and by women, is utterly unlawful.

[⁴ See Vol. I. page 8, note 4.]

[⁵ This is inserted from Answ. The translation of the sentence cited from St Augustine is omitted in Answ. I.]

[⁶ That, Def. B.]

[⁷ Repl. 2 omits the.]

[⁸ That, Repl. 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

These be all petitions of principles, or the most of them ; for I have shewed before that the administration of baptism hath been and may be committed to some, even in the public congregation, to whom the preaching of the word is not committed ; and now in like manner I have proved that laymen in the time of necessity may baptize ; which both are denied by you without any kind of proof. I have also shewed how that the necessity of baptizing infants is vehemently defended of those that be not of St Augustine's judgment touching their damnation¹ if they be not baptized, and I have set down their words which contain their reasons. Last of all, I have put you to prove that private baptism in time of necessity is against any commandment or institution of Christ ; for I deny it. So that, notwithstanding I suspend my judgment for baptizing by women, yet I am out of doubt for private baptism².

¶ Of private communion, wherewith the Admonition chargeeth the book of common prayer.

Chapter vi. The First Division.

Admonition.

³*Now they are bound to the book of common prayer, in which a great number of things contrary to the word of God*⁴ are contained, &c., as ^k*private communion*⁵*, &c.* ¹*Cor. xi. 18.*

[¹ See before, pages 511, 23, 33.]

[² Cartwright sums up his rejoinder on the ministering of baptism by private persons : " Seeing then they only are bidden in the scripture to administer the sacraments, which are bidden to preach the word, and that the public ministers have only this charge of the word ; and seeing that the administration of both these are so linked together that the denial of licence to do one is a denial to do the other, as of the contrary part licence to one is licence to the other ; considering also that to minister the sacraments is an honour in the church which none can take unto him but he which is called unto it as was Aaron ; and, further, forasmuch as the baptizing by private persons, and by women especially, confirmeth the dangerous error of the condemnation of young children, which die without baptism ; last of all, seeing we have the consent of the godly-learned of all times against the baptism by women, and of the reformed churches now against the baptism by private men, we conclude that the administration of this sacrament by private persons and especially by women, is merely both unlawful and void."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 142.]

[³ This sentence was begun above, page 446, and has been continued in fragments, with occasionally a connecting word or two introduced.]

[⁴ God's word, Adm. and Answ.]

[⁵ Private communions, Adm. and Answ.]

Answer to the Admonition, Page 81, Sect. 1, 2.

[The second thing you mislike is private communions. And you quote the 1. Cor. xi. In which chapter St Paul reproveth the profanation of the supper among the Corinthians by banqueting and contempt of their brethren, and he exhorteth one of them to tarry for another. But how can you apply this to your purpose?]⁶

I know not what you mean by private communion: Of private communion. if you mean the receiving of one alone, there is none such allowed in the book: if you mean because it is ministered sometime upon occasion in private houses, I see not how you can call it private in respect of the place, if the number of communicants be sufficient. You must explicate yourself before I can tell what you mean.

There is nothing in the communion-book touching the communion, contrary to the⁸ place of St Paul by 1 Cor. xi. 18.⁹ you quoted, to my knowledge.

T. C. Page 105, Sect. 1.

There followeth the private communion, which is found fault with, both for the place wherein it is ministered, and for the small number of communicants which are admitted by the book of service. Touching the place, before is spoken sufficiently: it resteth to consider of the number. But before I come to that I will speak something of the causes and beginning of receiving in houses, and of the ministering of the communion unto sick folks. It is not to be denied but that this abuse is very ancient, and was in Justin Martyr's time, in Tertullian's and Cyprian's time, even as also there were other abuses crept into the supper of the Lord, (and that very gross, as the mingling of water with wine, and therein also a necessity and great mystery placed; as it may appear both by Justin Martyr¹⁰ and Cyprian¹¹; which I therefore by the way do admonish the reader of, that the antiquity of this abuse of private communion be not prejudicial to the truth, no more than the mingling of water with that opinion of necessity that those fathers had of it is, or ought to be, prejudicial to that that we use in ministering the cup with pure wine, according to the institution.

[⁶ This is inserted from Answ.]

[⁷ Answ. 2 omits of.]

[⁸ That, Answ.]

[⁹ This reference is not in Answ.]

[¹⁰ Just. Martyr. Op. Par. 1742. Apol. i. 65, 7. pp. 82, 3.]

[¹¹ ... videmus in aqua populum intelligi, in vino vero ostendi sanguinem Christi.—Cypr. Op. Oxon. 1682. Ad Cæcil. Epist. lxxiii. pp. 153, 4.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

The usual answering of
T. C.

This is your accustomed manner (but it is besides all good manners), to wipe away ancient and learned authority, by objecting unto the authors some imperfection in their writings, or errors in their times. Is this a good reason? water was of necessity required in Cyprian's time in the administration of the supper; and that was an error; therefore the communion at that time, and long before, ministered unto the sick, and carried to private persons being absent, was unlawful. Such be your arguments, and this is your kind of answering; which may be plausible to the ignorant people, but nothing pleasant to such as be learned. This one thing I will desire the reader to consider (that seeing our sacraments now be more sincerely ministered than they were in Justin's, Tertullian's and Cyprian's time, being so near the apostles), what cause there should be for you so bitterly to inveigh against this church in that respect.

More sincerity in the ministration now than in the ancient church.

Chapter vi. The Second Division.

T. C. Page 115, towards the end.

I say, therefore, that this abuse was ancient, and rose upon these causes. First of all, in the primitive church, the discipline of the church was so severe, and so extreme, that, if any which professed the truth, and were of the body of the church, did through infirmity deny the truth, and joined himself unto the idolatrous service, although he repenting came again unto the church, yet was he not received to the communion of the Lord's supper any more. And yet, lying in extremity of sickness, and ready to depart this life, if they¹ did require the communion in token that the church had forgiven the fault, and was reconciled altogether unto that person that had so fallen, they granted that he might be partaker of it; as may appear by the story of Serapion².

*Euseb. Lib.
vi. cap. 43.*

JO. WHITGIFT.

All this is true, for sometime they had three, six, or ten years' space of repentance before they were admitted to the sacrament; and, after that time was expired, they came as other did to the communion, if they lived to it; if not, they received it on their death-bed. This is for my purpose; for it manifestly declareth that then the communion was ministered unto the sick, which is our question; it can by no means be drawn against me.

[¹ He, Repl. 2.]

[² Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. vi. cap. xlv. pp. 200, 1.]

Chapter vi. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 116, Line 2.

Another cause was that which was before alleged, which is, the false opinion which they had conceived that all those were condemned that received not the supper of the Lord; and therefore, when as those that were, as they called them, Catechumeni, which is, young novices in religion, never admitted to the supper, or young children fell sick dangerously, they ministered the supper of the Lord unto them, lest they should want their voyage victual (as they termed it); which abuse, notwithstanding, was neither so ancient as the other, nor so general.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This was the cause that moved some so to do; howbeit, neither was it the only cause, neither the general and usual cause; but the general and usual cause was the institution of Christ, and the fruits and effects of that supper, the which whosoever doth consider accordingly will neither cease from requiring it in time of extremity, neither withhold it from such as faithfully and earnestly desire the same; and it is an easy matter to shew that this manner of communicating in private families is of very great antiquity, even in Justinus Martyr's time; as appeareth in his second Apology³, and is by you confessed.

Chapter vi. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 116, Line 8.

And there wanted not good men which declared their misliking, and did decree against both the abuses, and against all manner communicating in private houses. As in the council of Laodicea it was ordained that "neither bishop nor elder should make any oblation," that was, minister any communion in houses⁴.

Tom. i.
can. 58.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This council doth speak against the usual manner of celebrating the communion in private houses, without any respect of necessity; which abuse was grown in some places in the time of Hierome and Damasus, about whose time this council was; but there is neither council nor learned father that ever opened their mouths against ministering the communion to the sick in private families, or upon any other urgent or necessary occasion. The 12. canon of the council of Nice doth determine directly that the communion ought to be ministered to the sick¹.

[³ Just. Martyr. Op. Par. 1742. Apol. i. 65, 7. p. 83.]

[⁴ Ὅτι οὐ δεῖ ἐν τοῖς οἴκοις προσφοράς γίνεσθαι παρὰ ἐπισκόπων ἢ πρεσβυτέρων.—Concil. Laod. can. 58. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 1505.]

The communion ministered to the sick.

In the Greek it is the 13. canon.

Chapter vi. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 116, Line 12.

Besides, therefore, that I have before shewed the unlawfulness generally of ministering the sacrament in private places, seeing that the custom of ministering this supper unto the sick rose upon corrupt causes and rotten foundations; and considering also (God be praised) in these times there are none driven by fear to renounce the truth, whereupon any such excommunication should ensue, which in the extremity of sickness should be mitigated after this sort (for no man now that is in extreme sickness is cast down, or else assaulted with this temptation, that he is cut off from the church)—I say, these things considered, it followeth that this ministering of communion in private houses, and to the sick, is unlawful, as that which rose upon evil grounds; and, if it were lawful, yet that now in these times of peace, and when the sick are not excommunicated, there is no use of it. And so it appeareth how little the custom of the old church doth help M. Doctor in this point.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This was one cause, but not the only cause why the communion was ministered to the sick; the chief and principal cause was (as I have said) the fruits and effects of that sacrament, which is remission of sins, peace of conscience, and effectual applying of the death and passion of Christ unto the communicants, and an assurance of God's promises, whereof that sacrament is an effectual seal.

[¹ Καθόλου δὲ καὶ περὶ παντὸς οὐτινοσούν ἐξοδεύοντος, αἰτοῦντος τοῦ μετασχεῖν εὐχαριστίας, ὁ ἐπίσκοπος μετὰ δοκιμασίας ἐπιδότω.—Concil. Nic. can. 13. ibid. Tom. II. col. 36.]

Chapter vi. The Sixth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 81, Sect. 3.

The communion exhibited unto² sick persons is allowed both of Peter Martyr and Bucer, as in the other treatise I have declared, and consonant to the custom of Christ's church, even from the apostles' time, as is to be seen in the old³ writers.

Sick persons receive the communion.

T. C. Page 116, Sect. 1.

And as for that he saith Peter Martyr and Bucer do allow the communion exhibited to the sick persons, when he sheweth that he shall have answer. For, where he saith he hath declared it in another treatise, either the printer hath left out that treatise, or M. Doctor wonderfully forgetteth himself, or else he meaneth some odd thing that he hath written, and laid up in some corner of his study; for surely there is no such saying in all his book before, nor yet after, as⁴ far as I can find.

JO. WHITGIFT.

M. Bucer, in his Censures upon the communion-book, speaking of this part of it saith thus: "And those things which are commanded in this behalf do well enough agree with the holy scriptures; for to receive the communion of the Lord, and to be partaker of his table, doth not a little avail unto the comfort of afflicted consciences, if it be received according to the Lord's institution⁵."

Bucer.

M. Martyr's allowing of the same is added in that place⁶.

M. Musculus, in his Common-places, Titul. de Cœna Domini, saith that privata et extrema ægrotantium communio, &c.: "private and last communion ministered to the sick is retained in divers reformed churches, for this end, that the sick persons thereby may be strengthened in faith, made stronger against the temptations of Satan, and the better armed to bear the pains of death⁷." Neither do I see any Musculus.

[² To, Answ.]

[³ In old, Answ.]

[⁴ So, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ Et quæ hic præcipiuntur, sunt divinis scripturis satis consentanea. Communionem enim sumere Domini, et de mensa ejus, ad consolandum perturbatas conscientias non parum valet: si ea ut Dominus instituit, sumatur.—M. Bucer. Script. Anglic. Basil. 1577. Cens. in Ordinat. Eccles. cap. xxii. p. 489.]

[⁶ Martyr agrees generally with Bucer: only he objects to the order in that book for carrying the sacrament from the church on communion days to the sick person. His letter to Bucer is preserved in Corpus Christi college library, Cambridge (cxix. 39, Nasm. Catalog.). It is printed by Strype, Cranmer, Append. No. lxi. Conf. Park. Soc. Liturgies of Edw. VI. p. 141.]

In evangelicis vero nonnullis ecclesiis, licet explosa sit papistarum opinio, reason (if the superstitious opinion of the papists be rooted out) why any man in that case should be deprived of these benefits.

Chapter vi. The Seventh Division.

T. C. Page 116, Sect. 2.

Now remaineth to be spoken of the number of communicants, and that there is fault in the appointing of the service-book, not only for that it admitteth in the time of plague that one with the minister may celebrate the supper of the Lord in the house, but for that it ordaineth a communion in the church, when of a great number which assemble there it admitteth three or four. The abuse and inconvenience whereof may thus be considered. The holy sacrament of the supper of the Lord is not only a seal and confirmation of the promises of God unto us, but also a profession of our conjunction as well with Christ our Saviour and with God, as also (as St Paul teacheth) a declaration and profession that we are at one with our brethren; so that it is first a sacrament of the knitting of all the body generally, and of every member particularly, with the head, and then of the members of the body one with another. Now, therefore, seeing that every particular church and body of God's people is a representation, and, as it were, a lively portraiture of the whole church and body of Christ, it followeth that² which we cannot do with all the church scattered throughout the whole world, for the distances of places whereby we are severed, we ought to do with that church whereunto God hath ranged us, as much as possibly or conveniently may be. The departing, therefore, of the rest of the church from those three or four is an open profession that they have no communion, fellowship, nor unity with them that do communicate; and, likewise, of those three or four, that they have none with the rest that join not themselves thereunto; when as, both by the many grapes making one cup, and corns making one loaf, that whole church, being many persons, are called as to the unity which they have one with another, and altogether among³ themselves, so to the declaration and profession of it, by receiving one with another, and altogether amongst themselves. And as, if so be that we do not celebrate, as we may possibly and conveniently, the supper of the Lord, we thereby utter our want of love towards the Lord which hath redeemed us; so, if we do not communicate together with the church so far forth as we may do conveniently, we betray the want of our love that we have one towards another. And therefore St Paul, driving hereunto, wisheth⁴ that one should tarry for another, reprehending that when one preventeth and cometh before another, saying that that is to take every man his own supper, and not to celebrate the Lord's supper; not that, so many retinetur tamen privata et extrema ægrotantium communio, ad hoc, ut per corpus ac sanguinem Domini confirmatiores in fide, et ad resistendum tentationibus Satanae, sustinendosque mortis dolores, instructiores reddantur.—Wolfg. Muscul. Loc. Comm. Theolog. Basil. 1599. De Cæn. Dom. p. 370.]

¹ Cor. x. 17.

¹ Cor. xi. 33.

[¹ The verses are added from Repl. 2.]

[² Followeth that that, Repl. 2.]

[³ Amongst, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁴ Willeth, Repl. 1 and 2.]

men or women as there came, so many tables were, for that had not been possible in so great assemblies, but that they sorted themselves into certain companies, and that they came scattering one after another, and that, instead of making one supper of the Lord, they did make divers.

JO. WHITGIFT.

You cannot be ignorant that the whole drift of the communion-book is to move all men to oft communicating, and that together, as it manifestly appeareth in the first exhortation in the book, prescribed to be read when the curate shall see the people negligent in coming to the communion; the which if you had well perused, you would have (as I think) cut off much of this talk. If the book should appoint that three or four should communicate together, and no more, or if it did not allow that communion best wherein most of the church do participate, then were your reasoning to some end; but, seeing that it is appointed that there should not be fewer than three or four, to the end that it might be a communion, and have no similitude with the papistical mass, there is no cause why you should take this pains. And surely he that shall compare that exhortation in the book with this discourse of yours, it will be no hard matter for him to judge how much more pithily and effectually this matter is there handled, than it is here by you. But that three or four should be a sufficient number to communicate if other will not, there is good⁵ cause; for, seeing the holy sacrament is a seal and confirmation of God's promises, and an effectual applying of the death and passion of Christ unto us, and therefore a singular comfort and relief to the afflicted conscience and mind touched with the feeling of sin, why should those that be desirous of it, being a congregation (as three or four is, according to the saying of Christ: "where two or three be gathered together in my name, &c."), be debarred from their godly desire, and that singular comfort, for the carelessness, security, negligence, or lack of such feeling of others? Shall none communicate because all will not? Or shall not three or four because the rest refuse? Or is it lack of love towards our neighbour, or any token thereof, if we resort to the Lord's table when other will not? Where learn you that?

The place of St Paul, 1 Cor. xi., is not aptly applied. For the apostle in that place reproveth only such as contemptu-

The intent of the book is to move all men to communicate.

Three or four a sufficient number, if other will not communicate.

Three or four a congregation. Matt. xviii.

[⁵ Is no good, Def. B.]

Martyr in 1 Cor. xi.

ously or contentiously did separate themselves from other as well in the public feasts, called "love-feasts," and then used in the church, as in the supper of the Lord. But he rather meaneth of the first than of the latter; and therefore saith M. Martyr upon that place: "The supper is here called private, either because some did challenge to themselves privately that which belonged to all, or else because every one after the receiving of the holy mysteries did take again to himself those things which he had offered at the Lord's table, and made that his own which by right belonged to all." And, again, he saith that the Corinthians be there reprovèd, "because they pampered their belly, and contemned their brethren¹." I told you before what M. Calvin thought of this place²: it can in no respect tend to the disallowing of any order appointed in the book of common prayer, because no man is secluded from the communion that will come, and those that come, when other men will not, do it not of contempt or of contention, but of conscience and piety. Moreover, we have no such banquets or feasts, either before or after the communion, as the Corinthians had; and therefore in that respect there can be no such abuse as the apostle there reproveth.

Chapter vi. The Eighth Division.

Admonition.

Sixthly, in this book three or four are allowed for a fit number to receive the communion; and the priest alone, together with one more, or with the sick man alone, may in time of necessity, that is, when there is any common plague, or in time of other visitation, minister it to the sick man, and, if he require it, it may not be denied. This is not, I am sure, like in effect to a private mass: that scripture:¹ "Drink ye all of this," Matt. xxvi. 27.
maketh not against this, and private communion is not against Mark xiv. 23.
the scriptures.

[¹ Cœna hic dicitur propria: vel quia quod erat omnium, aliqui privatim sibi vendicabant: vel quod ea quæ obtulisset quisque ad mensam Domini, sibi rursus post sacra percepta resumebat, et quod jure omnium esse debuisset, suum ipsius faciebat... Accusat Paulus eos, tanquam helluones, qui viderentur tantummodo ventrem colere... Non tantum lædebantur pauperes, quod eis cibus deficeret, sed etiam quod afficerentur contumelia, cum despicerentur.—P. Martyr. Comm. in D. Paul. prior. ad Corinth. Epist. Figur. 1572. cap. xi. vv. 20, 21. fol. 155. 2.]

[² See before, page 507, note 2.]

Answer to the Admonition, Page 185, Sect. 1.

How untruly these men charge the church with private communions I have shewed before. The place of scripture here alleged to prove that three or four be not a sufficient number to communicate is this: "Drink ye all of this," Matt. xxvi. Mark xiv.; which may as well be applied to prove that ten, twenty, forty, is no sufficient number. I know not what your meaning is, except you think no number sufficient, unless all do communicate together, because Christ said: "Drink ye all of this³." This text proveth that all ought to be partakers of the Lord's cup, but it doth not determine any certain number of communicants. I know there be some of the old fathers, as Basilius Magnus, which would not have fewer communicants than xii.⁴ But of the number of communicants there is nothing determined in scripture, neither is it material, so that there be a number that it may be a communion.

No number determined to be at the communion.

Basil would have xii. at the least.

T. C. Page 117, Sect. 1.

These things being considered, the reason which the Admonition useth in the 185. page, where this matter is spoken of, which is: "Drink you all of this," is not so ridiculous as M. Doctor maketh it. For, although it⁵ do neither prove that 12. or 20. or any other definite number must of necessity receive, yet it proveth that, as all they which were present did communicate, so⁶ as many as in the church are fit to receive the sacraments, or may conveniently receive them together, should follow that example in celebrating the supper together.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The book of common prayer doth greatly commend and like the receiving of the whole church together, but, if that cannot be obtained (as it cannot, and they will not have men compelled unto it), it secludeth not those that be well disposed, so they be a competent number. And the book doth exhort those to depart which do not communicate, with a warning from whence they depart; so that you may well understand that the meaning of the book is that all that be present

[³ The last two words are not in Answ.]

[⁴ Et quemadmodum spiritualis lex non pauciores quam duodecim esse vult mysticum pascha comedentes: sic &c.—Basil. Op. Lat. Basil. 1540. Exerc. ad Piet. Sermon. iv. Tom. III. p. 425.]

[⁵ For although that it, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁶ And so, Repl. 2.]

should communicate. Neither can this place of scripture be drawn to improve the decree of the church therein. For Christ had 70. other disciples, and his mother, with divers other which followed him, that were not present at that supper; as no doubt they should have been if by that example he had meant to have made a law that there may be no communion unless the whole congregation of every particular church do communicate together.

Chapter vi. The Ninth Division.

T. C. Page 117, Sect. 1.

And it is probably to be thought that, if our Saviour Christ had not been restrained by the law of God touching the passover Exod. xii. 3. unto his own family, being twelve, and therefore a competent number to eat up² a lamb by themselves, that he would have celebrated his supper, not only amongst his xii. disciples, which afterward he made apostles, but also³ amongst other of his disciples and professors of his doctrine. But, forsomuch as it was meet that he should celebrate his supper there and then, where and when he did celebrate his passover, for the cause before by me alleged, it pleased him to keep his first supper with twelve only, for that the law⁴ of communication unto the passover, which was joined with the supper, would not admit any greater number of communicants, they being sufficient and enough to eat up⁵ the passover.

They were made apostles before,
and so called.

JO. WHITGIFT.

This is only a conjecture, but it overthroweth your argument; for, by your saying, Christ had his twelve apostles there at supper, because the law touching the passover did bind him thereunto, not because he would signify that there should be no communion except the whole church do communicate.

The disciples were "made apostles" before the institution of the supper; and were so called, as it is evident, Matt. x. and Mark iii.; and therefore I marvel what you mean in saying, "which afterwards he made apostles."

Matt. x.

Mark iii.

[¹ This reference is inserted from Repl. 2.]

[² Unto his own family and to as many only as would serve to eat up, Repl. 2.]

[³ The words from supper are omitted in Repl. 2.]

[⁴ With the fewer for that the law, Repl. 2.]

[⁵ Communicants than was sufficient to eat up, Repl. 2.]

Chapter vi. The Tenth Division.

T. C. Page 117, Sect. 2.

And, although it be clear and plain that, when it is said: "Drink ye all of this," and: "Tarry one for another," these sayings are meant of that particular congregation or assembly which assemble themselves together to be taught by one mouth of the minister, yet I have therefore put this caution of⁶ "as much as may be possible," lest any man should cavil, as though I would have no communion until all the godly through the world should meet together. Likewise I have put this caution "as much as may be conveniently;" for, although it be possible that any⁷ particular church may communicate at one table, in one day, and together, yet may the same be inconvenient for divers causes. As if the number should be very great, so that to have them all communicate together it would require such a long time, as the tarrying out of the whole action would hazard either the life or at least the health of divers there. Again, forasmuch as, other some being at the church, it is meet that other should be at home, upon occasion of infants and such like things as require the presence of some to tarry at home. In these cases, and such like, the inconveniences do deliver us from the guilt of uncharitableness, and forsaking the fellowship of the church, for that we do not here sever ourselves, but are by good and just causes severed; which guilt we shall never escape, if besides⁸ such necessary causes we pretend those that are not, or, having not so much as a pretence, yet, notwithstanding, separate ourselves; as the daily practice through⁹ the church doth shew.

JO. WHITGIFT.

If you be content to admit so many "cautions" and exceptions, then is the question soon decided, and you make it no such commandment but that upon occasion it may be altered. Indeed the words of Christ do signify that the cup of the supper and the whole supper is common to all, as well of the laity (as we term them) as of the clergy, but it doth not prescribe what number shall be present at every several communion. I do not excuse those that withdraw themselves from that supper, except it be upon necessary and just occasion, but I deny that the negligence or lawful occasion of some ought to hinder or stay other from communicating: this you should have proved; but you do not, and your "cautions" and exceptions (which I very well allow) declare the contrary.

[⁶ Repl. 2 omits of.][⁷ A, Repl. 2.][⁸ Beside, Repl. 1 and 2.][⁹ Thorough out, Repl. 2, through, Repl. 1.]

Chapter vi. The Eleventh Division.

T. C. Page 117, Sect. 3.

But it may be objected, that in this point the book of common prayer is not in fault, which doth not only not forbid that all the church should receive together, but also by a good and godly exhortation moveth those that be present that they should not depart, but communicate all together. It is true that it doth not forbid, and that there is godly exhortation for that purpose; but that, I say, is not enough; for neither should it suffer that three or four should have a communion by themselves (so many being in the church meet to receive, and to whom the supper of the Lord doth of like right¹ appertain), and it ought to provide that those which would withdraw themselves should be by ecclesiastical discipline at all times, and now also under a godly prince by civil punishment, brought to communicate with their brethren. And this is the law of God, and this is now, and hath been heretofore, the practice of the churches² reformed. All men understand that the passover was a figure of the Lord's supper, and that there should be as strait bonds to bind men to celebrate the remembrance of our spiritual deliverance as there was to remember the deliverance out of Egypt. But whosoever did not then communicate with the rest, at that time when the passover was eaten, was excommunicated; as may³ appear in the Numbers⁴, where he saith that, whosoever did not communicate, being clean, his soul should be cut off from amongst the people of God. Therefore this neglect, or contempt rather, of the Lord's supper ought to be punished with no less punishment, especially when as (after the church hath proceeded in that order which our Saviour Christ appointeth of admonishing) they be not sorry for their fault, and promise amendment. And that this was the custom of the churches it may appear by the 9. of those canons which are fathered of the apostles; where it is decreed that "all the faithful that entered into the congregation and heard the scriptures read, and did not tarry out the prayers and the holy communion, should be, as those which were causers of disorders in the church, separated from the church," or (as it is translated of another) "deprived of the communion⁵." Also in the council of Braccara it was decreed that, "if any entering into the church of God heard the scriptures, and afterward of wantonness or looseness withdrew himself from the communion of the sacrament, and so brake the rule of discipline in the

This is clean contrary to the Admonition, pag. 109.

This is not excommunication, but putting to death.

Num. ix. 13.5

Conc. Apo. can. ix.

Conc. ii. Bracca. cap. 83. Tom. ii.

[¹ Of right, Repl. 2.]

[² Of churches, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[³ As it may, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

[⁴ In the book of Numbers, Repl. 2.]

[⁵ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[⁶ Πάντας τοὺς εἰσιόντας πιστοὺς, καὶ τῶν γραφῶν ἀκούοντας, μὴ παραμένοντας δὲ τῇ προσευχῇ καὶ τῇ ἀγίᾳ μεταλήψει, ὡς ἀταξίαν ἐμποιοῦντας τῇ ἐκκλησίᾳ, ἀφορίζεσθαι χρή.—Canon. Apost. 9. in Concil. Stud. Labb. et Cossart. Lut. Par. 1671-2. Tom. I. col. 28.]

reverend sacraments, should be put out of the church till such time as he had by good fruits declared his repentance⁷."

JO. WHITGIFT.

I do not much disagree from this, saying that I see no reason that three or four should be debarred from so comfortable and fruitful a sacrament, either for the negligence or necessary impediments of others; except also your misunderstanding of the ix. of Numbers; for delere animam ejus de populo suis is there not "to excommunicate," as you interpret it, but "to put to death," and "to kill;" which were a hard punishment for such as be negligent in coming to the communion. Convenient discipline I think very necessary in this point, and therefore I will not stand with you in other circumstances of this portion; only I will desire the reader to note how far the authors of the Admonition vary from you in this assertion, who, page 102., say that we "thrust them in their sin to the Lord's table," and, page 109., that it should be provided that "papists nor other neither constrainedly nor customably⁸ communicate in the mysteries of salvation;" which cannot otherwise be meant, than that we compel them by punishments to come to the Lord's table. But how much more cause should they have so to say, if we were as severe in punishing as you here require? But the negligence of the common sort, in not oftener frequenting the Lord's supper, is lamentable, the punishment appointed for such in all places not so well executed; and therefore, as I said before, I think convenient discipline, and due execution of the same, very necessary.

The Admonition and the Reply agree not.

Another thing also I would have the reader to mark, that you here allege for proof the canons of the apostles, which are as much doubted of to have been the apostles' as the epistles either of Clement or Anacletus.

[⁷ Si quis intrat ecclesiam Dei, et sacras scripturas non audit, et pro luxuria sua avertit se a communione sacramenti, et in observandis mysteriis declinat constitutam regulam disciplinæ, istum talem projiciendum de ecclesia catholica esse decernimus, donec pœnitentiam agat, et ostendat fructum pœnitentiæ suæ; &c.—Capit. Martin. Episc. Bracar, 83. in eod. Tom. V. col. 914.]

[⁸ Customable, Def. A.]

Chapter vi. The Twelfth Division.

T. C. Page 118, Sect. 1.

But here also may rise another doubt of the former words of Moses in the book of Numbers. For, seeing that he maketh this exception, "if they be clean," it may be said that those that depart do not feel themselves meet to receive, and therefore depart, the other three or four, or more, feel themselves meet and disposed for that purpose; whereupon it may seem that it is neither reason to compel those to come which feel not themselves meet, nor to reject them that feel that good disposition and preparation in themselves. For answer whereunto we must understand that the uncleanness which Moses speaketh of was such as men could not easily avoid, and whereunto they might fall sometimes by necessary duty, as by handling their dead, which they were by the rule of charity bound to bury, sometimes by touching at unawares a dead body, or by sitting in the place where some unclean body had sitten, or by touching such things which the law judged unclean; which thing cannot be alleged in those which are now of the church; for as many as be of it, and withal of such discretion as are able to prove and examine themselves, can have no excuse at all if they may be at the church to withdraw themselves from the holy supper of the Lord. For, if they will say that they be not meet, it may be answered unto them that it is their own fault, and, further, if they be not meet to receive the holy sacrament of the supper, they are not meet to hear the word of God, they are not meet to be partakers of the prayers of the church, and if they be for one they are also for the other; for with that boldness, and with that duty or lawfulness (I speak of those which are of the church and of discretion to examine themselves)—I say, with what lawfulness they may offer themselves to the prayers and to the hearing of the word of God, they may also offer themselves unto the Lord's supper. And, to whomsoever of them the Lord will communicate himself by preaching the word, unto the same he will not refuse to communicate himself by receiving of the sacraments. For whosoever is of God's household and family, he need not be afraid to come to the Lord's table, nor doubt but that the Lord will feed him there; and whatsoever he be that is a member of the body of Christ may be assured that he receiveth life from Christ the head, as well by the arteries and conduits of the supper of the Lord as by the preaching of the word of God; so that it must needs follow that the not receiving of those which depart out of the church when there is any communion celebrated proceedeth either of vain or¹ superstitious fear, growing of gross ignorance of themselves and of the holy sacraments, or else of an intolerable negligence, or rather contempt; of the which neither the one nor the other should be either borne with or nourished, either by permitting three or four to communicate alone, or else in letting them which depart go so easily away with so great a fault, which ought to be severely punished.

This is not true; as shall be shewed.

[¹ And, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Neither do I differ from you in the substance of this that you here set down, which is (as I take it) to cut off frivolous and vain excuses, used by such as either neglect or contemn the holy communion; but in certain circumstances here used I do not altogether agree with you. For, first, the uncleanness that Moses speaketh of is but ceremonial and external, and therefore may more easily be avoided; but weakness of faith and uncleanness of life (which may and ought for a time withdraw men from the communion) is natural and inward, and therefore with greater difficulty shunned.

Secondly, a christian man and a true member of the church may take benefit by prayer and hearing of the word of God, which yet for divers respects is not meet to receive the holy communion; and indeed praying and preaching be means to prepare men, and make them apt to communicate: besides this, he that is weak in faith, corrupt in judgment, ignorant in the right use of the sacrament, may be admitted to prayer, and to the hearing of the word, that he may be instructed (for fides ex auditu: "faith cometh by hearing"); so may he not to the receiving of the supper. Thirdly, no man may presume to receive the supper except he hath first tried and examined himself; but he ought to come to the hearing of the word of God, that he may first learn how to examine himself. Wherefore this is not true, that, "with what lawfulness they may offer themselves to the prayers and to the hearing of the word of God, they may also offer themselves unto the Lord's supper." And you affirm the contrary, pag. 35.² For there you say that the magistrate ought to compel such as be papists and excommunicate persons to hear sermons, and, pag. 133., you affirm the same in plainer words, shewing a reason why such may be admitted to the hearing of the word, and yet not to the participation of the Lord's supper. Lastly, I deny that any such persuasion is nourished in them, by suffering three or four to communicate, but the contrary rather; for the godly example of these few may either provoke the rest to the like diligence, or else confound them and make them ashamed; especially if either that godly exhortation contained in the book be read unto them, or they be otherwise

Men not meet to communicate may be admitted to the hearing of the word and prayers.

Rom. x.

T. C. contrary to himself, pag. 35, line 10, and pag. 133, lin. 19.

[² See before, Vol. I. page 386.]

put in mind of their slackness by a godly and careful minister. These circumstances excepted, in the rest of the matter in this part I agree with you.

Chapter vi. The Thirteenth Division.

T. C. Page 118, Sect. 1.

And upon this either contempt or superstitious fear drawn from the papists' lenten preparation of forty days, earshrift, displing¹, &c., it cometh to pass that men, receiving the supper of the Lord but seldom, when they fall sick must have the supper ministered unto them in their houses, which otherwise being once every week received before should not breed any such unquietness in them when they cannot come to receive it, although, as I have before shewed, if they had never received it before, yet that private receiving were not at any hand to be suffered. And thus, having declared what I think to be faulty in the communion-book in this point, and the reasons why, and withal answered to that which either M. Doctor allegeth in this place of the 80. and 81., and likewise in the 152. and 185. pages touching this matter, I come now unto that which is called the "Jewish purifying" by the Admonition, and by the service-book aforesaid "The purification of women."

JO. WHITGIFT.

I see not how this in any point is true; for "lenten fast" was then used when the communion was most diligently and often frequented, and indeed the rare and seldom receiving came in with private massing, which had the beginning long after the "lenten fast."

To "receive once every week" is a thing to be wished, if it might conveniently be. And yet, notwithstanding, were not the communion to be denied to the sick; for it oftentimes cometh to pass, that men through infirmity and sickness are not able to come to the church in whole months and years, whom this weekly communicating could nothing help; and it were against all reason to debar them of this seal of God's promises, this effectual manner and kind of applying of the death of Christ unto themselves, this assurance of the forgiveness of sins, and this sacrament of comfort, especially in time of extremity and sickness, if they be desirous of it. And thus you "have declared what" you "think to be faulty in the communion-book in this point, and the reasons why;" but of what force your reasons are, and how justly in this point you charge the book, the reader may now judge.

[¹ Displing: discipline.]

Of the churching of women.

Chapter vii. The First Division.

T. C. Page 118, Sect. ult.

Now to the churching of women, in the which title yet kept there seemeth Strife about words.
to be hid a great part of the Jewish purification; for, like as in the old law she that had brought forth a child was holden unclean, until such time as she came to the temple to shew herself, after she had brought forth a man or a woman; so this term of "churching of her" can seem to import nothing else than a banishment, and as it were, a certain excommunication from the church during the space that is between the time of her delivery and of her coming unto the church. For what doth else this churching imply but a restoring her unto the church, which cannot be without some bar or shutting forth presupposed? It is also called "the thanksgiving," but the principal title, which is the directory of this part of the liturgy, and placed in the top of the leaf as that which the translator best liked of, is "churching of women." To pass by that, that it will have them come as nigh the communion-table as may be, as they came before to the high altar (because I had spoken once generally against such ceremonies), that of all other is most Jewish, and approacheth nearest to³ the Jewish purification, that she is commanded to offer accustomed offerings. Wherein, besides that the very word "offering" carrieth with it a strong scent and suspicion of a sacrifice (especially being uttered simply without any addition), it cannot be without danger that the book maketh the custom of the popish church (which was so corrupt) to be the rule and measure of this offering. And, although the meaning of the book is not that it should be any offering for sin, yet this manner of speaking may be a stumbling-stock in the way of the ignorant and simple, and the wicked and obstinate thereby are confirmed and hardened in their corruptions. The best which can be answered in this case is that it is for the relief of the minister; but then it should be remembered, first, that the minister liveth not any more of offerings; secondarily, that the payment of the minister's wages is not so convenient, either in the church or before all the people; and, thirdly, that thereby we fall into that fault which we condemn in popery, and that is that, besides the ordinary living appointed for the service of the priests in the whole, they took for their several services of mass, baptism, burying, churching, &c., several rewards; which thing being of the service-book well abolished in certain other things, I cannot see what good cause there should be to retain it in this and certain other.

JO. WHITGIFT.

It is the property of quarrellers, and of men naturally bent Strife of words proper to quarrellers.
 to contention, to strive about words and terms, when they cannot reprove anything in the matter itself. For in all these faults here pretended there is not one that toucheth the matter of the book: only "the title in the top of the leaf," "the coming of women so near to the communion-table," "the paying of the accustomed offerings to the curate," are in this place reproved, as matters of great importance, being all of themselves not worth the talking of; and yet, being (as comely and decent orders) prescribed by the church, may not be contemned and despised, without the crime of stubbornness and disobedience. But, that your quarrelling may the rather appear, I will answer your cavils in as few words as I can. And first for the title, which is this: "The thanksgiving of women after child-birth, commonly called the churching of women." Now, sir, you see that the proper title is this: "The thanksgiving of women after child-birth." The other is the common name customably used of the common people, who will not be taught to speak by you, or any man, but keep their accustomed names and terms; therefore they call the Lord's day "Sunday," and the next unto it "Monday," profane and ethnical names, and yet nothing derogating from the days and times. Likewise they call the morning and evening prayer "mattins" and "evensong," neither can they be brought to the contrary; and yet the prayers be not the worse: so they call the day of Christ's nativity "Christmas," &c.: what is this to condemn the things themselves?

[² The verses are added from Repl. 2.][³ Unto, Repl. 1 and 2.]

But you say, "this term doth import nothing else than a banishment from the church, &c.;" so might you say that these names Sunday and Monday do import that we dedicate those days to the sun and moon; and so likewise might you say of the other names retained in the common and usual speech; but all men would then espy your folly, even as they may do now, if they be disposed. The absence of the woman after her delivery is neither banishment nor excommunication (as you term it), but a withdrawing of the party from the church by reason of that infirmity and danger that God hath laid upon womankind in punishment of the first sin, which danger she knoweth not whether she shall escape or no; and therefore, after she hath not only escaped it, but also brought a child into the world, to the increase of God's people, and after such time as the comeliness of nature may bear, she cometh first into the church to give thanks for the same, and for the deliverance by Christ from that sin, whereof that infirmity is a perpetual testimony. And, this being done, not Jewishly, but christianly, not of custom, but of duty, not to make the act of lawful matrimony unclean, but to give thanks to God for deliverance from so manifold perils, what christian heart can for the name's sake thus disallow of it, as you do?

The people hardly brought to leave accustomed terms.

The true cause of the absence of the woman after her deliverance.

The cause of her thanksgiving.

The "coming so near to the communion-table" is a very small matter to carp at; it is thought to be the most convenient place, both for the minister and for the woman, especially if she be disposed to receive the holy communion. But such trifling quarrels argue an extreme penury of good and substantial reasons.

The "paying of her accustomed offerings," which you seem most to dislike (as yourself confess the meaning of the book to be), hath no such purpose and intent as you would make the reader to believe, neither can it; for she neither offereth "lamb," "turtles," or young "pigeons," as the law requireth, but payeth to the curate his accustomed duty, which both she may as lawfully give and he receive, as the other tenths may be paid and received. It is a portion of the pastor's living appointed and limited unto him by the church; and therefore he may lawfully receive it, as it is appointed unto him. And all your objections to the contrary are hereby answered fully. Levit. xii.

Chapter vii. The Second Division.

Admonition.

In which book¹ a great number of things contrary to God's word are ^bActs xv. 10. contained, as Jewish ^bpurifyings, &c.²

Answer to the Admonition, Page 81, Sect. 4.

The third is the "Jewish purifyings;" as you term it. You cite for that purpose Acts xv., where Peter, speaking against certain of the Pharisees which believed and taught that it was needful for the gentiles which were converted to be circumcised, and to observe Churching of women.³

[¹ Book is not in Adm. or Answ.]

[² See before, page 540, note 3.]

[³ This marginal note is inserted from Answ. 2.]

Acts xv.

Moses' law, saith on this sort: "Now therefore why tempt ye God, to lay a yoke on the disciples' necks, &c.?" How anything here contained prohibiteth women, after they be delivered from the great danger and pains of child-bearing, to give in the congregation thanks for their deliverance, let the godly reader judge. Surely this is no Jewish purifying, but christian giving of thanks, most consonant and agreeable to the word of God. But hereof also something more is to be spoken in another place.

T. C. Page 119, Line 24.

Now, whereas M. Doctor saith that the place of the xv. of the Acts, alleged by the Admonition, maketh nothing against this, he should have considered that if it be a Jewish ceremony (as they suppose it) it is to be abolished utterly. For, it being shewed there that all the ceremonial law of Moses is done away through our Saviour Christ, this also a part thereof must needs be therein comprised.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The place nothing pertaineth to this purpose, neither is giving of thanks a Jewish ceremony; and therefore their supposition is but vain.

Chapter vii. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 119, in the midst.

And, whereas he saith that it, being nothing else but a thanksgiving for her deliverance, cannot be therefore but christian and very godly; I answer that, if there should be solemn and express giving of thanks in the church for every benefit, either equal or greater than this, which any singular person in the church doth receive, we should not only have no preaching of the word, nor ministering of the sacraments, but we should not have not so much leisure as to do any corporal or bodily work, but should be like unto those heretics which were called of the Syriac word Messalians, or continual prayers, and which did nothing else but pray.

Theod. Li. iv. cap. 11.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Truth is never contrary unto itself: before, you reproved the book of common prayer for want of thanksgiving for benefits received¹, and now you reprove it for appointing thanks to be given for deliverance from sin, from manifold perils and dangers, and for the increase of God's people; all which things are public, although thanks be given by a private person; for indeed the punishment and danger laid upon all womankind for the disobedience² is not only common, but very notorious, and a perpetual testimony of our subjection unto sin, and therefore requireth a solemn thanksgiving at such time as it pleaseth God to shew his mercy therein, and to deliver from it. And yet, if it were not so, where read you that any private person is forbidden to give thanks in the public congregation for some especial benefit received, namely if the church think it convenient, and agree thereunto, as it doth to this?

[¹ See before, page 486.]

Theodoret saith that the Messalian heretics had these errors: first, they, being possessed with a devil, which they thought to be the Holy Spirit, did condemn all bodily labour as wicked; secondly, they, being given to much sleep, did name the visions of their dreams prophecies; thirdly, they said that the supper of the Lord and baptism did neither good nor harm to any man; fourthly, when they were charged with such things, they would not stand to them, but impudently deny them; last of all, they taught that every man when he is born doth take of his parents, as the nature, so likewise the servitude of devils, which being driven out by diligent prayer, the Holy Spirit entered in, &c.³ This is all that Theodoret in that place reporteth of those heretics; the which how much it maketh against either diligent or continual prayers or thanksgiving for benefits received, the reader may consider. Christ and the apostle St Paul require continual prayer and thanksgiving, but not in same sense and meaning that the Messalians did.

The errors of the Messa-lians.
Theod. Lib.
iv. cap. 11.

Luke xviii.
Rom. xii.
Eph. vi.
Col. iv.

[² For disobedience, Def. A.]

[³ 'Ενθουσιασταὶ γὰρ καλοῦνται, δαίμονός τινος ἐνεργείας εἰσδεχόμενοι, καὶ Πνεύματος ἁγίου παρουσίαν αὐτὴν ὑπολαμβάνοντες. οἱ δὲ τελείαν τὴν νόσον εἰσδεδεγμένοι, ἀποστρέφονται μὴν τὴν τῶν χειρῶν ἐργασίαν ὡς πονηράν. ὕπνῳ δὲ σφᾶς αὐτοὺς ἐκδιδόντες, τὰς τῶν οὐνείρων φαντασίας προφητείας ἀποκαλοῦσι...οὐδὲν οὔτε ὀνείρασθαι οὔτε λωβᾶσθαι φάσκοντες τὴν θείαν τροφήν,...κρύπτειν δὲ τὴν νόσον πειρώμενοι, καὶ μετὰ ἐλέγχους ἀναιδῶς ἐξαργυροῦνται,...ἔφη μηδεμίαν μὴν ἐκ τοῦ θεοῦ βαπτίσματος ὠφέλειαν τοῖς ἀξιουμένοις γίνεσθαι' μόνην δὲ τὴν σπουδαίαν εὐχὴν τὸν δαίμονα τὸν ἔνοικον ἐξελαύνειν. Ἐλκεῖν γὰρ ἕκαστον τῶν τικτομένων ἔλεγεν ἐκ τοῦ προπάτορος, ὥσπερ τὴν φύσιν, οὕτω δὴ καὶ τὴν τῶν δαιμόνων δουλείαν. τοῦτων δὲ ὑπὸ τῆς σπουδαίας ἐλαυνομένων εὐχῆς, ἐπιφοιτᾷ λοιπὸν τὸ πανάγιον Πνεῦμα, κ. τ. λ. — Theod. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. iv. cap. xi. pp. 163, 4.]

Chapter vii. The Fourth Division.

Admonition.

They should first prove . . . that churching of women, coming in veils, abusing the psalm to her: "I have lifted up mine eyes unto the hills, &c.," and such other foolish things, are agreeable to the written word of the Almighty? ^{Psalm cxx.}¹

Answer to the Admonition, Page 155, for the which T. C. hath noted 153, Sect. 2.

The cxxi. Psalm (for I think your printer was overseen in that quotation): "I have lifted up mine eyes, &c.," teacheth that all help cometh from God, and that the faithful ought only to look for help at his hands, and therefore a most meet psalm to be said at such time as we being delivered from any peril come to give thanks to God.

[What mean you to add "and such other foolish things"? What foolishness, I beseech you, can you find in this so godly a psalm? O where are your wits? Nay, where is your reverence you ought to give to the holy scriptures? * But still I say with Zuinglius, you do require that of other, which you ought to perform yourselves; for you ought to prove all these things which you condemn to be against the scriptures. *]³

T. C. Page 119, somewhat past the midst.

For the Psalm cxxi., spoken of in the 155.⁴ page, it being shewed that it is not meet to have any such solemn thanksgiving, it is needless to debate of the psalm wherewith the thanksgiving should be made.

JO. WHITGIFT.

A short answer, and to small purpose: the psalm is most apt to that end, and thanksgiving in such cases most godly; as I have declared both in my Answer to the Admonition, and to your Reply.

[¹ Psal. cxxi., Adm.; but the first edition, as above, Psalm cxx.]

[² This paragraph is composed of fragments of the whole that is contained in Adm. and Answ.; see before, page 513. It is printed afterwards more fully, in Tractat. xxi.]

[³ This is inserted from Answ., the last sentence being in Answ. 2 only.]

[⁴ 153, Repl. 1.]

Chapter vii. The Fifth Division.

Admonition.

The twelfth.

Churching of women after child-birth smelleth of Jewish purification : their other rites and custom⁵ in their lying-in and coming to church is foolish and superstitious, as it is used. She must lie in with a white sheet upon her bed, and come covered with a veil, as ashamed of some folly. She must offer ; but these are matters of custom, and not in the book ; but
• Psalm cxxi. this psalm (as is noted before) is childishly abused. "I °have lifted⁶ up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help." "The sun shall not burn thee by day, nor the moon by night."

Answer to the Admonition, Page 155 and 202 ; for the which T. C. hath quoted 101 and 102 page.

In the hundred fifty-five these be my words :

That women should come in veils is not contained in the book, no more indeed is the wafer-cake ; and therefore you might well have left these two out of your reason, being thrust in without all reason.

To the which nothing is answered.

In the 202. page thus I say :

[Of the churching of women, I have spoken before, and also of the cxxi. Psalm : "I have lifted up mine eyes to the hills, &c."]⁷

For their lying-in I can say little. I am not skilful in women's matters, neither is it in the book, no more is her white sheet, nor her veil : let the women themselves answer these matters.

T. C. Page 119, Line 38.

And, whereas in the 101.⁸ and 102. pages, unto the Admonition objecting that the coming in the veil to the church more then than at other times is a token of shame, or of some⁹ folly committed, M. Doctor jestingly leaveth the matter to the women's answer ; a little true knowledge of divinity would have taught him that the bringing in or usurping without authority any ceremony in the congregation is both an earnest matter than may be jested at, and a weightier than should be permitted unto the

[⁵ Customs, Adm.]

[⁶ Lift, Adm.]

[⁸ In 101, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁷ This sentence is inserted from Answ.]

[⁹ Or some, Repl. 1 and 2.]

discretion of every woman, considering that the same hath been so horribly abused in the time¹ of popery

JO. WHITGIFT.

The woman's veil a civil custom, not a ceremony of the church.

The answer is fit for so frivolous an objection ; and a little true reason void of malicious carping would have taught you that this is rather a civil manner and custom of our country, than a ceremony of the church ; and the wearing of new gloves (as many at that time, and especially at the time of marriages do) is as much a ceremony as this ; for the wearing of the veil first began of that weakness and sickness that nature in that danger doth bring most women unto, thereby to keep them the more from the air ; and therefore (as I have said) in this country it was taken up as a custom of the people, and not as a ceremony of the church. But I perceive you will play small game before you sit out, and pick out very small trifles (though without the book) to brawl and bark at, rather than you would lack matter.

[¹ In time, Repl. 1 and 2.]

Of Holy-days.

Tract. x.

Of holy-days in general, that they may be appointed by the church; and of the use of them.

Chapter i. The First Division.

Admonition.

In which a great number of things are contained contrary to the ^m Exod. xx. *word of God*², as observing of^m holy-days, &c., patched (if not ⁹ *altogether, yet the greatest piece) out of the pope's portuis*³.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 81, Sect. 5, 6.

Fourthly, you mislike observing of holy-days, and ^{Holy days.} you allege Exod. xx.: "Six days shalt thou labour, and do all thy work."

To observe any day superstitiously, or to spend any day unprofitably, is flat against not this commandment only, but others also in the holy scriptures. And I would to God it were better looked unto. But to abstain any day from bodily labour, that we may labour spiritually ^{Good use of holy-days.} in hearing the word of God, magnifying his name, and practising the works of charity, is not either against this, or any other commandment. For I think the meaning of this commandment is not so to tie men to bodily labour, that they may not intermit the same to labour spiritually. For then how could we preachers and students excuse ourselves? How might the people lawfully come to our sermons and lectures in any of the six days? But of this thing also occasion will be ministered to speak more hereafter [in the second part, where I have spoken of it at large⁴].

T. C. Page 119, Sect. 1.

The holy-days follow, of which M. Doctor saith that so they be not used superstitiously or unprofitably they may be commanded. I have shewed before that they were. If they were so indifferent as they are made, yet, being kept of the papists, which are the enemies of God, they ought to be abolished. And, if it were as easy a matter to pull out the superstition of the observing of those holy-days out of men's hearts, as it is to protest and to teach that they are not commanded for any religion to be put in them, or for any to make conscience of the observing of them, as though there were some necessary worship of God in the keeping of them; then were they much more tolerable; but, when as the continuance of them doth nourish wicked superstition in the minds of men, and that the doctrine which should remedy the superstition, through the fewness and scarcity of able ministers, cannot come to the most part of them which are infected with this disease, and that also where it is preached the fruit thereof is in part hindered, whilst the common people attend oftentimes rather to that which is done than to that which is taught, being a thing indifferent (as it is said), it ought to be abolished, as that which is not only not fittest to hold the people in the sincere worshipping of God, but also as that which keepeth them in their former blindness and corrupt opinions which they have conceived of such holy-days.

[² Contrary to God's word are contained, Adm. and Answ.]

[³ See before, page 540.]

[⁴ The words between brackets are added from Answ. 2.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Profitable things must not be refused for the abuse.

Tract. vii. cap. 5.

The use of our holy-days a stop to superstition.

Things that be good and profitable, and have a necessary use, tending to the edifying of the church, and the worshipping of God, are not to be utterly removed for the abuses crept in; but the abuse must be taken away, and the thing still remain. If all things should be abrogated because they were kept of the papists, there would be a marvellous alteration both in the church and in the commonweal. But I have shewed before how far this is from the truth, even in some things invented by popes, much more in such things as were agreed upon in the primitive church (as many of the holy-days were), before the pope's tyranny, though afterwards greatly abused¹.

Holy-days, as they be now used, be rather means to withdraw men not only from superstition of the days themselves, but from all other kinds of superstition whatsoever: for then is God in the public congregation truly worshipped, the sacraments rightly ministered, the scriptures and other godly homilies read, the word of God faithfully preached; all which be the chief and principal means to withdraw men, not only from superstition, but all kind of error likewise.

Chapter i. The Second Division.

T. C. Page 120, Line 2.

And, if they had been never abused neither by the papists nor by the Jews (as they have been and are daily), yet such making of holy-days is never without some great danger of bringing in some evil and corrupt opinions into the minds of men.

[¹ See before, pages 30, &c.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

Imaginations and guesses may not go for reasons; and I have shewed before that the holy-days now observed in the church of England be means to root evil and corrupt opinions out of the hearts of men; so far are they from engendering the contrary.

Chapter i. The Third Division.

T. C. Page 120, Line 5.

I will use an example in one, and that the chief of holy-days, and most generally and of longest time observed in the church, which is the feast of Easter, which was kept, of some more days, of some fewer. How many thousands are there, I will not say of the ignorant papists, but of those also which profess the gospel, which, when they have celebrated those days with diligent heed taken unto their life, and with some earnest devotion in praying and hearing the word of God, do not by and by think that they have well celebrated the feast of Easter, and yet have they thus

^{1 Cor. v. 8.³} notably deceived themselves. For St Paul teacheth the² celebrating of the feast of the Christians' Easter is not as the Jews' Easter was, for certain days, but sheweth that we must keep this feast all the days of our life, in "the unleavened bread of sincerity and of truth;" by which we see that the observing of the feast of Easter for certain days in the year doth pull out of our minds, or ever we be aware, the doctrine of the gospel, and causeth us to rest in that near consideration of our duties for the space of a few days, which should be extended to all our life.

JO. WHITGIFT.

What? do you condemn the feast of Easter also? would you have it abrogated because it hath been abused? do you not know that the apostles themselves observed it, and the church ever sithence their time? read Eusebius, Lib. v. cap. 23, and you shall find it to be a tradition of the apostles; peruse the 24. and 25. chapter of the same book, and you shall understand, by the testimony of Polycrates, and all the other bishops in Asia, that Philip the apostle, John the evangelist, Polycarpus his scholar, and other bishops likewise of greatest antiquity, kept solemnly the feast of Easter⁴. But observed Easter.

The apostles

Euseb. Lib.
v. cap. 23, 24,
25.

[² Teacheth that the, Repl. 2.]

[³ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700. Lib. v. capp. xxiii. xxiv. xxv. pp. 154, &c.]

Confess.
Helve.

why should I labour to prove that that all histories, all ancient fathers, all late writers, all learned men, confess? and especially seeing that St Augustine, ad Janu. 119., saith that the observation of Easter hath “the authority from the scriptures¹,” and seeing also that the same feast with others is allowed by the confession of the churches in Helvetia? The words of which confession be these: “Moreover, if churches, as they may by christian liberty, keep religiously the remembrance of Christ his birth, circumcision, passion, resurrection, ascension into heaven, and sending his Holy Ghost unto his disciples, we well allow it².” Therefore I cannot but marvel that you so boldly, without ground, for abuse’ sake, condemn even the feast used and allowed by the apostles, and continued in the church without contradiction of any one worthy of credit to this day. Surely you may as well reason that the scriptures are not to be read because that heretics have so greatly abused them.

The place of St Paul, 1 Cor. v., is nothing to your purpose; for, though he borrow a metaphor of the Jews’ passover, to move the Corinthians to pureness and integrity of life, yet doth he not abrogate the feast of Easter; if he had meant any such thing (as he did not), yet must it have been understood of the Jews’ passover, not of celebration of the memory of Christ’s resurrection, which we commonly call Easter. Doth he that saith the whole life of a christian man ought to be a perpetual fast deny that there may be any day or time appointed to fast in? A christian man must ever serve God and worship him; shall there not therefore be certain days appointed for the same? This is a very simple argument: St Paul willeth us “to purge out the old leaven, that we may be a new lump, &c.,” also, “to keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of maliciousness, &c.,” therefore we may not celebrate the feast of Easter once a year. I deny this argument.

The observing of Easter doth rather put us in mind of the doctrine of the gospel, and draw us to a more near consideration of the benefits that we have received by the death, passion, and resurrection of Christ; and I suppose that there are few godly-disposed Christians that do not think it most convenient and profitable that such feasts especially should be in the church retained; neither is every contentious person's imagination and surmise what may happen to be so greatly regarded, that it should be sufficient to condemn anything that may have a profitable use in the church, by whomsoever it is invented, much less if it hath been used of the apostles themselves, and ever sithence their time continued in the church; as I have shewed this feast to have been. The weakness of man is great; therefore, as he is continually to be taught that he should at all times remember his duty, so is it very necessary to have certain feasts, wherein by the reading and hearing of the scriptures men may be particularly stirred to the remembrance and deep consideration of the principal parts of our religion, and the good and godly examples of the saints of God in doing their duty therein.

[¹ Hæc et ex auctoritate divinarum scripturarum, et universæ ecclesiæ...consensione, per anniversarium pascha celebrantur, &c.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Inq. Januar. Lib. xi. seu Epist. lv. 27. Tom. II. col. 138.]

[² Præterea si ecclesiæ, pro christiana libertate, memoriam dominicæ natiuitatis, circumcisionis, passionis et resurrectionis, ascensionis item in cælum, et missionis sancti Spiritus in discipulos, religiose celebrent, maximopere approbamus. Festa vero hominibus, aut divinis instituta, non probamus.—Confess. Fid. Christ. cap. xxiv. in Corp. et Syntag. Confess. Fid. Genev. 1654. p. 54.]

Chapter i. The Fourth Division.

T. C. Page 120, Line 18.

But, besides the incommodities that rise of making such holy-days, and continuing of those which are so horribly abused, where it is confessed that they are not necessary—besides this, I say the matter is not so indifferent as it is made: I confess that it is in the power of the church to appoint so many days in the week or in the year, in the which the congregation shall assemble to hear the word of God and receive the sacraments and offer up prayers unto God, as it shall think good, according to these rules which are before alleged. But that it hath power to make so many holy-days (as we have), wherein no man may work any part of the day, and wherein men are commanded to cease from their daily vocations of ploughing and exercising their handicrafts, &c., that I deny to be in the power of the church. For proof whereof I will take the fourth commandment, and no other interpretation of it than M. Doctor alloweth of in the 174. page³, which is, that God licenseth and leaveth it at the liberty of every man to work six days in the week, so that he rest the seventh day. Seeing that therefore that the Lord hath left it to all men at liberty that they might labour, if they think good, six days; I say, the church, nor no man, can take away this liberty from⁴ them, and drive them to a necessary rest of the body.

[³ See below, page 595.]

[⁴ Take this liberty away from, Repl. 1 and 2.]

You draw from the magistrate his lawful authority, and give to the people too much carnal liberty.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The same God that gave that liberty in that commandment did appoint other solemn feast-days besides the sabbath; as the feast of Easter, of Pentecost, of tabernacles, &c.; without any restraint of this liberty. Therefore the interpretation given by me, page 174., of that place doth not leave it to every private man's free liberty, against the authority of the magistrate, or of the church, but it giveth liberty rather to such as be in authority, and to the church, to appoint therein what shall be convenient.

The magistrate hath authority to abridge external liberty.

What liberty cannot be taken away.

The magistrate hath power and authority over his subjects in all external matters, and bodily affairs; wherefore he may call them from bodily labour or compel them unto it, as shall be thought to him most convenient. The liberty that God giveth to man, which no man ought to take from him, nor can if he would, is liberty of conscience, and not of worldly affairs. In bodily business he is to be governed by magistrates and laws. This doctrine of yours is very licentious, and tendeth too much to carnal and corporal liberty, and indeed is a very perilous doctrine for all states. Not one tittle in God's word doth restrain either the magistrate, or the church, from turning carnal liberty to the spiritual service of God, or bodily labour to divine worship, as those do that cause men to abstain from corporal labour, that they may hear the word of God, and worship him in the congregation.

And why may not the church as well restrain them from working any part of the day, as it may do the most part of it? for you "confess that it is in the power of the church to appoint so many days in the week, or in the year, in the which the congregation should assemble to hear the word of God and receive the sacraments, and offer up prayers unto God, as it shall think good, according to those rules which are before alleged;" and this it cannot do, unless in the same days during all that time (which is no small portion of the day) it restrain them from bodily labour.

Wherefore, this being no commandment, that they shall labour six days in the week, but a signification that so many days they may labour; as the same God that gave this commandment hath done before in the old law, so may the churches likewise, for the increase of godliness and virtue, and edification, appoint some of those six days to be bestowed in prayers, hearing the word, administration of the sacraments, and other holy actions.

Chapter i. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 120, about the midst.

And, if it be lawful to abridge the liberty of the church in this point, and, instead that the Lord saith, "Six days thou mayest labour," if thou wilt, to say, Thou shalt not labour six days; I do not see why the church may not as well, where as the Lord saith, "Thou shalt rest the seventh day," command that thou shalt not rest the seventh day; for, if the church may restrain the liberty that God hath given them, it may take away the yoke also that God hath put upon them.

JO. WHITGIFT.

The church is not abridged of her liberty in this point, but useth her liberty in appointing some of these days to the worshipping of God, and the instruction of his people; which should not be counted a bondage or servitude to any man.

To rest the seventh day is commanded; to labour six days is but permitted¹; he that forbiddeth rest on the seventh day doth directly against the commandment; so doth not he that restraineth men from bodily labour in any of the six days; and therefore the reason is not like. And yet the commandment of bodily rest upon the seventh day in sundry cases may of a man's self, much more at a lawful commandment of a magistrate, in necessity be broken.

In things indifferent private men's wills are subject to such as have authority over them; therefore they ought to consent to their determination in such matters, except they will shew themselves to be wilful; which is a great fault, and deserveth much punishment.

But hitherto you have not replied to any Answer made to the Admonition.

[¹ "... his answer that the 'one is a commandment, the other a permission,' is nothing worth. For, as the commandment of resting the seventh day must, because of God's authority, abide in the nature of a commandment; so the permission to work the six days, warranted by the same authority, must abide in the nature of a permission."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 193.]

Chapter i. The Sixth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 173, in the latter end.

This is no restraint for any man from serving of God any day in the week else. For the Jews had divers other feasts which they by God's appointment observed, notwithstanding these words: "Six days &c."

T. C. Page 120, Sect. 1.

And, where as you say, in the 173. page, that, notwithstanding this fourth commandment, the Jews had certain other feasts which they observed; indeed the Lord which gave this general law might make as many exceptions as he thought good, and so long as he thought good; but it followeth not because the Lord did it that therefore the church may do it, unless it hath commandment and authority from God so to do. As when there is any general plague or judgment of God, either upon the church, or coming towards it, the Lord commandeth in such a case that they should sanctify a general fast, and proclaim ghnatsarah, Joel ii. 15.¹ which signifieth a prohibition or forbidding of ordinary works, and is the same Hebrew word wherewith those feast-days are noted in the law wherein they should rest; the reason of which commandment of the Lord was that, as they abstained that day as much as might be conveniently from meat, so they might abstain from their daily works, to the end they might bestow the whole day in hearing the word of God, and humbling themselves in the congregation, confessing their faults, and desiring the Lord to turn away from his fierce wrath. In this case, the church, having commandment to make a holy-day, may and ought to do it; as the church which was in Babylon did during the time of their captivity. But, where it is destitute of a commandment, it may not presume by any decree to restrain that liberty which the Lord hath given.

JO. WHITGIFT.

When you are convinced by manifest scripture, as you are in this matter, then you fly to your newly-devised distinctions, as you do in this place, saying; "The Lord which gave this general law might make as many exceptions as he thought good;" but to no purpose; for you cannot shew in the whole scripture where God hath made any law or ordinance against his own commandment². And surely in this point you have

[¹ The verse is added from Repl. 2.]

[² "His fear, that God 'should be thus contrary to himself,' is causeless: no more than the father is to be holden unconstant, which, when his son cometh to man's estate, freeth him of the obedience unto his servant, under which he cast him in his tender years; or than the physician, which, according to the state of the patient's body, prescribeth not only a divers, but a quite contrary diet."—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 190.] greatly overshot yourself, being content rather to grant contrariety to be in the scripture, than to yield to a manifest and known truth. The church, in appointing holy-days, doth follow the example of God himself, and therefore hath sufficient ground and warrant for her doings; and of the authority of the church in such matters I have spoken in another place³; Tract. 11. and I have also a little before declared what kind of liberty the church may not restrain; and I add that every private man's consent is in the consent of the church, as it is in the consent of the parliament; and therefore no man's liberty otherwise restrained than he hath consented unto. No man's liberty restrained.

That in the second of the prophet Joel maketh against you directly; for it sheweth that upon just occasion the church may inhibit men from labour even in the six days, notwithstanding it be said: "Six days thou shalt labour, &c." And to the intent no man should doubt of the liberty of the church herein, or of the practice of this liberty, let the ninth chapter of Esther be perused, and therein it will appear that, in remembrance of their great delivery from the treason of Haman, the Jews, by the commandment of Mordecai, did solemnize and keep holy-day the fourteenth and fifteenth day of the month Ader, every year. But, if neither the ordinances of God himself, nor the words of his prophets, nor the examples of his apostles, nor the practice of his church from the beginning, will take any place with you, you are no man for me to deal with. The Replier bringeth authority against himself. The Jews appointed to themselves holy-days.

¶ Of saints' days.

Chapter ii. The First Division.

T. C. Page 120, Sect. ult.

Now that I have spoken generally of holy-days, I come unto the apostles' and other saints' days, which are kept with us. And, though it were lawful for the church to ordain holy-days to our Saviour Christ, or to the blessed Trinity, yet it is not therefore lawful to institute holy-days to the apostles and other saints, or to their remembrance. For, although I confess as much as you say in the 153. page, that the church of England doth not mean by this keeping of holy-days that the saints should be honoured, or, as you allege in 175.⁴ and 176. pages⁵, that with us the saints are not prayed unto, or that it doth propound them as meritorious, yet that is not enough. For, as we reason against the popish purgatory,

[³ See Vol. I. pages 175, &c.]

[⁴ In the 175, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁵ See below, pages 592, 5.]

Saints' days.

Argum. ab autoritate negative.

that it is therefore naught, forasmuch as, neither in the old testament, nor in the new, there is any mention of prayer at any time for the dead, so may it be reasoned against these holy-days ordained for the remembrance of the saints that, forasmuch as the old people did never keep any feast or holy-day for the remembrance either of Moses, or Daniel, or Job, or Abraham, or David, or any other, how holy or excellent soever they were; nor the apostles, nor the churches in their time, never instituted any, either to keep the remembrance of Stephen, or of the Virgin Mary, or of John Baptist, or of any other notable and rare personage, that the instituting and erecting of them now, and this attempt by the churches which followed, which have not such certain and undoubted interpreters of the will of God, as the prophets and apostles were which lived in those churches, is not without some note of presumption; for that it undertaketh those things which the primitive church in the apostles' times (having greater gifts of the Spirit of God than they that followed them had) durst not venture upon.

JO. WHITGIFT.

"Purgatory" is made a matter of salvation or damnation, as all other doctrines of the pope's be; and therefore a negative reason (such as you use) is sufficient enough to improve it. But holy-days in our church have no such necessity ascribed unto them, only they are thought very profitable to the edifying of God's people; and therefore such negative reasons prevail not against them; no more than they do against other constitutions of the church pertaining to edifying, order, or comeliness, whereof there is no mention made in the word of God. And therefore nothing that is here spoken by you can take any hold.

Chapter ii. The Second Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 175, Sect. 1.

Why the name of saints are given to our holy-days¹.

Neither are they called by the name of any saint in any other respect than that the scriptures which that day are read in the church be concerning that saint, and contain either his calling, preaching, persecution, martyrdom, or such like².

T. C. Page 121, Sect. 1.

Moreover, I have shewed before what force the name of everything hath, to cause men to think so of everything as it is named; and therefore, Saints' although you say in the 175. page that, in calling these holy-days the days days. of such or such a saint, there is nothing else meant but that "the scriptures which are that day read concern that saint, and contain either his calling, preaching, persecution, martyrdom, &c.;" yet every one doth not understand so much. For, besides that the corrupt custom of popery hath carried their minds to another interpretation, the very name and appellation of the day teacheth otherwise. For, seeing that by the³ days dedicated to the Trinity, and those that are consecrate to our Saviour Christ, are, in that they be called Trinity day, or the Nativity day of our Saviour Christ, by and by taken to be instituted to the honour of our Saviour Christ, and of the Trinity, so likewise the people, when it is called St Paul's day, or the blessed Virgin Mary's day, can understand nothing thereby, but that they are instituted to the honour of St Paul, or of the Virgin Mary, unless they be otherwise taught. And, if you say, let them so be taught, I have answered that the teaching in this land cannot by any order which is yet taken come to the most part of those which have drunk this poison; and, where it is taught, yet were it good⁴ that the names were abolished, that they should not help to unteach that which the preaching teacheth in this behalf.

[¹ This marginal note is not in Answ.]

[² This paragraph follows at some interval that in page 572. In fact, Cartwright, as Whitgift complains just afterwards, has so "dismembered" the Answer, that it is perplexing, and of little use, to note all the variations from the original order.]

JO. WHITGIFT.

You have so dismembered my book, in taking here a piece, and there a piece, to answer as it pleaseth you, and in leaving out what you list, that you rather make a new discourse of your own, than a reply to any thing that I have set down.

Touching the names of the holy-days (which you mislike), I have told the cause why they be so called, which cause you cannot improve, and therefore you fall again to your accustomed conjectures and suppositions, which are but very simple and slender arguments. What if "every one doth not understand so much?" must the church alter her decrees and orders for every particular man's abusing or not understanding them? He that is most ignorant may learn and know why they be so called, if he be disposed: if he be not, the fault is his own; the name of the day is not the worse to be liked. You might much better reason against the names of Sunday, Monday, and Saturday, which be heathenish and profane names⁵; yet I

[³ That the, Repl. 2.]

[⁴ Taught it were good, Repl. 2.]

[⁵ "... our people hath not been nusled up in that filth of worshipping the sun and moon, as they have been of the saints: insomuch as (the learned set apart) there are few, which know that there were ever any days observed in the honour of the sun or moon. If they had been so nusled, who seeth not but that it had been most convenient, for the rooting out of that idolatry, to have made a change of these names?"—The Rest of Sec. Repl. p. 195.]

Saints'
days.

suppose that there is no man so mad as to think that those days be instituted and used of Christians to the honour of the sun, of the moon, and of Saturn¹. This is but to play the part of a quarreller (as I have sundry times told you), to cavil at the name, when you cannot reprove the matter. Those days be rather retained in the church to root out such superstitious opinions, by the preaching of the word, and the reading of the scriptures; neither can any man that understandeth English, and frequenteth the common and public prayers in those holy-days (except he be wilful), be so affected as you seem to suspect.

August.

Trinity Sunday, the Nativity of our Saviour Christ, and such like, although we honour the Trinity, and our Saviour Christ in them, as we do in all other, yet have they their names especially, because the scriptures then read in the church concern the Trinity and the Nativity of our Saviour Christ. Augustine, ad Januar. 119., saith thus of the day of the Nativity of Christ: "Here first it behoveth that thou know the day of the nativity of the Lord not to be celebrated in a sacrament or figure, but only that it is called back into remembrance that he is born; and for this there needeth nothing but that the day yearly be signified by solemn devotion wherein the thing was done²."

There is no place in this land so destitute of instructions, either by preaching or reading, that any man can justly plead ignorance in such matters. And therefore, seeing you have no other arguments against holy-days but conjectures and surmises, and they false and untrue, or at the least not sufficient to alter a profitable order in the church, holy-days may still remain and stand in their former force and strength.

[¹ "And here it is to be noted that the D. is taken in his own nets. For he defendeth the keeping holy of these saints' days, as they were used in the elder churches, and as Jerome and Augustine maintain them. Now himself hath for his defence alleged out of Jerome, that these days are 'observed to the martyrs;' and out of Augustine, that in them 'we honour the memories of martyrs' [See below, pages 579, 80]. Therefore his escape, that 'no man is so mad' as to think that 'by these days we do any honour unto the saints,' is not only an open untruth, but directly contrary to that himself maintaineth."—Ibid. p. 196.]

[² Hic primum oportet novetis diem natalem Domini non in sacramento celebrari, sed tantum in memoriam revocari quod natus sit, ac per hoc nihil opus erat, nisi revolutum anni diem, quo ipsa res acta est, festa devotione signari.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Inq. Januar. Lib. 11. seu Epist. lv. cap. i. 2. Tom. II. col. 128.]

Chapter ii. The Third Division.

Saints' days.

T. C. Page 121, Sect. 2.

Furthermore, seeing the holy-days be ceremonies of the church, I see not why we may not here renew Augustine's complaint, that the estate of the Jews was more tolerable than ours is³ (I speak in this point of holy-days); for, if their holy-days and ours be accounted, we shall be found to have more than double as many holy-days as they had. And, as for all the commodities which we receive by them, whereby M. Doctor goeth about to prove the goodness and lawfulness of their institution, as that the scriptures are there read and expounded, the patience of those saints in their persecution and martyrdom is to the edifying of the church remembered and yearly renewed—I say that we might have all those commodities without all those dangers which I have spoken of, and without any keeping of yearly memory of those saints, and as it filleth out in better and more profitable sort. For, as I said before of the keeping of Easter, that it tieth and (as it were) fettereth a meditation of the Easter to a few days, which should reach to all our age and time of our life; so those celebrations of the memories of saints and martyrs straiten our consideration of them unto those days, which should continually be thought of, and daily as long as we live. And, if that it be thought so good and profitable a thing that this remembrance of them should be upon those days wherein they are supposed to have died, yet it followeth not therefore that, after this remembrance is celebrated by hearing the scriptures concerning them, and prayers made to follow their constancy, that all the rest of the day should be kept holy in such sort as men should be debarred of their bodily labours and of exercising their daily vocations.

It will be found otherwise.

Very absurdly.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Augustine speaketh not of holy-days in that place, but of other unprofitable ceremonies used in particular churches, neither grounded of the scriptures, determined by councils, nor confirmed by the custom of the whole church. But the holy-days that we retain, being not only confirmed by the custom of the whole church, but also profitable for the instruction of the people, and used for public prayer, administration of the sacraments, and preaching the word, cannot be called burdens, except it be a burden to serve God in praying, in celebrating his sacraments, and in hearing his word.

Epist. ad Ja. 119.

[³ ... ipsam tamen religionem...servilibus oneribus premunt, ut tolerabilior sit conditio Judæorum, qui etiamsi tempus libertatis non agnoverunt, legalibus tamen sarcinis, non humanis præsumptionibus subjiciuntur.—Id. ibid. cap. xix. 35. col. 142.]

Saints'
days.

The Jews had more holydays than we.

And, whereas you say that, "if their holy-days and ours be accounted, we shall be found to have more than double as many holy-days as they had," you speak that which you are not able to justify. In the xxiii. of Leviticus there is appointed unto the Jews the feast of Easter; the feast of unleavened bread; the feast of first-fruits; Whitsuntide; the feast of trumpets; the feast of reconciliation; and the feast of tabernacles; whereof the feast of unleavened bread and the feast of tabernacles had each of them seven days annexed unto them. And, if you will add these, Judith's feast, chap. xvi.; the Maccabees' feast, 1 Macca. iv., which continued eight days together; and Hester's feast, chap. ix., which continued two days, you shall find that our holy-days be somewhat short in number of theirs: so far are we from having "more than double as many as they had." But your spirit is acquainted with such untrue assertions.

But you say, "we might have all these commodities without all those dangers, &c.;" and why not as well this way which the whole church hath from time to time allowed, as that way which certain particular persons of their own heads have devised? There is nothing that you have to say against these days, but only their names, and that "those memories of martyrs straiten our consideration of them unto those days, &c.," and that "men be inhibited from bodily labour" to serve God; all which I have answered before, and the latter in part you confess; for you would have certain days appointed for public prayer, the celebration of the sacraments and hearing the word, and you seem not to deny but that the remembrance of saints and martyrs may be kept, only you mislike that "in the rest of the day men should be debarred from their bodily labours, and exercising their daily vocations." Well, I perceive that something you would find fault with if you knew what. They are not so bound from labour (as it appeareth in the laws of this church) but that they may do their necessary business; and indeed they are so far from scrupulosity in this point, that all the punishments appointed cannot keep a number of them from their worldly affairs, not in the very time of public prayers and preaching of the word; and yet I see no cause why they may not justly be wholly debarred (except some urgent occasion require sometime the contrary) from their bodily labours in such days; for are not the householders bound of duty as well to instruct their families, as the pastor is bound to instruct them? and when is there a more convenient time than in such days? If you have such a regard to their worldly affairs, is it not more commodious for them to abstain wholly from work upon these holy-days, when they fall, than twice or thrice every week half the day? Therefore this reason of yours as it is worldly, so is it weak, both in the respect of God, and of the world also.

Your imagination that “the keeping of Easter doth fetter the meditation of Easter to a few days, &c.,” and so likewise the rest of the holy-days, I have answered before: it is a most vain reason, and you might as well say that there ought to be no certain times appointed for the receiving of the holy communion, because the meditation of the death and passion of Christ, and the application of the same, is fettered to these certain days, which should continually be thought of, and daily as long as we live. The same might you say likewise of the sabbath-day. But you ought to know that the especial celebrating of the memory of Christ’s resurrection once in the year is no more a fettering of our meditation thereof to that day only, than the receiving of the communion once in the month is a straiting of our consideration of the death and passion of Christ to that time only wherein we receive the holy sacrament. By this reason of yours we must either have such memories celebrated at all times, or at no time. But wise men can consider how far you wander for want of reason.

Saints’
days.

A vain reason.

Chapter ii. The Fourth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 176, Sect. 3, 4, 5.

Jerome, writing upon the iv. chap. to the Galatians, saith on this sort: “If it be not lawful to observe days, months, times, and years, we also fall into the like fault which observe the passion of Christ, the sabbath-day, and the time of Lent, the feasts of Easter and of Pentecost, and other times appointed to martyrs, according to the manner and custom of every nation; to the which he that will answer simply will say that our observing of days is not the same with the Jewish observ-

Jerome.

Saints'
days.

ing; for we do not celebrate the feast of unleavened bread¹, but of the resurrection and death of Christ. &c. And, lest the confused gathering together of the people should diminish the faith in Christ, therefore certain days are appointed that we might all meet together in one place, not because those days be more holy, but to the intent that in what day soever we meet we may rejoice to see one another. &c.²

Augustine.

Augustine in like manner, Lib. xviii. de Civitate Dei, cap. 27, saith that “we honour the memories of martyrs as of holy men, and such as have striven for the truth, even to death, &c.”³

Idem⁴.

The same Augustine, in his book contra Adamantum Manichæi Discip. cap. 16, expounding the words of the apostle, “Ye observe days, years, and times,” writeth thus: “But one may think that he speaketh of the sabbath: do not we say that those times ought not to be observed, but the things rather that are signified by them? for they did observe them servilely, not understanding what they did signify and prefigure: this is that that the apostle reproveth in them, and in all those that serve the creature rather than the Creator; for we also solemnly celebrate the sabbath-day, and Easter, and all other festival days of Christians; but, because we understand whereunto they do appertain, we observe

Paul ex-
pounded⁵.

[¹ Unleavened or sweet bread, Answ.]

[² Dicat aliquis: Si dies observare non licet, et menses, et tempora, et annos, nos quoque simile crimen incurrimus quartam sabbathi observantes; et parasceven; et diem dominicam; et jejunium quadragesimæ; et paschæ festivitatem; et pentecostes lætitiā: et pro varietate regionum, diversa in honore martyrum tempora constituta. Ad quod qui simpliciter respondebit, dicet: non eosdem Judaicæ observationis dies esse quos nostros. Nos enim non azymorum pascha celebramus, sed resurrectionis et crucis. &c. Et ne inordinata congregatio populi fidem minueret in Christo, propterea dies aliqui constituti sunt; ut in unum omnes pariter veniremus. Non quo celebrior sit dies illa qua convenimus: sed quo quaquamque die conveniendum sit, ex conspectu mutuo, lætitia major oriatur.—Hieron. Op. Par. 1693-1706. Comm. Lib. II. in Epist. ad Galat. cap. iv. Tom. IV. Pars I. col. 271.]

[³ Honoramus sane memorias eorum [martyrum] tamquam sanctorum hominum Dei, qui usque ad mortem corporum suorum pro veritate certarunt, &c.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. De Civ. Dei, Lib. VIII. cap. xxvii. l. Tom. VII. col. 217.]

[⁴ Idem is not in Answ.; but instead Gal. iv. 10.]

[⁵ This is inserted from Answ. 2.]

not the times, but those things which are signified by the times⁶. &c.⁷

T. C. Page 122, Sect. 1.

Now, whereas M. Doctor citeth Augustine and Jerome to prove that in the churches in their times there were holy-days kept besides the Lord's day, he might have also cited Ignatius, and Tertullian, and Cyprian, which are of greater anciency⁸, and would have made more for the credit of his cause, seeing he measureth all his truth almost through the whole book by the crooked measure and yard of time. For it is not to be denied but this keeping of holy-days (especially of the Easter and Pentecost) are very ancient, and that these holy-days for the remembrance of martyrs were used of long time. But these abuses were no ancients than other were, grosser also than this was; as I have before declared, and were easy further to be shewed if need required. And therefore I appeal from these examples to the scriptures, and to the examples of the perfectest church that ever was, which was that in the apostles' times.

An un-learned shift.

JO. WHITGIFT.

I know that I might have alleged many other authorities for the proof of this matter, but I thought these two sufficient (as they be indeed) in such a matter as this is; and your lightly rejecting of them will win no credit to your cause among wise and learned men. You may easily perceive by the words of both these authors that these days in their time were rightly and without all superstition used. But you do well to appeal from these examples and from all other ancient authority of learned men; for you know full well your lack of ability to maintain this and other your opinions by the testimonies of ancient writers: nay, you cannot but confess that the old learned fathers are utterly against you, which is the cause why you appeal from them; but it is an unlearned shift⁹.

The Replier appealeth from ancient authority.

[⁶ Time, Answ. 2.]

[⁷ Sed putat esse de sabbato dictum? Numquid et nos non dicimus ista non esse observanda, sed illa potius quæ his significantur? Illi enim ea serviliter observabant, non intelligentes ad quarum rerum significationem et prænuntiationem pertinerent. Hoc in eis culpat apostolus, et in omnibus qui serviunt creaturæ potius quam Creatori. Nam nos quoque et dominicum diem et pascha sollemniter celebramus, et quaslibet alias christianas dierum festivitates. Sed quia intelligimus quo pertineant, non tempora observamus, sed quæ illis significantur temporibus. &c.—Id. Lib. contr. Adimant. Manich. cap. xvi. 3. Tom. VIII. col. 135.]

[⁸ Anciency, Repl. 1 and 2.]

[⁹ "In the next division there is nothing but a manifest pillar of popery, with shameful outrage unto the Holy Ghost; in that he calleth the appeal to the Saints'

days.

Chapter ii. The Fifth Division.

T. C. Page 122, Sect. 1.

And yet also I have to say that the observation of those feasts first of all was much better than of later times. For Socrates, confessing that "neither our Saviour Christ, nor the apostles, did decree or institute any holy-days, or lay any yoke of bondage upon the necks of those which came to the preaching;" addeth, further, that "they did use first to observe the holy-days by custom, and that as every man was disposed at home;" which thing if it had remained in that freedom, that it was done by custom, and not by commandment, at the will of every one, and not by constraint, it had been much better than it is now, and had not drawn such dangers upon the posterity as did after ensue and we have the experience of.

Socrates' words un-truly reported.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Surely they were never better, nor more pure from all superstition and other errors than they be now in this church; and therefore in that respect there is no cause to complain.

You do not truly report Socrates' words, nor yet his meaning; for he doth not say that "every man at home kept those days as he was disposed;" but thus he saith: "Wherefore neither the apostle, nor the gospel, do at any time lay a yoke of bondage upon them which come unto the preaching of the gospel; but men themselves every one in their country, according as they thought good, celebrated the feast of Easter, and other holy-days of custom, for the intermission of their labours and remembrance of the healthful passion¹:" his meaning is not that every private man in his own house kept Easter, and the other feasts, as him listed, but that every church appointed such an order and time for the same as it thought convenient; and that this is his meaning, that which followeth in that chapter, and expресseth his own opinion of this matter, doth evidently declare. His words be these:

Socrat. Lib.
v. cap. 22.

scriptures and example of the apostles, from certain customs of the churches, which were more than a hundred years after Christ, 'an unlearned shift.'"—The Rest of Sec. Repl. pp. 197, 8.]

[¹ ... οὐδαμοῦ τοίνυν ὁ ἀπόστολος, οὐδὲ τὰ εὐαγγέλια, ζυγὸν δουλείας τοῖς τῷ κηρύγματι προσελθοῦσιν ἐπέθηκαν.... ὅθεν ἐπειδὴ φιλοῦσι τὰς ἑορτὰς οἱ ἄνθρωποι, διὰ τὸ ἀνίστασθαι τῶν πόνων ἐν αὐταῖς, ἕκαστοι κατὰ χώρας ὡς ἐβουλήθησαν, τὴν μνήμην τοῦ σωτηριώδους πάθους ἐξ ἑθους τινὸς ἐπετέλεσαν· οὐ γὰρ νόμῳ τοῦτο παραφυλάττειν ὁ Σωτὴρ, ἢ οἱ ἀπόστολοι ἡμῖν παρήγγειλαν.—Socr. in Hist. Eccles. Script. Amst. 1695-1700, Lib. v. cap. xxii. p. 232.]

“Surely I am of this opinion, that, as many other things in ^{Saints’} divers places have been brought in of custom, so the feast of ^{days.} Easter had a private or peculiar observation with every particular people of custom; because none of the apostles (as I have said) did make any law hereof: &c.²” For his whole drift is to prove that the feast of Easter, concerning the day and time, was diversly observed in divers churches and countries; but he neither can prove, nor goeth about to prove, that there was any church wherein it was not observed. And I have before declared that the feast of Easter was observed by the apostles, and sithence that time continued.

Chapter ii. The Sixth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 177, Sect. 1;
and Page 178, Sect. 1, &c.

Other reformed churches also have days ascribed to saints as well as we; as it may appear by these words of Bullinger writing upon the xiv. to the Rom.: “In the ^{Bullinger.} ancient writers, as Eusebius and Augustine, thou mayest find certain memorials appointed to certain holy men, but after another manner, not much differing from ours which we as yet retain in our church of Tigurie; for we celebrate the nativity of Christ, his circumcision, resurrection, and ascension, the coming of the Holy Ghost, the feasts also of the Virgin Mary, John Baptist, Magdalene, Stephen, and the other apostles; yet not condemning those which observe none, but only the sabbath-day. For, perusing old monuments, we find that this hath always been left free to the churches, that every one should follow that in these things that should be best and most ³convenient⁴.”

Observing of holy-days in other reformed churches.

[² Ἐμοὶ δὲ φαίνεται, ὅτι ὥσπερ ἄλλα πολλὰ κατὰ χώρας συνήθειαν ἔλαβεν, οὕτω καὶ ἡ τοῦ πάσχα ἑορτὴ παρ’ ἐκάστοις ἐκ συνηθείας τινὸς, ἰδιόζουσιν ἔσχε τὴν παρατήρησιν, διὰ τὸν μηδὲνα τῶν ἀποστόλων, ὡς ἔφην, μηδενὶ νενομοθετηκέναι περὶ αὐτῆς· κ.τ.λ.—Id. ibid.]

[³ Most best and convenient, Def. A. and B.]

[⁴ Apud veteres quidem, Eusebium in primis et Augustinum, invenias memorias quasdam piis quibusdam institutas fuisse hominibus, sed longe alia ratione ac modo, nimirum parum differente a nostro ritu, quo adhuc in ecclesia nostra Tigurina, nativitatis, circumcisionis, resurrectionis et ascensionis Domini, missionisque sancti Spiritus, deiparæ virginis, Joannis Baptistæ, Magdalenæ, Stephani, days.

Saints'
Bucer¹.

M. Bucer, in his epistle to Master Alasco, speaking of holy-days, saith that "in the scriptures there is no express commandment of them: it is gathered notwithstanding," saith he, "from the example of the old people, that they are profitable for us, to the increase of godliness; which thing also experience proveth²."

Observing of days considered four ways.

To be short, Illyricus, writing upon the fourth to the Galat., maketh this division of observing days and times:

1. "The first is natural; as of summer, spring-time, winter, &c., time of planting, time of sowing, time of reaping, &c.
2. The second is civil.
3. The third, ecclesiastical; as the sabbath-day, and other days, wherein is celebrated the memory of the chief histories or acts of Christ, which be profitable for the instruction of the simple, that they may the better remember when the Lord was born, when he suffered, when he ascended up into heaven, and be further taught in the same.
4. The fourth, superstitious; when we put a necessity, worshipping, merit, or righteousness, in the observing of time; and this kind of observing days and times is only forbidden in this place³."

Thus you see, by the judgments of all these learned et apostolorum Domini festa celebramus, neminem interim eorum damnantes, qui post dominicam, aliam nesciunt festivitatem. Videmus enim veterum monumenta perlustrantes liberum hoc ecclesiis semper fuisse, ut quæque quod hisce in rebus minutilis videretur optimum et ad pietatem conservandam commodissimum, sequeretur.—H. Bullinger. Comm. in Omn. Apost. Epist. Tigur. 1539. In Rom. cap. xiv. p. 108.]

[¹ Bucer's opinion also, Answ. 2.]

[² For there is no express commandment by word in the holy scriptures of these things [churches and holy-days]: it is gathered &c.—Bucer to Alasco at the end of A briefe examination for the tyme, &c. Lond. Jugge. fol. D 1.]

[³ Est vero quadruplex observatio temporum, physica, civilis, ecclesiastica, et superstitiosa. Physica ut æstatis, veris, hyemis, &c. cum qua sunt conjuncti motus stellarum: quæ est necessaria ad multa rustica, politica et æconomica, ... ecclesiastica, quæ etiam decoro et bono ordini servit, quo facit quoque dies dominica et tempora præcipuarum historiarum, aut factorum Christi, quæ prosunt ad ædificationem rudium, ut rectius meminerint, quando sit Dominus natus, passus, et quando in cælum ascenderit, ac de singulis illis historiis suo tempore tanto commodius instituantur, ... Postrema est superstitiosa, cum ponimus necessitatem, cultum, meritum, aut justitiam in observatione temporum: ... Hanc ultimam ac superstitiosam damnat hic apostolus, non illas tres priores.—Nov. Test. cum Gloss. Comp. M. Flac. Illyr. Basil. 1570. Galat. cap. iv. p. 399.]

men, that days ascribed unto⁴ saints is no such matter as ought to make men separate themselves from the church, and abstain from allowing by subscription so worthy and godly a book as the book of common prayer is, much less to make a schism in the church for the same. Saints' days.

T. C. Page 122, Sect. 2 and 3.

As touching M. Bucer's, M. Bullinger's, and Illyricus' allowance of them, if they mean such a celebration of them as that in those days the people may be assembled, and those parts of the scriptures, which concern them whose remembrance is solemnized, read and expounded, and yet men not debarred after from their daily works, it is so much the less matter; if otherwise, that good leave they give the churches to dissent from them in that point, I do take it granted unto me, being, by the grace of God, one of the church.

Although as touching M. Bullinger, it is to be observed, since the time that he wrote that upon the Romans, there are about 35. years, sithence which time, although he hold still that the feasts kept⁵ unto the Lord,

*Confessio Ecclesiae Tigur. et aliorum Eccles. cap.
24.*

as of the Nativity, Easter, and Pentecost, dedicated unto the Lord may be kept, yet he denieth flatly that it is lawful to keep holy the days of the apostles; as it appeareth in the confession of the Tigurine church joined with others⁶.

JO. WHITGIFT.

How perfect an answer this is to these learned men's authorities, let the learned reader judge. You are not a church, but a member of the church; and therefore, seeing the matter is such as the church may take an order in, you ought to submit yourself to the determination of that church in such matters, whereof you are a member.

What M. Bullinger hath in any other place consented unto I know not, but certain it is that these be his own words, and that when he writ them he was of the same opinion that we are at this time in this church of England⁷.

[⁴ To, Answ.]

[⁵ Dedicated, Repl. 2; which omits dedicated unto the Lord in the next lines.]

[⁶ Confess. Fid. Christ. cap. xxiv. in Corp. et Syntag. Confess. Fid. Genev. 1654. p. 54. See before, page 568, note 2.]

[⁷ Cartwright rejoins: "if the learned reader look the later edition of M. Bullinger's commentary upon the Romans, he may, peradventure, find his former judgment alleged by the D. corrected." He goes on to cite Musculus and bishop Hooper as decidedly condemning saints' days [Conf. Wölg. Muscul. Loc. Comm. Theolog. Basil. 1599. De Præc. Decalog. Præc. iv. p. 75; Bp. Hooper's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Declarat. of Commandments, Comm. iv. Vol. I. p. 347].—The Rest of Sec. Repl. pp. 193, 9.]

Saints'
days.

Chapter ii. The Seventh Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 177, Sect. 2.

Calvin¹.

Calvin, in like manner writing upon the fourth to the Galatians, doth not disallow this kind of observing days: his words be these: "When as holiness is attributed to days, when as one day is discerned from another for religion' sake, when days are made a piece of divine worship, then days are wickedly observed. &c. But, when we have a difference of days, laying no burden of necessity on men's consciences, we make no difference of days, as though one were more holy than another, we put no religion in them, nor worshipping of God, but only we observe them for order and concord' sake; so that the observing of days with us is free, and without all superstition²." And again upon the ii. to the Coloss.: "But some will say that we as yet have some kind of observing days: I answer that we observe them not as though there were any religion in them, or as though it were not then lawful to labour, but we have a respect of policy and orders, not of days³." And in his Institutions, upon the fourth commandment: "Neither do I so speak of the seventh day, that I would bind the church only unto it; for I do not condemn those churches which have other solemn days to meet in; so that they be void of superstition, which shall be if they be ordained only for the observing of discipline and order⁴."

[¹ Calvin's opinion thereof, Answ. 2.]

[² Quando itaque diebus per se tribuitur propria sanctitas, quando discernitur dies a die religionis causa, quando feriæ pars divini cultus esse censentur: tum dies perperam observantur. &c. nos hodie quum habemus dierum discrimen, non induimus necessitatis laqueum conscientiis, non discernimus dies, quasi alius alio sit sanctior, non constituimus illic religionem et cultum Dei: sed tantum ordini et concordie consulimus. Ita libera est apud nos, et omni superstitione pura observatio.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. ad Galat. cap. iv. 10. Tom. VII. p. 303.]

[³ Atqui, dicet quispiam, nos adhuc retinemus aliquam dierum observationem. Respondeo, nos dies nequaquam servare, quasi in feriis aliqua sit religio, aut quasi fas non sit tunc laborare: sed respectum haberi politice et ordinis, non dierum.—Id. Comm. in Epist. ad Coloss. cap. ii. 16. pp. 395, 6.]

[⁴ Neque sic tamen septenarium numerum moror, ut ejus servituti ecclesiam astringam: neque enim ecclesias damnavero, quæ alios conventibus suis solennes dies habeant, modo a superstitione absint. Quod erit, si ad solam observationem discipline et ordinis bene compositi referantur.—Id. Inst. Lib. II. cap. viii. 34. Præcept. Quart. Tom. IX. p. 100.]

T. C. Page 122, Sect. 4.

Saints'
days.

As for M. Calvin, as the practice of him and the church where he lived, was and is, to admit no one holy-day besides the Lord's day, so can it not be shewed out of any part of his works (as I think) that he approved those holy-days which are now in question. He saith, indeed, in his Institution, that he will not condemn those churches which use them; no more do we the church of England, neither in this nor in other things which are meet to be reformed. For it is one thing to mislike, another thing to condemn; and it is one thing to condemn something in the church, and another to condemn⁵ the church for it. And as for the places cited out of the epistle⁶ to the Galatians and Colossians, there is no mention of any holy-days either to saints, or to any other, and it appeareth also that he defendeth not other churches but the church of Geneva, and answereth not to those which object against keeping⁷ of saints' days or any holy-days (as they are called) besides the Lord's day, but against those which would not have the Lord's day kept still as a day of rest from bodily labour; as it may appear both by his place upon the Colossians, and especially in that which is alleged out of his Institutions. And that he meaneth nothing less than such holy-days as you take upon you to defend, it may appear first in the place of the Colossians, where he saith that the days of rest which are used of them are used for policy' sake. Now it is well known that, as it is policy and a way to preserve the estate of things, and to keep them in a good continuance and success, that as well the beasts, as the men which labour six days, should rest the seventh; so it tendeth to no policy nor wealth of the people, or preservation of good order, that there should be so many days wherein men should cease from work, being a thing which breedeth idleness and consequently poverty, besides other disorders and vices, which always go in company with idleness. And in the place of his Institutions he declareth himself yet more plainly when he saith that those odd holy-days then are, without superstition "when they be ordained only for the observing of discipline and order;" whereby he giveth to understand that he would have them no further holy-days than for the time which is bestowed in the exercise of the discipline and order of the church, and that for the rest they should be altogether as other days, free to be laboured in. And so it appeareth that the holy-days ascribed unto⁸ saints by the service-book is a just cause why a man cannot safely, without exception, subscribe unto the service-book⁹.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Whatsoever M. Calvin's practice was in the church of Geneva, yet in these places doth his judgment evidently appear; neither doth a man always use that himself which he

[⁵ Another thing to condemn, Repl. 1 and 2.][⁶ Epistles, Repl. 1 and 2.][⁷ Against the keeping, Repl. 1, 2, and Def. A.][⁸ To, Repl. 1 and 2.][⁹ Repl. 2 omits book.]

Saints'
days.

alloweth in another; for there may be circumstances to make that commendable in one place that is not so in another.

He that condemneth the thing as unlawful must also condemn the churches that use the same, though not wholly, yet in that point. Forasmuch therefore as M. Calvin did not condemn other churches for observing such days, it is a manifest argument that he condemneth not the observing of those days in those churches. Indeed, "it is one thing to mislike, and another thing to condemn;" but he that maketh such a stir in the church for these matters as you do, and that so disorderly, cannot be said only "to mislike," but also "to condemn."

Calv. in iv.
Gal.

The place of M. Calvin, out of the epistle to the Galat. is not meant only of the Lord's day, but of other days also observed in other reformed churches; and in that place he maketh a general answer as it were for them all; as it is soon perceived by such as will read that place. He also, that shall peruse his words upon the second chapter to the Colossians, shall find the like sense in them. In that he saith they be used for order and policy, we do not dissent from him, but think so in like manner; howbeit we understand as he doth ecclesiastical order and policy; for, in the words that go before the place to the Galatians, he saith that "the observing of days doth also pertain ad regimen ecclesiæ: to the government of the church¹." What better order and policy can there be than to have certain days appointed wherein the people may rest from bodily labour, to labour spiritually, to hear the word of God, &c., which M. Calvin calleth order and policy, and not the external rest of the sabbath-day, which is a commandment of God, and no constitution of the church; neither hath the church any respect to worldly policy in appointing of holy-days, but to ecclesiastical policy, which consisteth in hearing the word, ministering the sacraments, public prayers, and other such-like godly actions?

The place in his Institutions convince all your shifting conjectures of mere folly; for therein he plainly declareth his allowing in other churches of more holy-days than the Sunday, which you have denied to be his opinion in the former two places. I have told you what he meaneth by discipline and order or policy; whereby he giveth to understand nothing less than that which you would conclude, being but your own device to serve for a poor shift at a need. And, although the matter is not great whether they labour or no, yet the law of the prince and the order of the church is to be observed. And so it appeareth that there is no reasonable cause as yet proved why you ought not to subscribe to the service-book.

[¹ Jam observatio civilis, tam agriculturæ, quam politiæ et œconomix servit. ad ecclesiæ quoque regimen extenditur.—Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. ad Galat. cap. iv. 10. Tom. VII. p. 303.]

Saints' days.

Chapter ii. The Eighth Division.

Answer to the Admonition, Page 82, Sect. 1, 2.

In the end you add: "patched if not altogether, yet the greatest piece, out of the pope's portuis."

To this I answer briefly, it maketh no matter of whom it was invented, in what book it is contained; so that it be good and profitable, and consonant to God's word. Well saith Ambrose: *Omne verum a quocunque dicitur a Spiritu sancto est*²: "All truth, of whomsoever it is spoken, is of the Holy Ghost."

A notable saying of Ambrose³.

T. C. Page 123, Lin. 6.

Now, whereas M. Doctor saith, "it maketh no matter whether these things be taken out of the portuis, so they be good, &c.;" I have proved first they are not good, then, if they were, yet being not necessary, and abused horribly by the papists, other being as good and better than they, ought not to remain in the church.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Your reasons be not sufficient to prove them not to be good: the abuse hath not been such but that, it being removed, the thing may still remain as profitable and convenient: the judgment of the church in determining what is best and most fittest in matters of order, policy, and government (not being against the word of God), is to be preferred before any private man's opinion and imagination.

The judgment of the church is to be preferred to private men's judgment.

[² Ambros. Op. Par. 1636-90. Comm. in Epist. ad Corinth. prim. cap. xii. v. 3. Tom. II. Append. col. 150. See before, page 465, note 2.]

[³ This is inserted from Answ. 2.]

Saints'
days.

Chapter ii. The Ninth Division.

T. C. Page 123, Lin. 10.

And as for Ambrose saying, "All truth, of whomsoever it be said, is of the Holy Ghost," if I were disposed to move questions, I could demand of him which careth not of whom he have the truth, so he have it, what our Saviour Christ meant to refuse the testimony of devils Mark i. 24.¹ when they gave a clear testimony that he was the Son of God Luke iv. 41.¹ and the Holy One: and what St Paul meant to be angry, Acts xvi. 17.¹ and to take it so grievously, that the pythoness said he and his companion were the servants of the high God, which preached unto them the way of salvation. Here was truth, and yet rejected; and I would know whether M. Doctor would say that these spake by the Spirit of God. Thus, whilst without all judgment he snatcheth here a sentence, and there another, out of the doctors, and that of the worst, as if a man should of purpose choose out the dross and leave the silver, within a while he will make no great difference, not only between the prophets and apostles and profane writers, as Aristotle and Plato, but not between them and those which² speak not by the conduit and leading of the Holy Ghost, but by the violent thrusting of the wicked spirit.

JO. WHITGIFT.

Christ liked not the truth being uttered of the devil, because he spake it of an evil meaning; but he liked very well the same testimony of truth afterwards uttered by Peter sincerely, Matt. xvi. Mark viii. Neither did he mislike the words because they were abused by the devil before. But I will leave devils, and speak of men, of whom I think Ambrose meant; although the truth is truth, of whomsoever it is uttered; but, to answer for Ambrose, he hath said nothing in that sentence which may not be justified.

Calvin. M. Calvin (upon these words, 1 Corinth. xii.: "And no man can say that Jesus is the Lord, but by the Holy Ghost") saith thus: "It may be demanded whether the wicked have the Spirit of God, seeing they sometime testify plainly and well of Christ: I answer that there is no doubt but that they have, so much as concerneth that effect; but it is another thing to have the gift of regeneration, than to have the gift of bare understanding, wherewith Judas was endued when he preached the gospel³."

[¹ The second reference and the verses of the others are inserted from Repl. 2: Repl. 1 has Mark. iv.]

[² Between them which, Repl. 2.]

[³ Quæritur hic, quum impii præclare interdum de Christo et splendide disse-

M. Martyr also, upon the same words, after he hath recited the opinions of other, maketh this resolution: "But, when I weigh this matter with myself, I perceive that the apostle here doth speak, not of the Spirit which doth regenerate, or of that grace which justifieth, but of the gifts which are freely given, which may happen as well to the good as to the evil. Therefore I think that Paul spake simply, that he might declare that, by what means soever we speak well of Christ, it is of the Holy Ghost, of whom cometh all truth; as all untruth proceedeth of the devil, who is the father of lies⁴." You see therefore that Ambrose is not of this judgment alone, and that his saying is very true.

Saints'
 days.
 P. Martyr.

Omne verum a Spiritu sancto est.

The doctors that I have used in this cause be Jerome and Augustine, which be not the worst, but comparable with the best. I have rehearsed out of them whole sentences, and perfite, the which you are not able to answer: the rest of your opprobrious words, wherewith you conclude this question of holy-days, I leave for other to consider of, as notes of your spirit.

And, to the intent that the reader may understand that it was not for nought that you set not down my book together with your Reply, I will here set down such portions of my book touching this matter as you have not answered unto, but closely passed over, not thinking that any man should have espied your lack of ability to answer them.

Chapter ii. The Tenth Division.

Admonition.

They should first prove . . . that holy-days ascribed to saints, prescript services for them, &c., are agreeable to the written word of the Almighty⁵.

rant, an habeant Dei Spiritum. Respondeo, eos proculdubio habere, quod ad effectum illum spectat: sed aliud est donum regenerationis, aliud donum nudæ intelligentiæ, qua Judas quoque præditus fuit quum evangelium prædicaret.— Calvin. Op. Amst. 1667-71. Comm. in Epist. 1. ad Corinth. cap. xii. 3. Tom. VII.
 p. 186.]

[⁴ Cæterum cum ego rem mecum expendo, sermonem hic ab apostolo video institutum esse non de regenerante Spiritu, aut gratia justificante, verum de charismatibus gratuito concessis, quæ tam bonis quam malis obvenire possunt.
 Ideo Paulum simpliciter loquutum existimo, ut ostenderet, quocunque modo bene de Christo loquamur, id esse a Spiritu sancto, a quo est omne verum, quemadmodum omne mendacium a diabolo, qui pater est mendacii.—P. Martyr. Comm.
 in 1. Epist. ad Corinth. Tigur. 1572. cap. xii. v. 3. fol. 171. 2.]

[⁵ See before, page 513, note 5.]

Answer to the Admonition, Page 153, Sect. 4;
and Page 154, Sect. 1.

Holy-days¹.

“Holy-days ascribed to saints,” wherein not the saints but God is honoured and the people edified, by reading and hearing such stories and places of scripture as pertain to the martyrdom, calling, and function of such saints, or any other thing mentioned of them in scripture, must needs be according to God’s word. For to honour God, to worship him, to be edified by the stories and examples of saints out of the scripture, cannot be but consonant to the scripture. The prescript service for them is all taken out of God’s word, and not one piece thereof but it is most consonant unto the same. If there be any that is repugnant, set it down that we may understand it.

Augustine.

I told you before that, touching the days and times and other ceremonies, the church hath authority to determine what is most convenient, as it hath done from time to time. St August., in his epistle ad Janu., in the place before of me recited, saith that “the passion of Christ, his resurrection, his ascension, and the day of the coming of the Holy Ghost, (which we commonly call Whitsuntide) is celebrated, not by any commandment written, but by the determination of the church².” And it is the judgment of all learned writers that the church hath authority in these things; so that nothing be done against the word of God. But of this I have spoken partly before, and intend to speak more largely thereof in the place following, where you again make mention of it.

Admonition.

In this book days are ascribed unto saints, and kept holy with fasts on their evens, and prescript service appointed for them; which, beside that they are of many superstitiously kept and observed, and³ also contrary to the commandment⁴ of God: “Six days thou shalt labour⁴,” and therefore we, for the superstition that is put in them, dare not subscribe to allow them.

¹ Exod. xx. 9.
Ecc. xxiii.
12.
Deut. v. 13.
Esa. i. 10,
13, 14.
Lev. xxiii.
3.
² Est. i. 13.
Rom. xiv.
6.
³ Ga. iv. 10,
11.

[¹ This is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[² August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Inq. Januar. Lib. 1. seu Epist. liv. cap. i. l. Tom. II. col. 124. See Vol. I. page 230, note 4.]

[³ Are, Adm.] [⁴ Shalt thou labour, Adm.]

[⁵ Rom. xvi. 6. Adm.]

Answer to the Admonition, Page 173, Sect. 2; and Page 174, 175; and Page 176, Sect. 1, 2.

[This is contained in your first reason, and there answered.]⁶ Your collection hangeth not together; for how followeth this? These holy-days be superstitiously observed of some; therefore you may not allow them. Why should other men's superstition hinder you from lawfully using a lawful thing? The sabbath-day is superstitiously used of some; so is the church, so is the creed, and the Lord's prayer, and many things else; and yet I hope you will subscribe to them. You heap up a number of places in the margin to prove that which no man doubteth of, that is, this portion of the commandment: "Six days shalt thou labour, &c.;" the meaning of which words is this, that, seeing God hath permitted unto us six days to do our own works in, we ought the seventh day wholly to serve him⁷.

Abuse of things doth not condemn the things.

Every man hath not bodily labour to do, but may serve God as well in these six days as in the seventh. And certainly he doth not by any means break this commandment, which abstaineth in any of these six days from bodily labour to serve God. For this is the commandment: "Remember that thou keep holy the sabbath-day;" as for this: "Six days thou shalt work," is no commandment, but tendeth rather to the constitution of the sabbath than to the prohibiting of rest in any other day appointed to the service of God; and it is as much as if he should say, "Six days thou mayest work;" and so do some translate the Hebrew word.

The place alleged out of the first of Esay is far from the purpose; there is not one word there spoken of any holy-days dedicate⁸ to saints, but only the Lord signifieth that their sacrifices and feast-days were not acceptable unto⁹ him, because they were done in hypocrisy, and without faith; so that he reproveth modum not factum, their manner of sacrificing, that is, their hypocritical

Esay condemneth the manner of sacrificing¹⁰.

[⁶ This is inserted from Answ.]

[⁷ Here in Answ. comes in the portion inserted before, page 572.]

[⁸ Dedicated, Answ.]

[⁹ To, Answ.]

[¹⁰ Answ. 2 goes on and not the deed.]

kind of worshipping him [and not the worship or the deed done.]¹

Vain quotations³.

In the second of Esdras i.², in the place by you quoted, I see not one word that may serve for your purpose: the words you quote be these: "I have led you through the sea, and have given you a sure way since the beginning; I gave you Moses for a guide, and Aaron for a priest."

In the xiv. to the Ro., the apostle speaketh nothing of our holy-days, but of such as were observed among the Jews and abrogated by the coming of Christ. And yet in that place the apostle exhorteth that we which be strong should not despise them that are weak, nor condemn them, though they use not the christian liberty in days and meats.

Augustine³.

That in the fourth to the Galat.: "Ye⁴ observe days, months, and times, and years, &c.," St Augustine, ad Januar. Episto. 119, expoundeth on this sort: *Eos inculpat qui dicunt, Non proficiscar, . . . quia posterus dies est, aut quia luna sic fertur; vel, Proficiscar ut prospera cedant, quia ita se habet positio siderum: Non agam hoc mense commercium, quia illa stella mihi agit mensem; vel, Agam, quia suscepit mensem*⁵. ["The apostle blameth those which say, This day I will not travel or journey, for that the day is unlucky and unfortunate, or for that the moon is in this or that course; or, This day I will not proceed my purposed journey, that my affairs may happily come to pass, because that the planets do so much import and foreshew. Or, I will not in this month traffic, because that this or that star and planet governeth the month; or, I will buy and sell in this month, because it doth govern the same."]⁶ I know there be other that do otherwise expound that place (and that truly), even as they do also that in the xiv. to the Rom., of certain Jewish feasts, as sabbaths, new moons, the feasts of tabernacles, the year of jubilee, and such like, abrogated by the gospel, and yet superstitiously observed of some. But these places can by

[¹ The last eight words are introduced from Answ. 2.]

[² In the 2 Esdras i., Answ.]

[³ These notes are not in Answ.]

[⁴ You, Answ. 2.]

[⁵ Eos enim culpat &c.—August. Op. Par. 1679-1700. Ad Inq. Januar. Lib. II. seu Epist. lv. cap. vii. 13. Tom. II. col. 133.]

[⁶ This translation is introduced from Answ. 2.]

no means be understood of the days observed by us, and called by the names of saints' days; for they were ordained since the writing of this epistle.

And, that you may understand the difference betwixt the festival days observed of the papists, and the days allowed now in this church, it is to be considered, first, that their saints' days were appointed for the honouring and worshipping of the saints, by whose names they were called; ours be ordained for the honouring of God, for public prayer, and edifying the people by reading the scriptures, and preaching⁸.

Difference betwixt the papists' holydays and ours.

Saints 7.

2. The papists in their saints' days prayed unto the saints: we only pray unto God in Christ's name.

3. They had all things done in a strange tongue without any edifying at all: we have the prayers and the scriptures read in a tongue known, which cannot be without great commodity to the hearers.

4. To be short, they in observing their days think they merit thereby something at God's hands: we in observing our days are taught far otherwise.

The church even from the beginning hath observed such feasts; as it may appear in good writers.

⁹Page 179, Sect. 1.

Touching fasting on the evens of such feasts, or rather abstaining from flesh, you know it is not for religion, but for policy, and as I think the same is protested in that act, where such kind of abstaining is established¹⁰; and therefore these be but slender quarrels picked to disallow such a book¹¹.

JO. WHITGIFT.

All this have you overskipped: for what cause you know best yourself.

[⁷ This word is inserted from Answ. 2.]

[⁸ Here in Answ. comes the sentence printed before, page 574.]

[⁹ Def. B. prefixes here T. C.]

[¹⁰ Statutes at large, Lond. 1763, &c. Vol. II, pp. 545, 7. Conf. Bp. Jewel's Works, Park. Soc. Edit. Vol. IV. pp. 1141, 2.]

[¹¹ This paragraph follows in Answ. those printed page 579-81, 583-5, 6.]

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY

Los Angeles

This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

DL JUN 27 1983
REC'D LD-URC

JUL 13 1983

A MAY 04 1990
REC'D AD-URC

MAR 27 1990

AC NOV 04 1991
HRL-LD
REC'D LD-URC
DEC 14 1993

AC MAY 05 1997

REC'D YRL AUG 24 '00

3 1158 00863 9550

mm

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

AA 001 185 808 1

